GREAT LAKES SEAWAY—STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, we of the Middle West had hoped that long before this the Senate and, yes, the House of Representatives would have before them, on the basis of favorable committee reports, legislation to complete the long-deferred Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway. Unfortunately, this has not occurred because, I regret to say, the administration has lagged completely in its obligations to the American people. I ask unanimous consent that the text of a statement which I have prepared regarding this matter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS BY SENATOR ALEXANDER WILEY, CHAIRMAN, IN EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, OF SEAWAY SUBCOMMITTEE

LET THE ADMINISTRATION ACT AND QUIT STALLING ON SEAWAY LEGISLATION

I challenge the administration to get busy in the fight for the Great Lakes seaway. The people of the Middle West are sore and sick about the continued disgraceful stalling by the administration on seaway legislation in the Eighty-first Congress. For 5 months now, since the start of the Congress, we have patiently awaited the green light from the administration to push hard for a new bill, but the administration, which is supposedly committed to the seaway, has been asleep at the switch. It has given the seaway priority. It has ignored seaway inquiries and requests. It has always given token support and lip service to the seaway, but in the 5 months of my pleading for action and support about all that the administration has done is to yawn and then go back to sleep.

FULL DEMOCRATIC SUPPORT NECESSARY

Since the Democrats control both Houses of the Congress, it was apparent to the Republican minority that we must get Democratic support and cosponsorship in the Congress as well as heavy support in the Government agencies (even before we reintroduce a seaway bill) if this bill were to have any chance of success. We Republicans were not interested merely in token introduction of a seaway bill and then allowing it to die for lack of support. We are sick and disgusted over those who pay lip service to the seaway and yet are unwilling to lift a hand for it.

LIMITED SUCCESS THIS SESSION POSSIBLE

It has become obvious that it is too late in the first session to expect more than favorable action by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on a seaway bill, once it is introduced on the Senate side. We will, however, have an up-hill fight to attain even that limited objective. Of course, in spite of the administration's stalling, we will be fighting hard for passage of the seaway bill in both Houses of the Congress during the second session which will presumably open next January. The people of the Middle West and of the Nation should however be informed that the administration has done a miserable job of stalling and subterfuge thus far. I use these words very advisedly. The seaway has never been a partisan matter, but administration tactics have left me no alternative but to denounce their partisan approach.

FAILURE TO INVESTIGATE IRON-ORE SHORTAGE

As a vital part of the seaway study, I suggested months ago to the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, which is supposed to be investigating shortage of national resources, that it investigate the critical subject of the exhaustion of the Mesabi Iron Range (one of the principal reasons why we must get the seaway enacted). After weeks of delay, that committee responded by a silly acknowledgment which said nothing, meant nothing, and did nothing.

STATE DEPARTMENT'S PUSSYFOOTING

I have urged the State Department repeatedly to mobilize the same sort of force and vigor that it has mobilized for the North Atlantic Pact and other administration pet projects in support of the seaway bill. We all recognize the importance of world collective security. But the people of Wisconsin also recognize that we are pumping hundreds of millions of dollars overseas to build hydroelectric and similar projects, while the administration has not lifted so much as a pinkie to have this Congress support a self-liquidating loan for the completion of this long-deferred Great Lakes seaway and power project.

TRUMAN'S DIRECTIVES SABOTAGED BY UNDERLINGS

President Truman has repeatedly indicated his full support of the seaway and I have no criticism whatsoever of him on this point. However, his directives have been sabotaged by the indifference, the lethargy, the apathy, of his alleged supporters who perpetually protest that they are "too busy" with other things to take up the seaway. I have held conference after conference in my office and on the Senate floor in trying to lay plans for the seaway battle, but the administration has continued to yawn and yawn. I call upon the administration, therefore and challenge it to fulfill its promise and to start to get busy on this vital front. The Middle West refuses to be further hoodwinked and double-crossed by administration alibis and excuses.

OLEOMARGARINE PRICES—EDITORIAL FROM CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer, of Monday, May 16, 1949, by John C. Davis, entitled "Added Color Raises Price."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDED COLOR RAISES PRICE—SOME FACTS PICKED AT RANDOM ON THE MARGARINE-BUTTER TANGLE

(By John C. Davis)

If and when the margarine interests get the right to color their product yellow, the housewife in whose name the lawmakers will have granted the privilege will find that it isn't only the vegetable table spread that glistens. She will find that her money, in the coffers of the companies, will have a golden glow.

That the margarine makers will extract a rather handsome pound of flesh from the pocketbook is indicated in a recent survey made of comparative retail prices of the yellow-colored and uncolored product in nine cities in as many States. The difference in price between the artificially colored and uncolored product was 21.8 cents a pound. Subtracting the 10-cent Federal tax and the 1-cent cost of wrapping and packaging in quarter pounds leaves 10.8 cents the housewife is paying for the privilege of having the manufacturer squeeze the yellow compound into the fat.

PAY ADDITIONAL

Considering that the yellow color adds nothing to the nutritional value of the product and that the manufacturing cost of adding the color in volume production runs 30 cents a ton, the 10.8 cents additional the housewife will pay for the colored product is a handsome slice. Russell Fifer, secretary of the American Butter Institute, concedes that this spread will probably be reduced as soon as the margarine people get the swing of mass production—and recover some of the expenditure made in waging the legislative battle to get the yellow-coloring privilege.

There is, and always has been, a foreign element in this butter-margarine battle little appreciated by the general public. It is the use of imported vegetable fats in the manufacture of margarine. Prior to the war about 90 percent of the fat used in making the product was imported coconut oil. When the war cut off this supply the manufacturers turned to domestic cottonseed and soybean oils. With the war over, the question arises as to whether or not the imported oil will again replace the domestic product. Manufacturers waging the battle to color their product in the traditional hue of butter say not.

Whether or not the cheaper coconut oil will replace the domestic cottonseed and soybean oil is a matter of opinion, but a recent development in the manufacturing ranks may have some bearing on the issue.

Recently, Lever Bros., American subsidiary of Unilever, Ltd., London, England, purchased the Jelke Co. of New Jersey. Jelke has long been a leader in the margarine field and the Lever move is a step toward advancing the Unilever margarine operations in the United States. That Unilever should eye the American market, the world's best, is natural. Few folks realize it, but the British outfit is the world's largest in the margarine field, making today about 40 percent of the world's total production. It goes without saying that they are using the cheap coconut oil in their production.

A naive observer viewing the movement of both of Unilever's giant feet into Uncle Sam's puddle would be pardoned for inquiring whether the company intended the use of coconut oil in the product manufactured to supply our market.

ANOTHER PHASE

There is another phase of this margarine-butter battle recently given a trial run on which the public should know the facts. It is the charge by the butter people that if margarine manufacturers are given the right to color their product in perfect imitation of butter—it will be sold to the public as butter. This is a charge that the margarine people deny and point out that their proposed law giving them the right to color, both in the National Congress and various State legislatures, strictly prohibits such practice.

The State of Arkansas has enacted such a law. A recent survey was made of 100 restaurants in 9 cities in that State and the record, as the late Al Smith was wont to point out, is revealing. In the 100 eating places, not one stated that it was serving margarine. In 66 of the 100 margarine was served as butter and 6 of the 66 stated in their menus that butter was being served.

The above facts were gathered by Russell Fifer and could be attacked as biased and not unprejudiced. They have been so attacked—but, more interesting to the public is the fact that their truth was not challenged.

There is a side light to the margarine-butter battle in which the latter is struggling to hold exclusive right to its traditional yellow color. Recently, Lever Bros. won a 10-year court battle to the exclusive right to the color red in a cake of soap. The winning argument was that their use of red was traditional—just how traditional is butter's right to the color of yellow?

Nn one argues the right of margarine to be freed from the discriminatory State and Federal taxes that have been levied against it through the years. But, as shown above, there is at least room for a difference of opinion as to whether it should be given the right to butter's traditional yellow. It could, as it seems to have done in Arkansas, lead to some public fraud.

The real issue, however, one with large economic implications to the farmers of the United States of America, is the question of whether or not domestic oils would continue as the margarine base. Only the manufacturers know whether they plan to replace with imported coconut oil. A direct answer, accompanied by convincing assurances, would go far toward clearing the muddy skies in this battle of table fats for the housewives' gold.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I rise to present a series of five amendments to the pending bill, Senate bill 1843. At the outset, let me make perfectly clear my position on this entire matter of unification of the armed services. I am for it, and I have been for it ever since it came to a head back in 1944.

When the National Security Act of 1947 was enacted I felt that it fell far short of the mark, but I was content to give it a chance. From the day it became law I watched its operation with intense interest. It soon became painfully apparent that this compromise with reality was not working. We need look back only to the situation as it existed in April of last year to confirm the truth of that statement, for at that time public dissatisfaction with the results of this law was clearly evident in the daily comments of the press and radio. At that time the situation was deteriorating so rapidly that on April 20, 1948, I introduced a bill, Senate bill 2523, which proposed to amend the 1947 act by greatly strengthening the powers of the Secretary of Defense and clarifying his authority and responsibility.

That bill lay in committee without action for the remainder of the session. In the meantime our progress toward unification continued to flounder along under the completely unworkable provisions of the 1947 act.

Fortunately for the Nation, we had as our first Secretary of Defense a man with the most remarkable ability, as well as an incomparable sense of public duty. But even his matchless talents could not forge into this instrument the precision and the strength necessary to effect the conversion of our sprawling military establishment into a machine geared to cope with the military realities of a modern world.

In speaking of the late Secretary of Defense, Mr. President, I feel that today the United States Senate is engaged in the solemn task of erecting a great monument to him. That monument should be the perfecting on the floor of the United States Senate of a unification bill which will carry out the hopes and aspirations of a great fallen leader.

There is no question about the fact that the Nation is greatly shocked and grieved, from coast to coast, over the tragic loss of James Forrestal. There is nothing I can add by way of tribute to the beautiful and sincere words which were spoken by a group of my colleagues on the floor of the Senate yesterday. But in memory of James Forrestal I would put in the RECORD today a reassertion of his faith in freedom, because as a member of the Armed Services Committee time and again I have seen James Forrestal fight for the safeguards of freedom and for the principles of democracy which make this Nation strong.

I recall one instance which I think is the most fitting tribute I can pay to the statesmanship of James Forrestal. Many months ago, James Forrestal appeared before an executive session of the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate. There were present in the room with him all the leaders of the Military Establishment. Our committee was confronted with a combination of recommendations on the part of those military leaders for a military budget which added up to a little more than $21,000,000,000. At that time we were considering a national budget of approximately $40,000,000,000. I shall never forget either the expression on James Forrestal's face or the fearless words of leadership which he spoke on that occasion. After the addition was completed and a member of the committee pointed out that the total amount was more than $21,000,000,000, one of the high military officers in the room expressed the view that although it was more than $21,000,000,000, it would cost us many times $21,000,000,000 if we had to go to war to protect freedom in the world.

James Forrestal, with a clear-eyed look, faced that military official and said "But the paradox of this proposal is that if we proceed to make it a peacetime budget on the basis of your argument that it would cost more than $21,000,000,000 to win a fight for freedom in case of war, I say to you that we would lose freedom here at home while engaged in a fight to preserve freedom in the world."

I think it is due James Forrestal to say today, because so much misinformation is abroad in regard to his position concerning the amount of appropriations for the military budget, that not only on that occasion, but on several other occasions, I heard James Forrestal in executive sessions of the Armed Services Committee make perfectly clear to the leaders of our Military Establishment that any such appropriations as they were recommending, getting up into figures above $20,000,000,000, could not possibly be maintained in the United States for long if at the same time we were to maintain a free economy.

I think it is due Jim Forrestal also to point out that in the presence of the members of the Armed Services Committee on many occasions he warned the officials of the Military Establishment that there rests upon them the obligation to preserve the maximum peacetime economy in the operation of the Military Establishment if we are to preserve a free-enterprise system. Any criticisms or any representations to the effect that James Forrestal believed in an unnecessarily high military budget cannot be squared with his oft-repeated testimony before the Armed Services Committee. He was well aware of the fact that there is a need for the elimination of great waste in the operation of the Military Establishment. I am satisfied in my own thinking, from what I have heard him express from his own lips both before the committee and in private conversation, that James Forrestal knew that there was need for a unification act which would vest in the Secretary of Defense the authority and the power and the jurisdiction to bring about the large savings that can be brought about by any Secretary of Defense who has the will to do so. However, no Secretary of Defense can do the job that needs to be done unless the Congress of the United States has the will and the courage and the statesmanship to give him a unification act which vests in him the authority he needs in order to bring about the great savings which each member of the Armed Services Committee, I am satisfied, knows in his own conscience can be made.

So, Mr. President, in erecting this monument today, as I feel we are, to James Forrestal, I hope it will be a monument that truly honors him. I hope it will be in the form of a unification act which gives to his successor the power and jurisdiction and authority which the Congress of the United States in 1947 should have given to Mr. Forrestal. I mean no unkindness, Mr. President, but I am simply making a statement of what I believe to be a fact, namely, that if we had given the Secretary of Defense in 1947 the unification bill which we should have given him, he would have been able to do the job which I know in his heart and mind he was struggling to do, and he would have completed the job, to his everlasting credit. He would have been of great assistance in protecting the economy of his country; and his tragic death, which we mourn today, perhaps would not have occurred.

So, Mr. President, with those words in regard to a public servant for whom I had the greatest of respect, and in whom I had placed the greatest of confidence, I proceed now to discuss certain amendments which I think essential if we are to enact, in the form of this bill, legislation which will truly unify the armed services and give due honor to James Forrestal.

I referred to the unification bill which I first introduced on April 20, 1948, then known as Senate bill 2523. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that at the time I introduced that bill, I made a brief statement in which I pointed out that the law then on the statute books provided for unification in name only, but not in fact, and that we had not given the Secretary of Defense the authority which he must have if he is to accomplish the purpose of true unification.

It was very typical of James Forrestal, Mr. President, that he called me on the telephone the next day, and said to me, "Wayne"—and, Mr. President, I think I quote him almost verbatim; certainly I quote him according to the best of my recollection—"Wayne, I have read your bill and I have read your speech. I do not wish to give you the impression that I agree with everything in your bill or in your speech, but I think you have performed a valuable service in making the speech and introducing the bill, and I want to say to you that your bill, taken as a whole, is a great improvement over the existing law."

That was the view which James Forrestal expressed to me the day after the introduction of Senate bill 2523.

Mr. President, he had a keen sense of humor. I said to him then, "Well, Jim, I understand that if I come down to the Pentagon Building today, I had better bring a civilian bodyguard with me."

He laughed, and said, "Wayne, if you need a military bodyguard, I will send one to bring you down here, because I want to sit down with you and discuss some of the provisions of your bill."

A few days later that discussion was held. I do not say here today that if James Forrestal were alive he would put his stamp of approval on each and every amendment which I shall submit. Nevertheless I do say that I am satisfied in my own heart, conscience, and mind that I shall not offer a single amendment today which would not carry out at least the objectives and desires of the former Secretary of Defense, insofar as vesting in the Secretary of Defense additional powers which I submit the Tydings bill fails to give to the Secretary of Defense to the degree necessary if we are to have effective unification.

On January 5 of this year, I reintroduced my bill of April 20, 1947, which then became known as Senate bill 108, in the Eighty-first Congress. The bill was referred to the Secretary of Defense for comment, on January 6. Since that time and throughout the hearings on the pending measure, my bill, Senate bill 108, has led a very quiet life, indeed. Why it has never received formal consideration and why, on the other hand, the Senate Committee on Armed Services has gone to such pains to draft a bill which contains so much of the philosophy of Senate bill 108, is scarcely pertinent to this discussion.

What is pertinent, however, is that in our handling of Senate bill 1843, the Tydings bill, we do not repeat the same mistakes which were made in the 1947 act, and that we do not perpetuate the atmosphere of doubt and uncertainty which beclouds the authority and responsibility of our civilian and military leaders, on whose shoulders we place the responsibility for the security of our Nation. Those are the things that are important, Mr. President, in the debate now taking place in the Senate.

I think Senate bill 1843, the Tydings bill, fails in five important and practical instances, and I feel that my amendments to correct those weaknesses deserve the serious consideration of the Senate of the United States.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland yesterday in his opening statement in the debate on the pending bill was entirely right when he said that, although the vote in the Armed Services Committee was 12 to 1 to report the pending bill, nevertheless all 13 members of the committee are of one mind in their belief that greater unification of our armed services is necessary. He was quite right when he pointed out that the junior Senator from Oregon was the dissenter in the committee and refused to vote for the Tydings bill, because of the fact that the junior Senator from Oregon honestly believes that the Tydings bill does not go far enough in unifying the armed services, particularly in respect to the fact that in my opinion, it does not vest in the Secretary of Defense, the administrative authority and jurisdiction he needs, if we are to effectuate true unification.

To begin with, on page 4, line 14, the bill undertakes with considerable apparent zeal to direct the Secretary of Defense to take the necessary steps "to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, health, research, and personnel." This is a splendid directive, Mr. President. If realistically applied in the field of procurement alone, it would contribute immeasurably to the efficiency and the economy of our Military Establishment. But I detect the familiar signs of doubt and compromise, as I pursue the text further; for instead of placing a period after the word "proper" in line 19, the language proceeds to vitiate the good of the preceding provision for the next eight lines contain so many alleged safeguards that the Secretary of Defense again finds himself in a complete quandary as to what the law really means. Instead of giving him a clear and courageous directive we are again placing him in a position where he can be attacked by an overzealous subordinate official.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland, in his opening statement on the pending bill yesterday afternoon, referred to a conversation which he had in an executive session of the Armed Services Committee yesterday morning with the new Secretary of Defense, a distinguished leader in our country, Mr. Louis Johnson. He correctly quoted the Secretary of Defense to the effect that the Secretary of Defense said that unification legislation, on his list, has the top position of priority. In other words, the present Secretary of Defense expressed to the committee yesterday his view, after a few short weeks in the office, that a new unification bill is at the top of his list, so far as the greatest need of the Military Establishment at the present moment is concerned. However, I do not want any Member of the Senate to infer from what the Senator from Maryland said yesterday in regard to the conversation he had before our committee yesterday morning with the Secretary of Defense that the Secretary of Defense at that meeting said the Tydings bill has the position of top priority on his list of needs for the Military Establishment. I recognized, while the committee was hearing the statement of the Secretary of Defense, that unless that point were made perfectly clear there might be a misinterpretation of the statement, and that it might be subject to representation that the Secretary of Defense believes this particular bill is the best bill that can be obtained, or that should be obtained, and that this particular bill is the one which should be passed in all of its sections. That is not what he said, Mr. President, and I made very certain to satisfy myself at that meeting as to exactly what the Secretary's position was in regard to the Tydings bill and in respect to whether in his opinion it is in need of amendment. So I said—and I shall let the transcript speak for itself, but I think the transcript will show that what I am about to say is a very accurate report of what the Secretary of Defense said in reply to a question I put to him—"Mr. Secretary, you know I am opposed to the unification bill that will be debated this afternoon in the Senate because, in my opinion, it does not go far enough with unification. Therefore, Mr. Secretary, I want to ask you, without any desire to embarrass you, whether in your opinion the bill could be greatly improved by substantial amendments." He said, "Yes; I think it could be improved." I said, "Mr. Chairman, I will rest at this point because I do not wish to embarrass the Secretary, in view of the fact that this committee has reported a so-called unification bill to the floor of the Senate, but I do intend to offer perfecting amendments on the floor of the Senate."

I think a case could be made for recommitting the bill on the basis of the statement of the Secretary of Defense before the Armed Services Committee yesterday morning. If the Secretary of Defense is willing to admit, as he did yesterday, that this bill can be improved by substantial amendments, I think the Armed Services Committee owes it to this Senate to discuss such amendments with the Secretary of Defense. I think the Armed Services Committee owes it to the Senate to tell the Senate just why it is not recommending specific amendments which the Secretary of Defense apparently thinks would improve this bill. In his answer to my question yesterday the Secretary of Defense satisfied me that I am fully justified in making this fight for amendments which will give the Secretary of Defense greater authority to unify the armed services.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Was that statement on the record, or off the record?

Mr. MORSE. I think it was on the record. We can check. A reporter was present. Some of the statements yesterday morning were put on the record, some were off the record. The Secretary of Defense spoke part of the time on the record, part of the time off the record. But I shall be glad to check to see whether his statement is on the record. I shall be glad to ask my colleagues on the committee to "take the stand," so to speak, as my own witnesses in regard to the report I have given the Senate as to the position taken yesterday by the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. LODGE. I noticed the Senator's very telling reference to the phrase beginning with the word "but" in line 19, on page 4, and I wanted to ask the Senator whether he recalled that Secretary Johnson had requested the insertion of that language.

Mr. MORSE. I understand he did recommend it.

Mr. LODGE. Did he request the insertion of this phraseology, limiting him so that he could not transfer personnel?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; in the original bill.

Mr. LODGE. Is that on the record?

Mr. MORSE. It is in the original bill, and the original bill was defended before the committee by the Secretary of Defense in respect to that particular section.

Mr. LODGE. The original bill did not contain the words "or to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another." That was inserted later.

Mr. MORSE. Yes; that was inserted later. But, as I recall—and the Senator from Massachusetts can refresh my memory—when the Senator from Massachusetts sat with our committee and discussed portions of the bill, I think he at that time brought out the very weakness in the bill he is bringing out now, which opinion I completely share with the Senator from Massachusetts. It was to my disappointment at that time that the Secretary of Defense, in his testimony before the committee, did not accept the point of view which the Senator from Massachusetts and I have shared on this subject.

Mr. LODGE. I must say it is a very profound disappointment to me. I heard the statement made yesterday, and I asked the Senator from Maryland if he could direct me to any words in the record in which the Secretary of Defense definitely stated, over his signature, that he favored a limitation which would prohibit him from making transfers of personnel from one department to another, and, yesterday, the Senator from Maryland was unable to do so. So I gave the Secretary of Defense the benefit of the doubt and assumed he was not trying to put limitations in the bill which would make it impossible for him to have real unification. But the Senator from Oregon indicates the Secretary of Defense is in favor of this limitation.

Mr. MORSE. I do not propose to speak for the Secretary of Defense. That is why I have been very careful to make my quotation only of what actually transpired before the Armed Services Committee yesterday morning, because I did not want in any way to embarrass the Secretary of Defense nor purport to speak for him. I did not press my examination yesterday morning when I asked him if, in his opinion, the present bill could be greatly improved by substantial amendments, and he replied that, in his opinion, it could.

On the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts let me say that I have in my hand a copy of the original bill as it was submitted to the committee. It is the first draft of the bill——

Mr. LODGE. Is that Senate bill 1269?

Mr. MORSE. Yes. On page 4, line 20, thereof, this language is found:

> But this shall not be construed to authorize the Secretary of Defense to reassign the combatant functions assigned to the military departments by section 205 (e), 206 (a), 205 (c), and 208 (f) hereof.

It was by understanding, and it is now my understanding, that this bill was sent to the committee by the Secretary of Defense with his approval. I take it for granted that the Secretary of Defense approved the bill only after accepting what I imagine were a great many compromises which he felt he had to accept to get any bill at all. I have a hunch that he accepted this particular language, apparently, as, shall I say, an acceptable compromise so far as he was concerned, but it is not acceptable so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Am I not correct in my belief that in the committee bill the following words were added to the original committee print: "or to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another or to make details or assignments of military personnel in a matter substantially to affect or change such assigned combatant functions."

Am I not correct in my belief that that is an additional provision written by the committee?

Mr. MORSE. The Senator is correct. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, again, it is my understanding that the language he quotes was an addition to the bill. It was another compromise which I believe had to be made to bring about satisfactory agreements within the Military Establishment. It is my understanding that the Secretary of Defense, in order to reach as much agreement as was possible within the Military Establishment, also accepted that compromise.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator aware that yesterday afternoon I asked the Senator from Maryland, who is chairman of the committee, what the reason was for that language, and the Senator from Maryland said, in substance, that it was put in for the reason that unless the language were in the bill, the committee could not get the necessary votes to report the bill. I asked the Senator from Maryland if he could not give me some substantive reasons for inserting that language, and he simply repeated the assertion that he could not get the bill out of the committee without it, because there were people who controlled votes, and the bill could not be reported unless it contained that language. So that brought me to the conclusion that if he could not find any arguments for it on its merits, it had no merits, and was incorporated in the bill simply to placate certain vested interests.

What does the Senator from Oregon say about that?

Mr. MORSE. I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts knows that I have complete confidence in the motivation of my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee. I do not share their view as to certain matters of judgment. Therefore I would rather put it this way, that the chairman of the committee found that in the judgment of a majority of his colleagues on the committee he could not get the necessary votes to report the bill unless he put in the bill at this point what I think is very unfortunate language and which I think is one of the greatest barriers to true unification of the armed services.

I want to project that situation in the Armed Services Committee to the Pentagon Building, because we must also try to understand the position not only of the Senator from Maryland as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, but we must also consider the position of the Secretary of Defense who is somewhat of a chairman of the Military Establishment in the Pentagon Building.

I think the pressure and drive for this sort of language not only manifested itself within the committee, but I take it for granted—and, again, I certainly do not speak for the Secretary of Defense—that it was also exerted upon the Secretary of Defense. I am inclined to believe it represents one of the concessions he had to make in order to present to the committee the maximum amount of cooperation and esprit de corps on the part of the Military Establishment in the Pentagon Building.

I am sure I do not have to tell the Senator from Massachusetts how those matters work, because he is so much more familiar with military affairs—and that is why I have such great confidence in his judgment—than is the junior Senator from Oregon. I know I do not have to tell him of the tremendous military pressures which can be brought to bear upon either the Secretary of Defense or the judgment of Members of the Senate when they are considering legislation affecting the Military Establishment.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Oregon is very generous in his references to me. As a matter of fact, I have no personal experience of the military at the dizzy heights of the top levels in the Pentagon Building, but I do know that mistakes made in this bill will be paid for in the blood of our sons, and I do know that war has to be conducted on a basis on which prompt decisions can be made, and we should not set up a debating society or a system of checks and balances.

Yesterday I tried to find out from the Senator from Maryland and from the Senator from Oregon why it is that some people want this joker in the bill. I am choosing my words very carefully. It is a military atrocity. That is what it is.

What is the real reason which motivates the men who are in favor of it? I think we should be able to find out some time. I asked the question very loudly yesterday, and I am asking it very loudly today. It can be heard by the gentlemen of the press and the public in the galleries. I want to see if we can find out what is the substantial reason for putting a provision into the bill which will make it very difficult to get economies in time of peace and will destroy fluidity in connection with putting men where they are most needed in time of war.

Mr. MORSE. I cannot answer the question for any member of the committee except myself. I cannot answer the question for the Secretary of Defense, but I can give the Senator the benefit of my judgment for whatever it may be worth. My judgment, may I say, is that I am satisfied that vested interests within the Military Establishment succeeded in persuading members of the committee to the point of view that unless this language were put into the bill civilians rather than the military would be directing a war.

The only argument I have heard that has received any considerable stress and emphasis in the committee is to the effect that this language is needed if the military is going to conduct any possible war. It is up to the military, runs the argument, to determine in what branch of the service the men should be and what the organizations of combat forces should be. Further, it is argued that the military should not be put in the position where there is a division of command, so to speak, between a civilian head and Chiefs of Staff, where the civilian head has the authority to direct the transfer of combatant personnel. That is the argument I have heard in the committee, and I wish to say I think it is a fallacious and unsound argument. I never was impressed with it, because I think it of the utmost importance that our future wars, if, unfortunately, any should occur, should be conducted through a civilian Secretary of Defense, a man in whom we have confidence, with Under Secretaries of Defense in whom we have confidence assisting him. These civilian Secretaries of Defense should be unhandicapped, as far as the policy of unification is concerned, by the sort of restrictions this particular language imposes on them, for reasons which I shall bring out very shortly in my formal remarks. Obviously, they will follow the combat tactics and recommendations of the Joint Chiefs but they will be able to avoid the wastes and mistakes that a lack of unification cost us in the last war.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is not the reason this bill is here today, and we are now forced to try to do something more about unification—for, at present, we do not have an effective, efficient unification—the fact that when we passed the existing law some 2 years ago, we put into it too many things, such as those embodied in the language to which the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Massachusetts have addressed themselves?

Mr. MORSE. I have already pointed that out. We are engaged in this debate today because we did not do a good enough job in 1947, and what I fear is that unless we adopt some amendments to the bill we are not going to do a good enough job in 1949.

Mr. HILL. In 1947 there was too much compromise, compromise, compromise, instead of doing the job. Is not that true?

Mr. MORSE. That is my judgment.

Mr. HILL. And we are confronted to a very large extent with the same situation today. Will we really do the job? Will we really give the country an effective and efficient unification? Or will we merely take a little bite at it, so to speak, and come back 2 years from now and try to do it all over again? Heaven only knows what the ill consequences will be, what price we will pay for not acting adequately and properly at this time.

Mr. MORSE. Again, Mr. President, I want to be exceedingly fair to my colleagues on the committee. I attribute to them no motivations but the best. I simply disagree with their main conclusion when they report this bill favorably to the Senate, because I believe, as the Senator from Alabama has pointed out, it contains too many compromises, which will not result in true unification.

I wish to be just as fair to the Secretary of Defense. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not think he can find a word in the transcript of the record in which the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson, has put his affirmative stamp of approval on this particular language. But it is also true that there is nothing in the record showing that the Secretary of Defense has expressed any disapproval of this particular language.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator believes that the Secretary did not ask to have this language put in the bill. Is that true?

Mr. MORSE. I know of no proof that he asked to have the language put in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. But he may have said he would not object if it were?

Mr. MORSE. My own judgment is that you have just pointed out exactly the position in which the Secretary of Defense found himself. He is going to take this bill, he is willing to accept the bill, but he thinks it could be improved by substantial amendments. That is why I related to the Senate the conversation with the Secretary of Defense yesterday morning in committee, to which the Senator from Maryland has already referred, when the Secretary of Defense, in answer to a question which I put to him yesterday, made perfectly clear that he believed the pending bill could be strengthened by further amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The statement was made yesterday, I think, that Secretary Johnson had requested this language. The Senator knows of nothing in the record to support that contention, does he?

Mr. MORSE. I know of no proof of that, but it may have been said in my absence.

Mr. President, I was saying that instead of giving the Secretary of Defense a clear and courageous directive, we are again placing him in a position where he can be attacked by any overly jealous subordinate official. If anyone thinks I am exaggerating this point, I would have him consider the language of the bill. The text of the bill says that the Secretary shall effect such consolidations in, among other things, transportation, as will eliminate duplication, but this shall not be construed to reassign the combat functions assigned to the Army by section 205 (e). Section 205 (e) deals with the Army, and prescribes that the Army shall include, among other things, such water transport as may be organic therein.

Here is the point I seek to make: We all know that the Secretary of Defense has long recognized the wastefulness of having a large cargo fleet operated by the Army, whereas the Navy is the logical service to operate water-borne transport. But under the limitations written into the pending bill, can we not imagine the legal and political battle which the Secretary will have on his hands if he so much as transfers one Liberty ship from the Army to the Navy?

Mr. President, I think I have made the point. I do not desire to dwell on it too long, but I reemphasize it, only to the extent of saying that it is one specific example which shows, as I read the Tydings bill, how we handcuff the Secretary of Defense in carrying out true unification. We restrict him in increasing the efficiency of the operation of the Military Establishment, and in effecting needed economy. I say we ought to leave it to the Secretary of Defense, who is not going to operate in a vacuum, who is not going to render his decisions without consultation not only with the military leaders of the Military Establishment, but with the civilian assistants appointed to his staff to decide what needs to be done to unify the armed services.

Mr. President, I want the Secretary of Defense empowered under this unification bill to bring an end, if he decides the facts warrant such a decision, to what I think is a wasteful duplication of water transport within the Military Establishment. I want him to be given the power, if after a study of the facts he decides that such an order should be issued, to transfer water transport from the Army to the Navy.

Mr. President, I simply do not see how it is possible to effectuate the economy and bring about the military efficiencies which are necessary under a true unification bill if we leave this particular language in the bill.

One of the amendments I shall offer shortly leaves no room for doubt that Members of the Senate will be given an opportunity to vote on the issue whether or not they want to give the Secretary of Defense the power and jurisdiction to render decisions, or whether they want him to be hog-tied by the brass in the Pentagon Building.

Mr. HILL. What the Senator is telling the Senate is that if we do not give him the power to which the Senator has referred, we then defeat one of the signal purposes of unification.

Mr. MORSE. Unless we give him the power it is a mockery. It verges, I may say to the Senator from Alabama, on misleading the public into thinking they are getting something which in fact they are not getting.

Now, Mr. President, let us take the limitation on the top of page 5, wherein it is stated that this authority to effect consolidation shall not be construed to permit the Secretary—note the language—

> To make details • • • of military personnel in a manner substantially to affect • • • combatant functions.

As a practical matter has this any real meaning, and does it do anything but becloud the issue? Let us talk about it in terms of a hypothetical. If the Secretary details 500 naval aviators for 12 months duty with the B–36 bombers of the Strategic Air Command of the Air Force so that they will learn this type of warfare and this type of equipment, I think, under this language, he would be subject to endless charges that he is trying to swallow up either naval aviation or the Air Force. But in reality, I think, there would be many circumstances such as this that would indicate he would be doing a very wise thing by such a detailing of personnel to special assignments and missions. Why not give him the authority to do it? Why surround him with all these hedges and fences of jurisdictional restriction?

Now, Mr. President, it probably will be argued that the amendment which I am offering endangers the existence of some existing military establishments such as the Army, the Air Forces, or Navy with its Marine Corps.

It may be argued that the amendment I am proposing decreases the control of Congress over the Military Establishment. I say there is no basis in fact for such an argument. I say that such an argument is based on special pleading in support of some vested interest within the Military Establishment. It represents the unfounded contention of some groups within the military which is fearful that unification might force it to operate on a more efficient and economical basis by way of resulting cuts in duplication and waste.

When the argument is made against my amendment, as I am sure it will be, that the amendment seeks to empower the Secretary of Defense to abolish the existing branches of the Military Establishment I would have the Members of the Senate remember that when an officer is commissioned in the Military Establishment he is commissioned in the Army, in the Air Forces, or in the Navy including the Marine Corps. He is commissioned upon the recommendation of the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army, Navy, and Air Forces, and confirmed by the Senate.

The Secretary of Defense is given no authority under my amendment to make a captain of Marines a captain of Infantry in the Army. He is given no authority to make an admiral in the Navy a general in the Army. The existing organizations of the Army, Air Forces, and Navy, including the Marines, would be continued. But the Secretary of Defense in the interest of unification, in the interest of efficiency, and in the interest of economy should have the right to detail men from naval aviation, for example, to the Air Forces for a special mission or for special training and vice versa.

The Secretary of Defense should be given the authority, for example, to say, by way of order that certain duplicating functions now existing should be eliminated by one branch of the service. That is unification, Mr. President.

Now, we either mean to unify the armed forces or we do not. There is no unification possible if we continue to preserve every jurisdictional claim of every existing division, department, or segment of the Army, Air Forces, and Navy as they presently operate. I think it is an argument of imagination to say that under my amendment a Secretary of Defense might attempt, by reassignment or by detailing personnel for special missions from one branch of the service to another, to abolish the Marine Corps or the Navy or any other branch of the services.

What do the proponents of this argument think that the President of the United States or the Congress would be doing if any Secretary of Defense attempted any such course of action? What do they think the Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate would be doing? The Secretary of Defense cannot act in a vacuum nor can he act in secrecy in connection with such matters as these. Further, I say, Mr. President, he cannot act in the interest of unification either unless we give him the jurisdiction which my amendment gives to him to work out greater economy and efficiency within the Army, Air Forces, Navy, and Marine Corps by eliminating existing duplication and waste.

That is the issue, Mr. President. I warn Members of the Senate not to be diverted from it by all the rattling of ghosts and imaginative scarecrows that are going to be advanced in argument during the course of this debate by those who want to protect the existing no trespassing signs which the Army, Air Forces, and Navy, including the Marines, have tacked up figuratively over their offices in the Pentagon Building.

I think the issue is simple. Is the Congress of the United States going to place its confidence in the civilians appointed to these high positions in the Military Establishment, in the offices of Secretary of Defense and Under Secretary of Defense, or is the Congress going to take the position, as it did under the old unification bill, and as I say it would still be doing under the Tydings bill, that handcuffs should be placed on the wrists of the Secretary of Defense in the form of vetoes as represented by such language as I have just cited?

I want to free the Secretary of Defense so that he can make decisions in the Pentagon Building. After he has listened to the arguments and the evidence the brass can present to him—and I mean no disrespect to military officers by the use of that colloquialism—after he has listened to military officers in the armed establishment, after they have had their opportunity to make their case, I want the Secretary of Defense and his staff to have the power to detail personnel on special missions and assignments and eliminate duplication and waste in order to promote efficiency in the armed establishment, and economy, too. I shall have something more to say about economy a little later.

On the point I have just made I wish I could turn to the exact language in the transcript, but I will quote it from memory, and then let the transcript speak for itself. I refer to the testimony of Robert Patterson, former Secretary of War, during the closing years of the war. He appeared before the Armed Services Committee not so long ago, and we discussed with him the matter of division of authority during the last war between what was then a 2-headed Military Establishment, namely, a Secretary of Navy and a Secretary of War. As I have said on another occasion on the floor of the Senate, I have the greatest of confidence in the judgment, in the ability and the devotion to public trust and service of Robert Patterson. What did he tell us? In effect, he said this:

> I would hate to guess the millions and millions of dollars that went down the drain in waste during the war as the direct result of a 2-headed administration of the Military Establishment.

I shall secure his exact language and shall insert it at this point in my remarks, but it is my distinct recollection that what I have said is a fairly accurate quotation of what Mr. Patterson said before the committee. In fact I think he said billions rather than millions of dollars were wasted.

I emphasize at this point that the problem he was talking about, namely, a two-headed administration of the armed establishment in the prosecution of the war at the top level, resulting in millions and millions of dollars of waste, runs right down through the entire Military Establishment. To whatever extent in this bill we perpetuate that division of administrative authority, we are going to perpetuate duplication and waste in the Military Establishment. The language I am talking about in the Tydings bill at this point in my speech is language which I say guarantees a division of command, guarantees a division of authority, assures us of a perpetuation of duplication, with inevitable waste resulting therefrom.

Mr. President, unless the Secretary of Defense, to use the two examples I have cited, is given the final authority, unless on the facts he can render a decision transferring water transportation from the Army to the Navy, for example, or detailing for special training or missions naval aviators from the Navy to the aviation forces of this country, the result will be a duplication of function, duplication of training, duplication of expense and resulting waste. I think we ought to come to grips with this problem.

Mr. President, let my former language in regard to the quotation from Mr. Patterson stand. I have just been handed the copy of the hearings. On page 149 we have the testimony of Mr. Robert Patterson, the former Secretary of War. Speaking about duplication of administration, this is what the former Secretary of War said:

> And it is no exaggeration to say that in World War II the cost in duplication, competition, and disjointed effort directly traceable to the two-headed system ran to billions and billions of dollars. A sizable part of the tremendous public debt that the taxpayers of the United States are now bearing is due to that division of authority and responsibility between the War Department and the Navy Department.

In editing his remarks, which is a witness' right so long as he does not change the meaning of his point, the Secretary eliminated one figure of speech which he used in his testimony when he referred to this huge waste going "down the drain." However, in my judgment, his edited remarks are even stronger than my recollection of them. I repeat:

> It is no exaggeration that in World War II the cost in duplication, competition, and disjointed efforts directly traceable to the two-headed system ran to billions and billions of dollars. A sizable part of the tremendous public debt that the taxpayers of the United States are now bearing is due to that division of authority and responsibility between the War Department and the Navy Department.

Bob Patterson has no vested interest in this matter. Bob Patterson has left behind him a glorious record of public service and patriotic performance of the duty of Secretary of War. Bob Patterson pleads today with the American people and the Congress only for a unification bill which will eliminate the duplication and the competition which during the war cost us unnecessarily billions upon billions of dollars.

Does the bill now before the Senate do it? I submit that it does not, because it does not cut a straight line through the red tape of divided authority and administration, and duplication in the Pentagon Building. It does not free the hands and mind of the Secretary of Defense. It does not give him the authority to make decisions necessary to eliminate the type of waste about which Bob Patterson spoke, because the very language of the bill which I have quoted shows that we are continuing the division of authority and functions which built up this great waste.

I wish I did not have to offer criticism as strong as that, but I am going to be true to what I consider to be my trust in this position. I am satisfied that the bill which is before us does not go far enough, because this type of duplication and division of authority is continued in the bill. If we want to make the type of savings which the former Secretary of War has mentioned, I say that the bill needs to be substantially amended so as to divest the officials of the Military Establishment itself—and I speak of the Army, Aviation, and Naval authorities in high command—of the final authority, which should be vested in the office of the Secretary of Defense. We cannot fight the next war, if we should have to fight one, on the basis of the techniques and tactics of the last war.

It is one of the weaknesses of human nature that if we permit men to operate under legislation which authorizes duplication in its very language, which protects them in their vested interests within the Military Establishment, and which does not authorize the Secretary of Defense to overrule them, they are going to build up their own little military jurisdictions and job empires within the Pentagon Building. That is what happened in the last war, to such a degree that we have the testimony which I have cited from the former Secretary of War himself. Other Members of the Senate may ignore that testimony if they wish, but I shall not. I shall insist upon offering amendments which in my opinion will correct the type of abuses to which the former Secretary of War referred. As the Senator from Massachusetts pointed out a while ago, we cannot correct those abuses if in legislation we deny to the Secretary of Defense the power to detail personnel in the interest of efficiency and economy.

I therefore feel that the present wording of the bill places the Secretary of Defense in an impossible position. My amendment proposes to strike from this paragraph everything after the word "proper" in line 19. I submit, as a practical legislative matter, that unless that is done we might just as well strike out all the paragraph, beginning in line 14 on page 4, because the language preserves the so-called safeguards. Safeguards of what, Mr. President? Safeguards of the existing vested military jurisdiction in the military forces themselves, the Navy, the Army, and the Air Forces. Can we call that unification? At best it is only a truce between the conflicting forces in the Pentagon Building until they can get the next huge appropriation.

I would rather have this bill debated on the floor of the Senate after we have the report from the Appropriations Committee on the armed services appropriation bill for the next year. I wish to be realistic. I will tell the Senate why I would rather have the debate come then. I think the arguments on my amendments would carry much greater weight after the Senate is asked to consider military appropriations because when Members of the Senate come to grips with what that budget is going to be if the proposals coming from the Pentagon Building are anywhere near approved, Members of the Senate will see the importance of eliminating the type of division in command and duplication of authority which my amendment seeks to eliminate.

Mr. President, at this time I wish to make a personal statement. I realize the delicacy of my position in this matter, because as a member of the Armed Services Committee I have not been a member of the armed forces in time of war. Senators know politics. There are those who always like to substitute argument by personal abuse and smear for argument on the merits and facts of an issue. I understand that in some quarters criticism is being heaped upon me because I purport to make suggestions for the improvement of the bill, even though I have never served in the armed forces of my country in time of war. The record is clear that it certainly was my desire to do so, and the record is clear that for a period of years I held a Reserve commission in the Reserve of the Army.

I see the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM] in the Chamber. He knows that during the last war I sought to serve in the armed forces, but the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, directed me to perform the service which he felt I could best perform. When I discussed the matter with the Commander in Chief on one occasion, he said, "Wayne, I will not accept a resignation from you, to go into the armed forces, because your place is on the War Labor Board, and that is where you can best serve your country."

Mr. President, I make that personal reference in the midst of this speech because I always think it best to engage in rebuttal in advance. The fact that I did not serve in the armed forces during the last war has in no way lessened my interest in the problems of the Military Establishment. As a member of the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate, I have devoted myself to intensive study of the problems of the armed forces and of the various problems which are presented by this bill.

I wish to say to the Military Establishment that I can always be counted upon to vote the last dollar needed to keep the Nation secure; and all they have to show me is evidence which supports their contentions. However, Mr. President, I am not going to vote to the armed forces a single dollar which is not needed. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I shall constantly check the Military Establishment in its tendency to use fear arguments, so frequently spread across the land, in an attempt to justify military expenditures which in fact are not needed, in the amounts requested, to meet the security needs of the Nation. That is why earlier in my remarks today I took the liberty of calling attention to the warning the late Secretary of Defense, Mr. Forrestal, gave to the leaders of the Military Establishment, when, in our committee, he warned them that we could not continue for long to spend almost half our national budget, as was then proposed—over $21,000,000,000, more than half of our then national budget—for the Military Establishment. I say from this desk today to the Military Establishment that a patriotic obligation rests upon the shoulders of our military leaders to come forward at this session of Congress with a budget proposal which will reduce to the minimum all waste and duplication within the armed services. Those are the things which I believe run up the bill several billion dollars higher than it need be. Again I refer to my principal witness, the former Secretary of War himself, Mr. Patterson, who said as much in his testimony before the committee.

Mr. President, I now offer and send to the desk, for printing, my first amendment, which reads as follows:

On page 4, in line 19, beginning with the second comma, strike out all down to and including the word "functions" on page 5, in line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEM in the chair). The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in offering that amendment, I conclude my discussion of that particular proposal by simply saying that the amendment offers the Members of the Senate an opportunity to stand up and be counted on the question of whether they really wish to take effective steps in eliminating duplication, competition, and waste within the Military Establishment.

A second example of temporizing occurs on page 8 of the bill, in the provisions relating to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. I personally favor a single Chief of Staff, and so provided in my bill. But I am willing to settle for a Chairman of the Joint Chiefs if we shall agree not to make a complete figurehead out of him.

Mr. President, I am confronted here with the practical problem of answering the question, "When should one compromise?"

I wish to say that I much prefer the section in my own bill which sets up a single Chief of Staff, but I know there is not a chance of getting such an amendment through the Senate. There is a chance that this amendment will be adopted by the Senate, and I think we can make the amendment work. The amendment which I now offer, regarding the Chief of Staff problem, will make it possible to accomplish most of the things which I had hoped to accomplish under a single Chief of Staff. Senate bill 1843 in its present form simply makes a figurehead out of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. I say that because, on page 8, in line 10, we see the completely astonishing statement that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff "shall have no vote."

To me that is a fundamental change in the concept of the Joint Chiefs, for it introduces a wholly new idea, namely, that the Joint Chiefs constitute a voting body. Contrary to the entirely erroneous impression which I have heard expressed, the Joint Chiefs are not and never have been an instrument which transacts its business by voting. The same is true of the Security Council and the War Council. I note that Senate bill 1843 very wisely makes the Vice President a member of the President's Security Council, but it does not hedge by saying that he shall have no vote. That is proper, because the Security Council is an agency which assists the President, who has the power of decision. It is not a voting organization.

Similarly, Senate bill 1843 very wisely places the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs on the War Council, but again nothing is said about any voting privilege. That is correct, because the War Council advises the Secretary of Defense, who has the full power of decision, supposedly. However, I wonder if that is the real intention. I wonder if the true intention is not to write into the bill some language in regard to voting power, denying voting power to the chairman of the joint chiefs, thereby impliedly—mark this, Mr. President—thereby impliedly seeking to restrict the power of decision of the Secretary of Defense. Either he has the power of decision or he has not. Are we to surround him with joint chiefs who, by implication in the bill, shall have the power to vote, except the chairman, and then, when they cast a vote on some issue, place the Secretary of Defense in a position where, if he wants to make a decision he thinks is essential for the effective operation of the Military Establishment, he must overrule a vote of the joint chiefs; which vote could not be participated in by the chairman? I do not think it makes much sense. I think the joint chiefs should be advisory; or, if we are to require a vote, let us do it directly, and let us give the chairman also the power to vote. But why this hybrid? What is the motivation behind this hybrid proposal? Mr. President, I will tell you what my fear is. It is that this is more language put in the bill with the motive, over the long haul, of hamstringing the Secretary of Defense when the "brass" organizes against him in regard to some issue. In neither of these vitally important councils can the responsible head shirk his responsibility behind an implied claim that he was "outvoted." So why should we introduce this thought into the operations of the joint chiefs? They operate, and have always operated, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Defense. They recommend courses of action to him, and they may, or may not, be in unanimous agreement on the details of their recommendations. What difference does it make if they are not in agreement? Suppose they are, or are not: The responsibility to render a decision on the issue should be in the Secretary of Defense. He should seek the consultation and advice of the joint chiefs; but he should not be restricted even by this interesting psychological barrier which I think the language imposes upon him.

Let us be practical about it. There can be little doubt that the bill indirectly but by necessary implication authorizes the Joint Chiefs to vote because the language specifically prohibits the chairman from voting. The only conclusion I can reach is that, by implication, the others have authority to vote, but, interestingly enough, the bill does not give it to them directly in so many words. Let us suppose the Secretary of Defense lays a matter before the Joint Chiefs, and they make a recommendation to him, notifying him that the vote was such and such. Mr. President, will not the fact of the vote be a psychological barrier to him? If he really thinks that their vote ought to be overruled, will not the vote create a problem for him? Will it not create a problem for him right here on the floor of the United States Senate, Mr. President? Can we not hear the speeches now? The first time the Secretary of Defense overrules the Chiefs of Staff—that is, those allowed to vote—who have voted contrary to the decision reached by the Secretary of Defense, can we not hear the speeches? I can; because the Pentagon Building has many lines into the floor of the Senate and the House. Of course the implied authority to vote raises a barrier. It is an unfair barrier to impose upon a public servant to whom a trust is given such as the one we grant to the Secretary of Defense.

Or let us take another hypothetical case. Suppose the Joint Chiefs vote unanimously in support of a certain issue, and we have a Secretary of Defense who would rather not face the particular fight that overruling them might create in the Congress—because, after all, he must pick his fights; he cannot fight on every issue. But suppose he still sincerely believes that he ought to overrule them—are we not putting the Secretary of Defense in a very compromising position? Are we not being very unfair to him by the language of the pending bill? I think we are. I think we ought to say directly and unequivocally that the decision shall rest with the Secretary of Defense, imposing upon him only the obligation to consult and seek the advice of the Joint Chiefs.

Thus, Mr. President, to say that the Chairman has no vote implies that the others do, and it implies that this vote shall be the Secretary's mandate. In practice that is the way it will be interpreted in the Pentagon Building. Just wait and see if that does not prove to be the case. If we let this bill go through, with the language of this section included, it is going to be only a matter of a short time before the partisan proponents of different divisions of the Military Establishment are going to say, "That creates a mandate upon the Secretary of Defense."

I submit that this provision is completely at variance with the facts, is an extremely dangerous concept, and should be stricken from the bill. Indeed, if it were to remain in the bill, I can see how, if some grave mistake were made by the military, one or more of the Joint Chiefs could with perfect logic disclaim any responsibility on the basis of his voting record. And, to make matters worse, the Chairman would disclaim all responsibility, on the ground that he had no vote at all, and, therefore, no effective voice in the dealings of our high military councils. It takes no military expert, Mr. President, to see how impossible it is going to be to get dignity and responsibility in our top military command on such a basis.

Furthermore, the bill provides that the Chairman shall serve for a period of 2 years, with one reappointment possible in time of peace. Here again we are safeguarding ourselves into an untenable position. No Chairman, in the short space of 2 years, can develop to a point where he has served long enough in this high position to justify his stepping aside if we want the maximum of efficiency in developing military defense policies. True, he may be reappointed, but this involves again the delicate interservice rivalries and the work of pressure groups to a point where a really capable man would decline in the first place to accept a job which in effect requires running for reelection every second year. None of us is so naive as to think there is no such thing as politics in the Military Establishment. I, therefore, feel that his tour of duty should be for a period of 4 years in the first instance, and have so recommended in my amendment.

A third weakening restriction is placed on the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs by the proviso which begins at the bottom of page 8. This proviso states that the Chairman shall not, by virtue of his office, exercise military command over the Joint Chiefs or the services. I submit that when we add this restriction to the one which gives him no voice in the deliberations of the Joint Chiefs, we have a figurehead of the most classic pattern.

Moreover, what possible military command could the Chairman exercise over anyone? Existing law clearly states what shall be the chain of command from the President down to the lowest recruit, and under no conceivable circumstances could the Chairman usurp any of this authority, unless, of course, he chose to seize the power of the military, in which circumstance I do not believe the weakening proviso contained in the bill would be much of a deterrent. All this proviso does is to diminish the stature of the Chairman by throwing a meaningless safeguard into the bill, and I have recommended that it be stricken.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I congratulate the Senator on the fine grasp which he has shown of these very important considerations. I think no bill which we shall have before us in this session, or in many sessions to come, will mean more in terms of the lives of our young manhood than will this bill. It is very interesting, to me, that the Senator has made these compelling arguments and has indicated the very grave fallacies in the bill, and that no Senator has risen on the floor to disprove a single one of his criticisms. If the Senator has the same experience I had yesterday, he will point out his criticisms and no Senator will rise to explain where we are wrong and give us a good, substantive reason for the weak points in the bill.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. In a moment.

I deeply appreciate the comments of the Senator from Massachusetts. I wish to say to him that I am simply expressing one man's opinion in presenting these points of view. I am motivated, as are my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee, according to their viewpoint, only by a desire to have the best possible unification bill that can be presented. I feel that these amendments will greatly improve the bill, and I offer them to the Senate because I am satisfied they will improve the bill very much.

I now yield to my good friend from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I should like to say in connection with this particular provision of the bill that when it was under discussion in the committee I was one of the members who asked what seemed to me to be searching questions with reference to it. In the first place, I may say, Mr. President, that, so far as the definition of the duties of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is concerned, I believe the definition of his position, as described in the bill, is one on which all of the Chiefs of Staff of the three services agreed, and one which, if I remember correctly, the Secretary of Defense also recommended.

In the discussions in the committee I questioned the wisdom of mentioning the word "vote" in this particular connection. I questioned the wisdom, if there were to be any votes, of providing that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would be deprived of a vote. However, as it was argued in the committee, it was pointed out that if the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff were to have a vote, the effect on many occasions might be completely to stalemate the decision of the three Chiefs of Staff who, under this provision of the bill, comprise the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

One of the things pointed out on many occasions to the committee, which held extended hearings and discussions on this bill, was that it was essential in warfare that oftentimes a decision be made and that a stalemate be broken.

That, Mr. President, was the argument for this particular provision of the bill. It was the opinion of the junior Senator from Connecticut that it would be better not to mention the matter of voting in this particular connection, with the hope that when it became apparent in the discussions of the three Chiefs of Staff that the majority opinion was the other way, the one in the minority would defer as a matter of agreement. However, eminent military authorities pointed out that there were occasions during the last war when we were almost stalemated by inability to arrive at a decision; and a high military authority, whom I do not want to quote at this time because I might quote him incorrectly, but who is one of the most famous of our military leaders, made the statement that he could conceive of a situation in which a decision, even though it might be an incorrect one, would be better than no decision at all; that it would be better to arrive at some conclusion so that an impasse could be broken, even though it might be demonstrated later that the conclusion was wrong, rather than to have a stalemate continued.

That, Mr. President, is why the committee felt the best way to resolve the situation was to include this provision in the bill, namely, that there would be a Joint Chiefs of Staff consisting of the three Chiefs of Staff; that there would be a chairman who would preside; that the chairman would be, in effect, the administrative officer of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and that he would, in effect, be the liaison officer between the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of Defense, and the President of the United States.

In the discussion, as I remember it, it was also stated that it was the understanding of the committee that if upon any occasion one of the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff himself desired to go directly to the Secretary of Defense or directly to the President of the United States to express his opinion, he was privileged, under this particular provision, so to do.

I may say, Mr. President, that this was one of the provisions which created lengthy discussions. As the junior Senator from Connecticut remembers, it was one in which the committee was as unanimous as it was on any other provision of the bill.

I thank my friend from Oregon for permitting me to make that observation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am very glad to allow the Senator from Connecticut to make his observation; but, if I am ever going to finish my speech this afternoon, I shall have to yield only for questions. I am sure my good friend from Connecticut will not take any offense whatsoever at that comment, because in this particular instance, I think he has been very helpful in making a statement which joins the issue on which I now want to comment.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further observation?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Does the Senator from Oregon recall the history of the opening days of the War Between the States, when, as I remember, General Winfield Scott was the Chief of Staff of the Army? Does the Senator from Oregon recall that at that particular time, for several months, the activities of the armed forces of the United States were practically brought to a standstill because the general who was then the chief of staff, a man with a preeminent reputation in the United States as a military man, was ill and incapable of fulfilling his duties, and yet it seemed almost impossible to get him out of that position and to acquire new leadership? In the mind of the junior Senator from Connecticut, it seemed desirable, in connection with the length of term of the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, that there be a limitation.

We made express provision that in time of war the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff could serve more than a term of two years, but we felt very strongly that an occasion might arise when we might find ourselves in the situation of being unable to remove the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and substitute perhaps a more able or active officer, from whatever branch of the service he might be, in order to bring about a more effective administration of this vitally important organization within the armed forces of the United States.

I thank the Senator from Oregon for permitting me to make this comment on the question of the length of the term.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I should like to answer the Senator from Connecticut first.

Mr. MALONE. Very well.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has stated my understanding of the military history in regard to the Civil War incident to which he referred. But that is entirely irrelevant to the problem before the Senate.

I think it illustrates about as well as I can illustrate it the point of view which characterizes so much of the thinking at the Pentagon Building. They are talking and thinking in terms of organization and tactics and policies of past wars. Here we are dealing with a unification bill which seeks to set up a new system of administering the Armed Forces of the United States.

We are endeavoring to pass legislation which will avoid the mistakes and wastes incident to divided command and authority which has characterzied our Military Establishment in past wars. With that task before us the Senator from Connecticut cites a Civil War incident in which the Chief of Staff of the Army was ill for a period of time incapable of fulfilling his duties and not replaced by new leadership. I ask you Mr. President, what does that incident have to do with my amendment? Absolutely nothing. The bill itself on page 8, starting with line 14, says, "The chairman shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the Regular officers of the Armed Services to serve at the pleasure of the President for a term of 2 years." There is not the slightest possibility under the language of the bill of any such Civil War incident, which the Senator from Connecticut cites, being repeated under the bill or under my amendment, because both the bill and my amendment provide that the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall serve at the pleasure of the President.

In the Civil War to which the Senator from Connecticut referred, we did not have a Secretary of Defense. If we had had a Secretary of Defense under the terms of my amendment the type of stalemate to which the Senator from Connecticut referred could not have existed. It cannot exist now if we will only give to the Secretary of Defense the power of decision he needs, unharried by the restrictions he is supporting in this bill.

The Senator from Connecticut has outlined this issue just as clearly as I think it can be outlined. The issue is whether or not we are going along with the bill which the Senator from Connecticut supports, which bill contains such language as I am now objecting to, and which handcuffs the Secretary of Defense, and gives to the Joint Chiefs authority which they should not have if we are to bring about true unification.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MORSE. No; I am going to finish the reply, then I will let the Senator answer.

The Senator talks about voting. The point is that the pending bill does not in direct, forthright language, give to the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff the power to vote. It merely denies the power to vote to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs. Do they have the right to vote or do they not have the right to vote? We get the answer in the bill only by implication.

As I see it, the issue is very simple, so far as this section is concerned. I want the language so unequivocally clear that the power of the Joint Chiefs shall be limited entirely to advice and consultation, not to decision. I am opposed to letting them render indirect decisions in the sense of giving them the implied right to render decisions by voting on various proposals. This indirect authorization for the Joint Chiefs to vote and then use their votes to embarrass the Secretary of Defense when he disagrees with them should be stricken from the bill. I know of no better way to weaken the Secretary of Defense and hinder unification than this clever provision that seems to give to the other members of the Joint Chiefs the right to vote on various proposals by denying the right to vote to the chairman.

Mr. President, it gets right back to what I have been pleading for throughout these remarks, namely, that we must make up our minds whether we are going to give authority to the Secretary of Defense and his civilian staff to unify the armed forces—yes or no. If we try to restrict that authority by protecting the jurisdiction of the various vested interests of the Pentagon Building, we will build no such type of monument to the memory of James Forrestal as I asked for at the beginning of my address today. We will draft only another bill that proposes unification by way of hindrance rather than by way of help to the Secretary of Defense.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. First, Mr. President, let me call the attention of my distinguished friend from Oregon to the language at the top of page 4, beginning in the middle of the fourth line, which reads as follows:

> The Secretary of Defense shall be the principal assistant to the President in all matters relating to the national security. Under the direction of the President, he shall be responsible for exercising direction, authority, and control over the Department of Defense, including the performance of the following duties.

Then the duties are listed in considerable detail. The question I would ask of the Senator is this: Can we by an act of the Congress take away the constitutional authority of the President of the United States to be the Commander in Chief of the armed forces in peace and in war?

Mr. MORSE. Of course not, and there is not a syllable or a word I have spoken which indicates any such proposal. But we do have the authority to give to the Secretary of Defense the jurisdiction for which I am asking, subject to the superior authority of the Commander in Chief. What the Senator from Connecticut is doing is voting for a bill which seeks to make the Secretary of Defense the President's No. 1 officer in regard to operating the Military Establishment, but then would harry him, impede him, restrict him, by the type of language which I have been protesting all afternoon, and in regard to which I shall offer certain amendments.

Mr. BALDWIN. Let me go one step further. As I conceive the office of Secretary of Defense, it is a position to carry out the executive authority provided for in the Constitution for the President of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the Nation. Quite obviously the President of the United States is not going to be able to make every decision with reference to the armed forces. Quite obviously the Secretary of Defense is not going to be able to make every decision with reference to the armed forces. Quite obviously, it seems to the junior Senator from Connecticut, decisions which involve matters of policy and strategy which are not on the highest level, must be decided somewhere, and under the pending bill such decisions are going to be made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. That is the purpose of setting up the Joint Chiefs of Staff organization under the bill.

It seems to me that under the bill the Secretary of Defense has adequate authority. As a matter of fact, one of the fundamental criticisms which has been advanced against the bill is that he has too much authority, and in an effort to limit his authority somewhat, the committee felt it wise to insert a provision in the bill to the effect that with reference to the components and the functions and the missions of the three branches of the armed services, the Secretary of Defense could not make a fundamental change, the thinking being that such a decision should be made on a higher level than that of an appointive officer, that it should be made in the Congress of the United States, and be made upon the recommendation of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me, as I have studied the bill, that is the chief limitation of power on the Secretary of Defense, and that under the provisions of the bill he may have even too broad powers. In fact, there are many who think that that is so under the provisions of the bill.

It seems to me wise for us to go forward with this piece of legislation as we did with the one 2 years ago, testing it out in the school of experience to determine whether or not it is going to be effective.

I would never stand for a bill which would give to the Secretary of Defense the authority the President of the United States has. I would not stand for a bill which would give to the Secretary of Defense the power to determine what the components and the functions and the missions of the armed services of the United States should be.

Mr. President, I believe that the defense of our country must rest, like an old-fashioned milk stool on three sturdy legs. There it must rest. It may be that from one time to another we may want to put more emphasis on the Air Force, we may want to put more emphasis on the Army, or we may want to put more emphasis upon the Navy. But those must be the three legs upon which our defense must rest in the changing conditions and circumstances and instruments of modern warfare. That is the purpose of the bill. It seems to me that in all other functions with reference to the administration of the armed services the Secretary of Defense has broad powers, in fact broader powers than many of those who appeared before the committee were readily willing to give him. So I am glad of this opportunity to answer thus briefly the particular argument that the Secretary of Defense does not have broad powers, because under the provisions of the bill it seems to me he does.

I thank my friend the Senator from Oregon for yielding to me at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WITHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORSE. I should like to reply to the Senator from Connecticut first.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in connection with the Senator's remarks, I should like to call attention to a couple of words from the committee report. The statement is there made that the bill retains the system of checks and balances. How can we have checks and balances if we are going to have the Secretary of Defense free to do the job he ought to do in directing the affairs of our armed services?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, may I reply?

Mr. LODGE. On page 8, section 6, the third sentence, let me read a brief excerpt:

> The committee would point out that the War Council is one of the most important checks and balances in the Military Establishment.

It seems to me that that lets the cat out of the bag. That shows that this is not a bill primarily interested in unification plus responsibility, and giving our young manhood in the service the right to which they are entitled, that is, to clear, competent and prompt direction at the top; but this is a bill which will, unfortunately, foster a great deal of separatism, which is the thing we ought to get away from.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to answer my good friend from Connecticut and then I shall make another comment. Although I thoroughly enjoy exchanging points of view with the Senator from Connecticut, this exchange can go on at great length, and eventually I want to complete my discussion of the five amendments.

I may say to my good friend from Connecticut that if he had been kicked off a three-legged milk stool as frequently as I have in my life he would not place as much confidence in that type of support for maintaining balanced posture as he seems to in his discussion this afternoon. In using that figure of speech the Senator from Connecticut, I think, has made perfectly clear his basic thinking on this bill, with which I am in complete disagreement. I am in complete disagreement with the idea that we are going to maintain, as I think the Senator from Connecticut indirectly confesses he wants to maintain, a sort of independent autonomy on the part of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force as three legs of equal length and strength supporting our Military Establishment. I think he is drawing this issue clearer than I can draw it myself. We are either going to place the power to control and direct the three forces of our armed services in the Secretary of Defense, or we are going to perpetuate the type of duplication and drives for departmental power that presently characterize their wasteful administration. The idea that they must be maintained on an equal basis as legs to a three-legged stool is a mistaken concept if we want economy and efficiency.

I do not know what the Senator from Connecticut means when he says that he does not propose to give to the Secretary of Defense the constitutional power of the President of the United States. There is not a word the junior Senator from Oregon has said that even implies that he seeks to restrict the power of the President of the United States as Commander in Chief. I am not proposing any constitutional amendment. But I would restrict the power of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force insofar as their military leadership is concerned in determining administrative policy. That is what I am seeking, Mr. President. The Senator from Connecticut is not going to divert me from that objective one single inch by talking about giving too much power to the Secretary of Defense.

What does he mean by too much power? The very bill he is voting for in the very section I am discussing at the present time gives to the Secretary of Defense the power of decision after the Joint Chiefs have apparently voted, under the implied authority contained in the provision the Senator has allowed to come into the bill. The Senator from Connecticut made a mistake, I think, when he permitted others to persuade him to let the provision remain in the bill, because the effect is to hamstring the Secretary of Defense. The provision gives a psychologically restrictive power to the Joint Chiefs of Staff that will embarrass the Secretary of Defense. I repeat to the Senator from Connecticut: He puts the Secretary of Defense in the position where he either has to overrule the votes of the Joint Chiefs when he is satisfied on the facts that their recommendation is wrong, or he opens the Secretary of Defense to the type of criticism and attack which is going to come from the Halls of Congress from supporters of certain vested interests in the Military Establishment whenever the Secretary of Defense goes against them.

I want to free him. Let me make this point in my speech. I want to free today, I want to emancipate today, the Secretary of Defense from the politics of the Pentagon Building. Unless the Secretary of Defense is made free of the political pressures of the Pentagon Building, unless he is put in the position where he can judge the recommendations of his Joint Chiefs on the record as they make the record before him and can then take his decision to the Commander in Chief for final approval or modification, we simply cannot have unification of the armed services. I care not what language the Senator from Connecticut tries to use to rationalize this division of authority. Divide the authority, Mr. President, and there will be no unification. There will be only a drive for power in the Pentagon Building. We have had it since 1947.

The Senator from Connecticut gives us the familiar argument on the floor of the Senate, "Well, let us try this. We can always change it." Mr. President, that argument has been used very often on the floor of the Senate in asking support for legislation which ought to be modified and perfected before we vote. I have heard that argument many times. I heard it back in 1947, not only in connection with this legislation, but in connection with other major pieces of legislation, including the Taft-Hartley law. I am not going to run away from what I think is our responsiblity here to perfect the unification bill today, and I say that the Senator from Connecticut should join with me in eliminating from the bill this particular language in regard to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

So that I may finish this part of my argument before I yield to the Senator from Connecticut, I now offer as my second proposal the following amendment:

On page 8, line 10, strike out "shall have no vote but"; on page 8, line 17, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four"; and on page 8, line 25, beginning with the colon, strike out all down to and including the word "services" on page 9, line 2.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I appreciate that my friend has yielded to me to ask what I hope will be construed as a question, although it may be a rather long one, preceded by a statement.

Under the Constitution of the United States the Congress is given the authority to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy. I should like to ask my friend if he believes that the bill should be broad enough so the Secretary of Defense would have the authority by direct order, or by indirection, to abolish the Army, to abolish the Navy, to abolish the Air Force, or after the Congress has made appropriations for them, so to deal with those appropriations that the effectiveness of any one of those three or any two of those three branches of the service would be impotent? Should such authority rest in one man, who is an appointee of the President?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I most respectfully point out that implied in the Senator's question is an attempt to put words in my mouth. There is nothing in the amendments to the bill for which I stand that takes away in the slightest degree whatsoever the powers of Congress under the Constitution. Under my amendments to the bill I would not give one single power of the Congress to the Secretary of Defense. But, where is the relevancy in the argument that because I propose such amendments as I have submitted in amendments Nos. 1 and 2, I am interfering in the slightest degree with the powers of the Commander in Chief under the Constitution or the power of the Congress in respect to the Military Establishment? The Senator from Connecticut must meet me on this issue, namely, do my amendments in any way interfere with the power of the Congress or the President?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MORSE. Just a moment.

I submit that the Senator from Connecticut is apparently arguing—whether he is willing to recognize it or not I do not know—that under the Constitution of the United States the existing powers of the military heads of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force cannot be restricted along the lines I propose. His argument falls to the floor like a house of cards, because no such constitutional right vests in the military heads of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.

The Senator from Connecticut wants to know if I would be willing to authorize the Secretary of Defense to transfer military personnel. The answer is an unequivocal "Yes" if we want unification; "Yes" if we want economy; "Yes" if we want efficiency; "No" if we want to perpetuate the type of triple-headed administration at the Pentagon Building which is mulcting the American people of billions of dollars in unnecessary, wasteful expenditure in the operation of the Military Establishment.

When I say transfer military personnel I do not mean transfer an officer from a captain in the Marines to a captain in the Army or from admiral in the Navy to general in the Air Force. I have already pointed out in this speech that by transfer I mean that the Secretary of Defense should be authorized to detail men from one service to another in order to perform special missions or obtain special training.

Congress controls how many officers there shall be in the Navy, including the Marines, in the Army, and in the Air Force. Congress, by law, controls how many men and women there shall be in the ranks of the Army, Navy, including the Marines, and the Air Force. There is not a single word in my amendment which gives to the Secretary of Defense the authority to increase or decrease the number of officers and men in any branch of the service as designated by Congress. There is no danger, under my amendment, of the type of transfer which the Senator from Connecticut has in mind, namely, a transfer which would permit the Secretary of Defense to abolish any one of the three branches of the service, including the Marines, or change them from members of one service to members of another service.

However, I say yes to the Senator's question if he means, should the Secretary of Defense have the authority to assign men to special details in connection with a service whose uniform they do not wear? Thus, if naval aviators are detailed to the Air Force they don't cease to be naval aviators under my amendment and vice versa.

I have heard a geat deal about economy from the other side of the aisle, and from this side of the aisle. The place to economize is in the matter of waste in the administration of Government. I am offering an opportunity to economize to the extent of billions of dollars, if the Senate will not accept the argument of the Senator from Connecticut that in some way somehow, we must preserve undisturbed the present jurisdictional powers of the military heads of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. As I see it, that is what his argument reduces itself to.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. Just a moment.

I am for giving power to the Secretary of Defense. I welcome the support of the Senator from Connecticut.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the Senator has answered my question. If we pursue to its logical conclusion the point he makes and give to the Secretary of Defense, for example, the unlimited power to transfer personnel, and the appropriations which go with it, from one department to another, then we give to the Secretary of Defense authority to abolish the Air Corps, the Army, or the Navy, whichever he thinks at the time should be abolished. That is an issue on which I am glad to meet my friend from Oregon, because I am one who firmly believes that a decision on that level—as to whether we shall have an Army and how big it shall be, whether we shall have a Navy, and how big it shall be, whether we shall have an Air Force and how big it shall be, and what the respective functions and missions of those separate branches of the service should be—is a decision which rests with the Congress and the President of the United States, and should rest with them alone.

I am not willing to put in the bill a provision which would give to a single man, who is an appointee of the President, the authority to change the fundamental organization of the defense of the country. If he believes that it should be changed, let him come to the Congress and say so. Let him ask for appropriations to accomplish that object.

So far as I am concerned, I believe that the defense of the United States will continue to rest in the future, as it has in the past, upon those three branches of the armed services. I am willing to concede that the Secretary of Defense shall have the broad authority and power to coordinate those services, but I want to stop at that line, and that is the line where the bill stops. As a matter of policy and as a matter of our own future safety, I think that is the line where it ought to stop. That is the line set forth in the bill.

Under the terms of the bill the Secretary of Defense has ample enumerated powers to accomplish everything the junior Senator from Oregon, as well as the junior Senator from Connecticut, want to see accomplished. But the junior Senator from Connecticut would never support a bill which would make it possible for one man to change the major fundamental organization of the defense of the Nation. I still believe that we need an Army. I still believe that we need a Navy. I still believe that we need an Air Force. I shall always believe that the coordination of those three services is the thing which can successfully accomplish the defense of this country. I am not willing to see one destroyed at the expense of another because at a particular moment or at a particular stage in the development of weapons one man thinks we ought to do away with two of the services to the advantage of the third.

Let me add that I think it is a proud thing to say that we have three branches of the service, each one of which believes that it alone could successfully defend the United States. I would not think that a Chief of Staff, an Army officer, a Navy officer, or an Air Corps officer was worthy of his commission unless he believed that his branch of the service alone was adequate to take care of the defense of the United States. That is the kind of esprit de corps we want to maintain and preserve. However, I am not one who believes that that is so. I am not one who believes that we ever ought to place full and complete confidence in any one of these branches of the armed forces. I believe that there will be times when we shall want to place more emphasis on the Air Corps, and perhaps less upon the Navy, perhaps more or less emphasis on the Army, depending upon the development of weapons and the particular enemy with which we have to grapple. But I would never support a bill which gave authority to one man to abolish any one of these branches of the service or to make any fundamental changes in the organization of the service as provided by the Congress of the United States.

I thank my friend for yielding to me in order to make this statement.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I should like first to reply to my good friend from Connecticut, and then I shall be glad to yield.

The Senator from Connecticut has drawn the issue; but I say most respectfully that in drawing the issue he has completely misstated it, because in his statement of the issue he has inserted one false assumption after another. Let us run through those false assumptions.

In the first place, the revisions of the bill proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon do not put the Secretary of Defense in a position where he is not subject to the control of the Congress of the United States. The Senator from Connecticut knows that to be so. The Senator from Connecticut knows that the bill, even as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Oregon, provides also for an Under Secretary of the Navy, an Under Secretary of the Army, and an Under Secretary of the Air Force. The whole structure of the bill, as proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon, continues those three great branches of the service, including within the Navy the great Marine Corps. But what the Senator from Oregon is pleading for is that the military heads of those services shall be subject to the administrative decisions of the Secretary of Defense.

The Senator from Connecticut, if he wishes to do so, can argue until doomsday on the basis of the false assumption that the Senator from Oregon is seeking to support a bill which permits of the abolition of one of the three armed services. However, that simply does not happen to be a fact.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. MORSE. I shall yield as soon as I finish this statement.

I say that assumption simply is not based on fact, because the provisions of the bill which I am supporting will continue those services. But this is where the Senator from Connecticut and I differ: I do not see that there is anything sacrosanct in the Army or in the Navy or in the Air Force that should guarantee to any of them the right to continue some particular function if the Secretary of Defense or the Commander in Chief of the United States decides that in the interest of efficiency, the elimination of duplication, or in order to promote economy, there should be a transfer of a particular function or a detailing of personnel of one service to another service to perform a special mission.

Furthermore, I wish to say that I do not know of a better example which I could cite on the floor of the Senate of the use of the "fear" argument than the argument just made by the Senator from Connecticut when he tried to read into this provision of mine in respect to the Secretary of Defense an authority on the part of the Secretary of Defense to abolish the Army or the Navy or the Air Force. Such an argument of reducing to the absurd simply does not make good sense. No Secretary of Defense, by the widest stretch of the imagination, would possibly go to the absurd extreme which the fear expressed by the Senator from Connecticut would seek to arouse in us. But, as I said earlier in my speech, a Secretary of Defense might decide that water transportation should be transferred from the Army to the Navy; and if the facts supported him, he should have the power to do so. He might decide that 500 naval aviators should be transferred from the Navy to the Air Force for training on B–36's; and if the facts supported him, he should have the power to do so. However, they would remain as naval aviators.

Mr. KEM and Mr. BALDWIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. MORSE. Since I have just replied to the Senator from Connecticut, and because I wish to be exceedingly fair to him, I yield first to him.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator.

(At this point Mr. KEM asked permission to interrupt Mr. MORSE, who yielded, and colloquy ensued, which appears after the following "subsequently said" statement by Mr. BALDWIN:)

Mr. BALDWIN subsequently said: Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I wonder whether, by unanimous consent, what I have to say now could be inserted before the question propounded by the distinguished Senator from Missouri. I am going to attempt to answer something in the RECORD that should at least meet the argument of my distinguished friend from Oregon, who is one of the best arguers I have ever heard anywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the reason I spoke as I did was because the junior Senator from Oregon had made the point that the Secretary of Defense did not have adequate power under the pending bill, and it was the purpose of the junior Senator from Connecticut to attempt to draw the line at which the committee felt that the power of the Secretary of Defense should stop, a line beyond which it should not be extended. The committee, in drafting the bill, on page 4, has given to the Secretary of Defense tremendously broad powers. For example:

> Under the direction of the President, he shall be responsible for exercising direction, authority, and control over the Department of Defense, including the performance of the following duties—
> (1) Establishment of policies and programs for the Department of Defense;
> (2) Exercise of direction, authority, and control over the affairs of the Department of Defense;

Coming to the question of the assignment of water transportation to the Navy, or something of that kind, it seems to me the power is in the Navy to accomplish that, so long as the thing done does not essentially or substantially affect the combatant function assigned to the different branches of the service under the bill. The bill gives to the Secretary of Defense the power to detail officers and enlisted personnel from one department to another, but not in such great numbers as to defeat the combafant functions and purposes as defined in this particular bill. That it seems to me is where the line should be drawn. If some future Congress finds that it wants to give to one man the authority to change the entire set-up of the national defense, it can then do so; but the junior Senator from Connecticut would never vote for any such provision as that, because he believes that under the Constitution and under our whole system, by wisdom and experience it is demonstrated that decisions on that level must be made here, and must be made by the President of the United States. The junior Senator from Connecticut submits that under the terms and provisions of the bill, the criticism of my friend from Oregon is not well founded for the Secretary of Defense has ever so much broader powers than he was given under the bill passed 2 years ago, and he has under the provisions of this bill ample power and authority to accomplish the savings and to do the things necessary to increase efficiency which both the junior Senator from Oregon and the junior Senator from Connecticut believe very sincerely should be done and accomplished.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has now put me into a position calling for repetition, and I am not going to repeat myself. He has just made an argument which I think I completely answered when I presented my first amendment. I completely deny his premise. When he says the bill gives the Secretary of Defense all the authority he needs, I deny it. I say the so-called safeguards of the bill which he now cites with approval are the very things that prevent the Secretary of Defense from doing the one thing we ought to empower him to do, namely to unify the armed forces. That is what the bill is all about. His assumption that if we adopt my amendment No. 1—in defense of which I spoke at length earlier this afternoon, and I shall not repeat the argument—we interfere with congressional power over the armed forces simply is not so, Mr. President. My amendment does not restrict by one iota the powers of the Congress. But the amendment enlarges the powers of the Secretary of Defense, so he can knock some heads together at the Pentagon Building. I submit the argument of the Senator from Connecticut reduces itself to the premise that he apparently wants to preserve unto the military officials the authority to go about their independent ways without any effective restrictions being imposed upon them by the Secretary of Defense. That is the issue between us. I have made my point upon it.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I have only a short question which I wish to ask of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Very well; I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, who has studied this bill very carefully, whether he has any difficulty in regard to the meaning of section 210, as proposed to be amended by this bill?

Mr. MORSE. On what page, please?

Mr. KEM. On page 7 of the bill. That section creates a War Council, composed of the heads of certain departments, along with the Secretary of National Defense, and provides that the War Council shall advise the Secretary of Defense on matters of particular policy, and so forth.

Mr. MORSE. It simply puts the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs on the War Council; that is all it does.

Mr. KEM. Does it continue this language, which I find a little unusual:

> There shall be within the Department of Defense a War Council composed of the Secretary of Defense, as Chairman, who shall have power of decision.

Does that mean that the other members of the War Council will sit with him as more or less window dressing, but in the end the Secretary of Defense will announce the decision?

Mr. MORSE. It would be purely advisory, which is the present situation.

Mr. KEM. Is that a desirable situation?

Mr. MORSE. I think it is a desirable situation, if someone finally is to make a decision, after everyone has had a "say" and after everyone has had a chance to advance his facts and arguments.

We must proceed on the assumption that the Secretary of Defense will be controlled by the facts and will give thorough consideration to the positions taken by his advisers.

Mr. KEM. I agree entirely with the Senator from Oregon on that point.

If that is the correct interpretation—certainly it is the one I would give to the language—I wonder why it was found necessary to use 50 or 75 words to write that provision, because the Secretary of Defense could call those persons, who would be under him, to his office on any occasion and could counsel and advise with them, and it would be the customary and usual course for him to do so. So why go to the trouble and take the space in the bill to provide for setting up a war council, which admittedly is not a deliberative body at all, because in the final analysis the Secretary of Defense will make the decisions solely on his own responsibility.

Do I make my position in the matter clear?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; I think the point is very clearly made.

My reply is that the language referred to by the Senator is included at that point in the bill in order to make certain that the Secretary of Defense will take the necessary steps to obtain the advice and counsel of the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force. That is the purpose as I understand it.

Furthermore, let me say frankly that it is another example of a fear existing on the part of persons who have long exercised power, which now is going to be somewhat curtailed, that they are to be stripped entirely of their "say". In this instance the bill carefully provides that their "say" shall be advisory.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Oregon find in the bill any language requiring any meetings of the War Council?

Mr. MORSE. There is none. No such language is to be found in this bill, and none is to be found in the 1947 act.

Mr. KEM. Then it could hardly be said that it is made mandatory upon the Secretary of Defense to take counsel of the other members of the War Council, if he is not required to call them together on any stated occasions or on any occasions at all. Is that correct?

Mr. MORSE. That is correct. However, there, again, I think we have to rely upon the exercise of good faith, and I think we have to rely upon a clear expression of the intent of the Congress that he shall seek the advice and counsel of his so-called War Council.

Mr. KEM. That is why I arose—to ask the Senator from Oregon, who has a gift of precise and definite expression, himself, whether in his opinion the draftsman of this bill has clearly and precisely expressed that idea, or whether the language used is more or less nebulous, so far as stating exactly what the War Council is and what its purpose is and what its function is and whether it is to meet, if ever, and for what purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to be perfectly fair to the draftsman of this bill. Of course I am directing my attention to what I consider to be its major weaknesses. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that I think the language of the bill in respect to a great many details could be improved but I think the draftsman was confronted with the task of reconciling some of the compromises in the bill. This particular section is one which has been in operation for 2 years. I am advised that Secretary of Defense Forrestal had frequent meetings of this Council. He did carry out what I think is the manifest intention of Congress in connection with this section; and I have every reason to believe that his successors will do likewise. But I have no objection to more definitive language in the section, so as to make it perfectly clear that the Secretary of Defense on matters of major decision shall call his Council into meeting for advice and discussion, prior to rendering a decision.

Mr. KEM. Let me say finally that the impression which I receive from the section is that it is rather reminiscent of the statement of the Frenchman that "language is sometimes used to conceal thoughts."

Mr. MORSE. Yes. Let me say that the Council is the "cabinet"—I use the word in quotation marks—of the Secretary of Defense. To use the cabinet analogy, let me say that of course we do not require meetings of the President's Cabinet, but we know that a wise President has frequent meetings of his Cabinet.

Mr. KEM. Is there statutory authority for any meetings of the Cabinet?

Mr. MORSE. Not at all. My reference to the Cabinet is merely an argument by analogy.

Mr. KEM. That is exactly what I had in mind. For that sort of meeting, it is unnecessary to provide statutory authority, and if that is all it is, then it is surplusage. For my own part, I regret that such a provision should be inserted in the bill. From my point of view it lacks the definiteness which should characterize an act of Congress.

Mr. MORSE. I can only give the Senator from Missouri my hunch as to why it was put in, in the first place, in 1947. Then, as now, there was great fear among the military leaders of the Army, the Air Forces, and the Navy, that their advice and consultation would not be sought, and that their influence would be greatly weakened in the determination of policy. I have a hunch that the language was put in, in the first place, to placate that fear. The fear has proved under experience not to be well-founded, because as I say the meetings have actually been held. On the other hand, I want to make certain, and I am perfectly willing to make certain, that the decisions of the Secretary of Defense shall be based upon the facts presented to him by the spokesmen for the respective services. I have no objection to an amendment being adopted that would include mandatory language, if the Senator desires to offer such an amendment.

Mr. KEM. The Senator will agree, will he not, that under the present provision the Secretary of Defense can act with or without consultation, with equal legality?

Mr. MORSE. That is right. Mr. President, I now proceed with the discussion of my third amendment, which deals with the size of the Joint Staff. This staff is the working group of the Secretary of Defense, and of the Joint Chiefs in their capacity as assistants to the Secretary. The bill places upon the Secretary, and through him, the Joint Chiefs, responsibilities of the greatest magnitude. We intrust these officials with the security of our Nation. We give them billions of dollars to spend annually. We look to them to win wars. Yet we say that their staff shall be limited to 210 officers. I submit that such a limitation is both niggardly and at the same time wasteful. How was the figure arrived at? Why not 213, or 207? We all know that it was simply pulled out of the hat, and has not the slightest relationship to the amount of work to be done, or the responsibilities to be shouldered. Further, such a limitation is completely unnecessary. The Chief of each military department resists to his utmost the sending of extra officers to the Joint Staff, because it constitutes a drain on his top-flight personnel that he can ill afford.

Each chief has his own responsibilities, and he needs every officer of ability to man his own service. So he tends to resist detailing excessive numbers to the Joint Staff. Yet by fixing this unnecessary limitation we make it unlawful for the Secretary to meet sudden demands for more personnel when local emergencies occur, and we jeopardize the nerve center of our whole structure. In no other service do we restrict the number of officers who can be placed on staff and planning agencies to meet emergencies, and it is most unwise to do it for the Joint Staff, where inadequate personnel is reflected in poor performance throughout all three services. I have therefore recommended that this limitation be removed, and that we depend on the Secretary to settle this problem as the interests of our national security dictate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. Let me read the amendment and submit it, and then I shall yield.

I send my third amendment to the desk and ask that it be printed. It reads as follows:

On page 10, lines 11 and 12, strike out "to consist of not to exceed 210 officers and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORSE. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. In order to perfect the RECORD, I point out that on yesterday, in response to a question from me, the senior Senator from Maryland, chairman of the committee, said, on page 6759 of the RECORD:

I think the Senator from Massachusetts and I see eye to eye on that proposition.

Later, on page 6760, he said:

I should be glad to have the Senator offer an amendment to strike out the 210. While I would feel in duty bound not to support the amendment, I would not be displeased—and I hope I am not equivocating—if it were adopted.

Mr. MORSE. Would the Senator from Massachusetts like to join with me in my amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad to.

When the Senator from Maryland refuses to place a limit on the number of officers in the Army General Staff, in the Navy General Staff, and the Air Force General Staff, and we insist on putting a limitation on the Joint Staff, it looks as though with reference to unification, we were a little ashamed of ourselves about a limitation on the armed services as a whole.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

In the preparation of the bill and in the drafting of the administrative pattern which is set forth in it, let us not forget that we are building for years and years to come, so far as the military organization is concerned. Certainly here in the Senate we should consider very carefully the advice of the great present-day leaders of our Military Establishment which has been given to the committee and to the Secretary of Defense in the preparation of the bill. But let us be realists about it, too. They are human beings, and they must constantly be watched for special pleading. They must be carefully watched now, in the year 1949, for recommendations which unconsciously set forth their special interest in perpetuating a great deal of the status quo. I say that most respectfully to the great leaders of our Military Establishment. The opposition to the amendment which has just been offered reflects that very thing. It reflects the fear that the military leaders of the individual departments have that we are going to establish machinery which will limit them to a degree to which they, in their period of service, do not like to be limited, in operating the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. When we look at the long-time job which confronts us in connection with this bill we should be thinking of General X, General Y, and Admiral Z who will be in charge of the Army, the Air Force, and the Navy in the years to come. We must be willing, it seems to me, to stand up against the persuasive special pleading of present-day military leaders who, I think, must take their fair share of responsibility for the fact that in 1947 we did not do a good enough job with the unification bill because of the influence they exerted in placing restrictions in that bill which so limited the Secretary of Defense that he could not possibly carry out the great objectives of true unification. Likewise, I say most respectfully, in connection with the present bill, I am satisfied that present-day leaders of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force have influenced too greatly the wording of the bill, because they see the problems—and I say this in a most friendly way—in connection with the vested interests in their own departments in the Pentagon Building. So I am willing to take the position that although we should consider their advice and suggestions, we have to answer the question: Are we going to give the Secretary of Defense the authority that he needs to unify the armed services, unhampered by the type of restrictions which the Senator from Connecticut has testified on the floor of the Senate this afternoon he is willing to perpetuate in this bill?

That is the issue between us; and I am unalterably opposed to the position on that issue taken by my good friend from Connecticut.

Mr. President, my fourth amendment is with respect to the Munitions Board. I feel that its operations are seriously hampered by the fact that the Chairman does not have the power of decision. This was first brought to my attention by Mr. Eberstadt, and I agree with him. The duties of the Munitions Board are spread across a very broad field through nine different categories. The Chairman of the Board is essentially the Under Secretary of Defense for Procurement—a field in which I feel a far greater degree of centralized authority is needed. A glance at the duties of the Board, which begin near the bottom of page 11 and run to the top of page 13 of the bill, shows that the nerve center of our procurement and industrial planning for war, as well as peace, is located in the Munitions Board. Yet, this body has no responsible head. Its responsibility is diffused, and this diffusion is complicated by the fact that the other members of the Board are Under Secretaries or Assistant Secretaries who serve on the Board as a sort of additional duty. Further, their tenure of office is generally not very long. This combination produces a very loose organization, which is charged with staggering responsibilities. Neither the Secretary nor the President has a single individual to whom he can look to assume the full responsibility for sound procurement or realistic industrial planning. I therefore propose that this glaring weakness in the present structure be strengthened by fixing this responsibility where it obviously belongs—in the Chairman of the Munitions Board as an agent of the Secretary of Defense.

Further, I feel that Senate bill 1843 fails definitely to assign these procurement and industrial planning responsibilities to any tangible group. The present text of the bill locates these functions in the Munitions Board only indirectly, as the wording of lines 11 to 18 of page 11 of the bill indicates. These functions are vital to our economy as well as to our military security, and their performance should follow a pattern over the years, rather than the whim of an individual secretary. They require a vast amount of organization and specialization, and should have as much permanence as it is possible to give them. Further, they should be very closely tied in with the strategic and logistic plans of the Joint Chiefs. The wording of the bill does this only by implication.

I therefore recommend that the bill be amended by substituting for lines 11 to 18, on page 11 of the bill, the following:

It shall be the duty of the Board, under the direction of the Secretary of Defense and in support of strategic and logistic plans prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for—

And from there on I would retain the nine duties of the Board as they appear in the present text.

Mr. President, I offer that amendment, send it to the desk, and ask that it be printed as my amendment No. 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). The amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, my fifth and last amendment contains three pages. What it does is to drop the Secretaries of Army, Navy, and Air to Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force. The change requires numerous changes throughout the bill wherever the old term "Secretary" occurs, hence the length of the amendment.

Mr. President, I have spoken at some length on this suggestion before. It was this proposal, and my proposal in connection with amendment No. 1, which made it perfectly clear to me in the early stages of our hearings on the pending bill that I could never see eye to eye with a majority of the committee, because amendment 1 and amendment 5 I think are basic to true unification.

When the Armed Services Committee made perfectly clear that it was not going to adopt the principles and policies inherent in my amendment No. 1 and amendment No. 5, I recognized that there was very little contribution I could possibly make to the committee's work on the bill, because unless we could agree on what I think to be two of the most basic steps in unification, I was naturally not interested in seeking to perfect a bill which in my opinion would not do a good job.

Now, because I have so clearly stated my position in the RECORD on this point, I wish to say just a word about the amendment which seeks to do away with the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, and substitute therefor an Under Secretary of Defense for each one of those departments of the Military Establishment.

I think the amendment has great merit in it, that it has great psychological merit in it, because, as I see it, the real, first job, and I repeat, the most important first job, that has to be done in the Pentagon Building is to get men to accept the thinking that we have unified the services. It is a psychological job which needs to be done. We must eliminate those matters of form which have grown up in the military establishment on the basis of which there is a tendency for holders of title to usurp power.

If we retain in the bill a Secretary of the Navy, a Secretary of the Army, and a Secretary of the Air Forces, I say that psychologically we are defeating the whole purpose of unification. The amendment is in accordance with the principle of the Hoover Commission recommendation.

Mr. President, I digress just long enough at this point, since I have mentioned the Hoover Commission, to say that I think one of the great strengths of the report of the Hoover Commission is to be found in the fact that former President Hoover has cut through the red tape of form, and gone straight to substance in all of his recommendations. Thus with respect to this matter I wish to get away from as much of the tinsel and the title which make unification difficult of accomplishment as is possible. Tinsel and title in the Pentagon building have been among the chief contributing factors to the break-down of the unification law of 1947.

The argument has been made on the floor of the Senate that the titles are necessary in order to give the offices the prestige which they must have in order to attract men of sufficient competency to head up the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force civilian offices. I just deny that. I say it is an argument without merit. I shall never take the position that a call to patriotic public service is dependent, so far as the acceptance of the call is concerned, upon tinsel and title.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. I have heard part of the Senator's contribution to the debate, which has been very able, but unfortunately I did not hear all he said. I should like to ask the Senator if it is his firm opinion that the bill as now written, including the paragraphs on pages 3 and 4, would not bring about a unification of the armed services to such an extent that the Secretary of Defense would have full authority to determine what the objectives of the national defense organization of our country are and to provide the machinery to reach the objectives.

Mr. MORSE. If I thought so, I would support the bill, and I would not offer amendment No. 1. My amendment No. 1 seeks to modify most of what I think are the major weaknesses of the provisions starting in line 19, page 4.

Mr. MALONE. That is what I had reference to. The language beginning on page 3 seems to give the Secretary of National Defense the necessary authority in one breath, and then beginning with line 19, page 4, to which the Senator has already referred, following the word "but," pulls the punch, and the Secretary of Defense would remain just about as powerless as he is now.

Mr. MORSE. I completely agree, and my amendment No. 1 seeks to strike all the language after the word "proper" on page 4, line 19.

Mr. MALONE. I make the statement, Mr. President, and it is my firm opinion, that the bill we passed last year killed Jim Forrestal. In my opinion none of us understood that it did not provide for unification of the services. The bill was passed in 1947; I know we wanted unification. I was for unification, and I voted for the bill reported to the Senate, but we found later that it provided almost definitely that the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Air, could go to the President of the United States, and pay no attention to the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. MORSE. And they did.

Mr. MALONE. They did. Therefore Jim Forrestal was given an impossible job, and with his conscience and with his integrity, he literally worried himself to death.

What are we going to do? We have just seen a new Secretary appointed—a big, husky, perfect physical specimen of a man, with plenty of experience and plenty of guts. I made that statement on the Senate floor following his confirmation by the Senate. I am for him, and I am going to be for him just as long as he keeps those tugs tight, and keeps the reins in his hands, and works to establish two things—one, the objectives of a defense organization for this Nation; and, two, how to reach the objective in an emergency.

I was in the field artillery in the First World War, and had considerable experience in the last war as special consultant to the Senate Military Affairs Committee, in Alaska, the Aleutians, New Caledonia, Australia, New Guinea, and the South Seas generally. However, I do not know what we need to do the job, and I am venturing the opinion that no Member of this body does know; therefore we must have someone in complete charge whose job it is to tell us.

Then what are we going to do? Kill Louis Johnson with the same kind of legislation? We can do it, I will say to the junior Senator from Oregon, because Louis Johnson is conscientious and has the will to do the job.

It seems to me that no Senator can know what is necessary for national defense, what the objective is, or how to reach it, unless he himself were appointed Secretary of Defense and spent all his time as such Secretary, and since that is impossible we must have such from one authoritative source.

I say to the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon that I am for his amendment, and I hope that the Senate of the United States will not duplicate what we did in 1947 when we passed a bill which was supposed to provide for unification but in fact divided the services so that no one could supervise the job.

In this bill are mentioned certain functions and certain organizations which the Secretary of Defense cannot touch, when as a matter of fact, by the very wording of the paragraph following the word "but" on page 4, line 19, the items mentioned following that word pull every tooth out of the head of the Secretary of Defense when it comes to unification. From reading that language, unless there is language modifying that paragraph some place else in the bill, which I have been unable to find, in my opinion he cannot possibly do the job that we say in the first part of the paragraph he must do.

I think that we are right here and now proposing to pass on one of the most important pieces of legislation that will confront this body this session. We have presumably been building up our national defense to offset the aims of a certain intractable nation ever since World War II. We know that that nation has unification to say the least. Having that knowledge, let us not handicap those we put in top responsible military positions. I am for Louis Johnson as Secretary of National Defense as long as he is in there trying to do a real job—a job that has needed doing since the close of World War I. He works 20 hours a day. I am in a position to know that. Now if we pull the legislative foundation out from under him—and leave him in the same position that we placed Jim Forrestal, and worry him to death as we did Jim Forrestal, trying to do a job that we ourselves have made impossible, then the Senate and the Congress of the United States can take the blame.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Nevada very much for the contribution he has made to my discussion of particularly the first amendment. I do not think the Senator was present when at the beginning of my remarks today I said we have an opportunity to build a great monument to Jim Forrestal in the form of a unification bill that is a unification bill in fact. I respectfully suggested that the bill recommended by the committee would not be a deserving monument to Jim Forrestal, for the reason the Senator from Nevada has so well pointed out, which is, that it purports to give the Secretary of Defense unifying powers, but it so fences him in with restrictions that it is bound to harrass and worry and impede him so that I see no possibility of any Secretary of Defense, the present one, or Secretaries of Defense to come, giving to the American people the type of efficiency, the type of effectiveness, the type of economy which they are entitled to expect from their armed services if the security of the Nation is to be preserved.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Unfortunately I missed part of the debate yesterday, but I read the RECORD. I saw a reference made to securing votes by modifying the bill; that votes on the Senate floor to pass the bill could only be secured in that manner. Mr. President, if the Senate of the United States has reached the point where, in order to secure votes to pass a unification bill to protect the people of this country, to protect the boys and girls of the Nation whom we are drafting and have been drafting for the past year into the armed services, and whom we will draft immediately in the case of emergencies, then I say that is the greatest condemnation of this body that could possibly be pronounced on the Senate floor.

Mr. MORSE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. President, I was commenting on my fifth amendment, which establishes an Under Secretary of Defense for Air, an Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, and an Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, for the present Secretaries of those branches of service. I had made my first point in support of my amendment, namely, that if we are going to have unification in fact, we must take away the title that goes with these offices. I say by means of their titles alone, these officials by way of jurisdictional accretion, day by day and month by month and year by year tend to take unto themselves more and more prerogatives and more and more implied authority.

I wish some time some student of political science would write a treatise, Mr. President, on what I am satisfied is a direct relationship between the title that is given to an office and the building up of implied authority that seems to just ooze out of the title, until finally, like spreading molten lava, we have the official holding the title exercising an implied authority that never was intended when the office was set up. I say, Mr. President, that our Federal Government is permeated by what I call government by implication through titles. There is the psychological tendency on the part of people, both in the military services, in the civilian branch of government, in the Congress, and among our people generally, to assume that if Mr. X is Secretary of the Army, or Secretary of the Air Force, or Secretary of the Navy, why he just must have the power to do what he seeks to do.

That is not a matter of fancy, Mr. President. If we will but look we can see government by implication working every day all through our Federal set-up. I want to take these titles away from the Secretaries of the Army and the Navy and the Air Forces, so that we can serve clear notice on the holders of the offices and their staffs and upon the people within the armed services, and upon the people in the country, that when they deal with them they are dealing with Under Secretaries of Defense. I think this fifth amendment alone is absolutely essential if we are to implant in the minds of the personnel of the armed services and in the thinking of the American people the thought that we are adopting a program of unification in fact. Let us make it both in fact and in name. When we have an Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, an Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force, and an Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, we have unification both in fact and in name. We have unification stemming up to the head man, the Secretary of Defense, and we have cut out a great source of jurisdictional red tape which develops by the accretion of implied power around a title.

The Hoover Commission agrees with me, if I correctly read the language of its report. I do not mean that it necessarily agrees with my arguments, but it agrees with my recommendation. This is what the Hoover Commission report says:

> That the service secretaries be deprived of their privilege of appeal over the head of the Secretary of Defense; that they be directly and exclusively responsible to him; that the Secretary of Defense be the sole agent reporting to the President; that the service secretaries, to clarify their positions, be designated the Under Secretaries for Army, Navy, and Air Force.

I have not read a single one of the Hoover Commission reports which has not cut through form to substance. Although there may be some details of the Hoover Commission reports which are deserving of modification, I do not believe that there are many, and I certainly do not believe that this particular recommendation is one of them. Thus I am happy to go along with this recommendation of the Hoover Commission, as I expect to go along with practically all the others, because I can say that as of today I know of not a single recommendation of the Hoover Commission for the reorganization of the Government which has been made that I shall not support, unless some Senator on the floor of the Senate or some committee can present facts which I have missed in my analysis of the reports.

Thus I urge the most careful consideration, and the favorable consideration of the Senate, of my fifth amendment, which gives us Under Secretaries of Defense of the Navy, the Army, and the Air Force. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MORSE. In closing, I wish to say that I always feel that one cannot impress his sincerity upon people by merely asserting it. But because I know that some of the things I have said this afternoon in argument will not be appreciated by certain vested interests in the Military Establishment, and because I know that the positions I have taken this afternoon on some issues will unquestionably have their political repercussions also, so far as I am concerned, I close this argument by saying to all, friend and foe alike, that as a member of the Armed Services Committee of the United States Senate I have been motivated by but one desire, and that is to work for the best possible unification system for our armed forces. I believe, out of the sincerity of that motivation, that the five amendments which I have submitted would result in a greatly improved bill.

I agree with the junior Senator from Massachusetts that the obligation which is ours in connection with this piece of legislation is of sacred importance, because we must recognize now, before it is too late, that we are dealing with the lives of American boys. In my judgment, we are dealing with the potential danger of tremendous loss of life to millions of our citizens across the country should we be plunged into a third holocaust. Therefore, I say that we must rise above any immediate selfish interests of any vested group in our Military Establishment and take counsel with our own consciences, and satisfy ourselves this time, as we did not in 1947—and we paid a tremendous price for our dereliction of duty in 1947—that we are adopting a unification bill which will give to the American people the best possible protection to their national security that can be given to them by way of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the desire of the junior Senator from Oregon that his first amendment shall be the pending question?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, Mr. President. I offer my first amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 19, after the word "proper" and the comma, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "functions" on page 5, line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. ELLENDER obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield provided I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will not lose the floor.

The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ives	Murray
Brewster	Johnson, Tex.	Neely
Byrd	Kefauver	Pepper
Capehart	Langer	Robertson
Chapman	Lodge	Russell
Donnell	Long	Sparkman
Douglas	Lucas	Stennis
Ellender	McCarthy	Thomas, Utah
Flanders	McClellan	Thye
Graham	McFarland	Vandenberg
Hayden	McKellar	Williams
Hendrickson	Martin	Young
Hoey	Morse
Holland	Mundt

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. BRICKER, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, and Mr. SALTONSTALL answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must inform the Senator from Georgia that the request will have to be put in the form of a motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be so instructed. I may say this is the first time I have ever known of any matter in the Senate that a Senator could do on motion, that he could not do by unanimous consent. But I move that the Sergeant at Arms be so instructed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order to give unanimous consent, a quorum is required.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Chair state the motion? I do not think any of us know what we are voting on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will restate his motion.

Mr. RUSSELL. My motion was that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. FLANDERS. I am for it.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After a little delay, Mr. KERR, Mr. GREEN, Mr. HILL, and Mrs. SMITH of Maine entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KILGORE and Mr. WILEY also entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is now present.

CONSOLIDATED APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia appeared yesterday before the Committee on Rules and Administration with respect to a pending bill entitled "Consolidated Appropriation Bill." I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD my statement before the committee on that occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSOLIDATED APPROPRIATION BILL—SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 18—STATEMENT BY SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD, OF VIRGINIA, BEFORE A SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION, MONDAY, MAY 23, 1949

INTRODUCTION

Mr. Chairman, for the record, my name is HARRY F. BYRD, Member of the United States Senate from Virginia.

I am here to advocate a favorable report by your Committee on Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 "providing for the consolidation of the general appropriation bills."

With Senators BUTLER, BRIDGES, O'CONOR, KNOWLAND, GILLETTE, FERGUSON, and WHERRY, I am a sponsor of this resolution, and I wish at the outset to express my appreciation for the oportunity to appear before your committee in behalf of this resolution.

HISTORY

The history of this proposal dates back to the Seventy-ninth Congress, when Senator BUTLER and I introduced a resolution designed to reach this general objective. We knew the first measure was imperfect, but it served to stimulate thought on the subject.

Meanwhile we enacted the Legislative Reorganization Act requiring a legislative budget in terms of expenditures which brought sharply into focus the difference between appropriations and expenditures—one of the most confusing factors in the consideration of fiscal legislation. Dispelling this confusion is one of the problems this resolution, like its predecessors, seeks to reach.

With some perfecting changes, the resolution was reintroduced by Senator BUTLER and me in the Eightieth Congress when it took the designation of Senate Concurrent Resolution 6.

A Rules and Administration Subcommittee including Senator WHERRY, as chairman, Senator HAYDEN and Senator IVES held exhaustive hearings on the proposal after which the bill was amended to conform with technical suggestions made by the Government's three fiscal agencies, the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Accounting Office.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6 last year was unanimously reported by that subcommitte. Subsequently it was reported by the full committee without a dissenting vote. Unfortunately the Congress was adjourned before the resolution could be reached on the Senate Calendar.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 now before this committee is identical with the revised Senate Concurrent Resolution 6 of the last session of Congress which was given the unanimous approval of both the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration and its subcommittee. It may be significant to note at this point that the chairman of last year's subcommittee is now a sponsor of the resolution.

BACKGROUND

Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government of the United States is the biggest financial operation on earth and nothing is as economically important to as many people as the fiscal situation of this country. Yet, we attempt to finance vast domestic and world programs, projects and policies through legislative processes in which it is impossible to know whether Federal income and outgo are in balance until months after we have enacted the budget when the Bureau of the Budget puts the pieces together and makes the best estimate it can on the basis of the legislative history of a dozen or more appropriation bills.

Actually, under present procedure neither Congress nor the American public has an opportunity intelligently to analyze fiscal legislation. Most of the difficulty in comprehending budgetary action arises from confusing language and archaic procedure. In these days of multiyear programs, projects, and policies, an appropriation enacted in a year in which revenue is high may be spent in a year when revenue is low.

For instance, in the coming fiscal year 1950 we shall be spending some money we appropriated or authorized for expenditure last year and, perhaps, some we appropriated 2 years ago. By the same token, some of the appropriations we are enacting now may not actually be spent until fiscal year 1951, or later.

This situation is an important factor for consideration in the current moves to reduce current appropriations. Reducing appropriations which we are enacting now may not necessarily result in expenditure reduction in fiscal year 1950. The proposals to reduce appropriations do not reduce the amount of money available for expenditure in 1950 which is being carried over from appropriations in previous years. At the same time it is probable that at least 5 percent, and probably more, of all the appropriations bills we are enacting now will not be spent in fiscal year 1950. Thus, if all the cuts proposed in current appropriations bills were applied to that part of the funds which is to be carried over for expenditure in subsequent years, there would be no effect on expenditures in the coming year.

Thus we see there may be a vast difference between appropriations and expenditures in a given fiscal year. But, spending legislation is always considered in terms of appropriations, while revenue must be comparable to expenditures—not appropriations. There is no readily available facility for either Congress or the public to translate current and previous appropriations into terms of annual expenditures either by items or by totals. Deficits are determined by expenditures against revenue—not appropriations against revenue—in a fiscal year.

As Congress now passes spending bills under the present procedure it has no idea as to what the over-all total of either appropriations or expenditures will be. Under the system, the President submits a budget message requesting appropriations and revenue, and after that the budget picture is never seen again as a whole until after it has become the law of the land.

Congress breaks down the appropriation side of the budget message into a dozen or more bills each dealing with a group of activities. Each bill is handled separately by a different subcommittee in each House of Congress. They are brought in one by one for passage over a period of 6 months. They are not accompanied by an expenditure estimate. There is no way of telling what total appropriations or expenditures may be, and there is no way to compare the effect of action on the appropriation bills with the revenue situation.

It is impossible to consider the relative merit, importance, or cost of all appropriation items in view of the fiscal situation as a whole. The bills are passed as separate and unrelated pieces.

THE SITUATION

It is now conceded that our fiscal situation is serious. It is my opinion that it will grow worse before it gets better. I know of no Member of Congress who is satisfied with the information available to him with respect to appropriation bills. Under our procedure responsible officials, Members of Congress, and even members of the Appropriation Committees, sincerely differ by billions of dollars in their estimates of the budget total which we approve. In most instances all of their estimates are wrong.

With money available for expenditure authorized in nearly a dozen different kinds of appropriations, authorizations, debt transactions, etc.—some of which do not even appear annually in the regular appropriation bills—intelligent estimates are impossible in the existing conditions—the principal characteristics of which are absence of complete information, lack of adequate facilities for arriving at intelligent conclusions, obsolete procedure, archaic language, and utter confusion.

Even if all the funds we appropriate were accounted for annually in the appropriation bills which come before us, calculating the total through a dozen or more unrelated bills brought in over the duration of a whole session of Congress approaches the impossible.

And even if we could keep account of the appropriations we do not have the facilities for translating appropriations into annual expenditures. And, it is expenditures which must be calculated if we are to determine whether there is to be a deficit or surplus.

Even an expenditure calculation is virtually useless so long as it must be made separately on a dozen or more bills over a period of 6 months or more. It is the total expenditure which must be kept in balance with the revenue estimate.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 18

Mr. Chairman, the objective of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 now under consideration by your committee is to bring some order out of the fiscal legislation chaos just briefly described. The sponsors of the resolution do not contend that it is a complete cure-all, or a perfect panacea. But they do submit that its adoption would be a long step forward toward a much needed reform in our legislative process with respect to fiscal legislation. They contend that it would afford much more intelligent consideration of action on fiscal matters—and that is needed especially now at a time when our very best judgment on such matters is a critical requirement. They contend further that adoption of the resolution would result in simplification of budgetary action which is highly desirable for the benefit of the public, the executive branch, and the legislative branch, as well.

GENERAL SUMMARY

Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 would provide for a consolidated appropriation bill which not only would bring together into one law all major appropriations, but also would, in effect, control annual expenditures through legal limitations written into the same law on the amount of each appropriation which could be obligated in the ensuing year.

In addition committee reports at each stage of the legislative procedure would translate appropriations into terms of annual expenditures, including funds available from appropriations of prior years. These reports would show also the amounts being appropriated for expenditure in future years. They would be in indisputable tabular form, and each amendment would be registered not only against the item involved, but also in the total. This would keep both appropriations and expenditures current with the legislative process on a blow-by-blow basis, and develop information necessary to coordinate expenditures with revenue estimates.

Such reform would eliminate most of the sources of existing fiscal confusion, and it would be accomplished by a simple amendment to congressional rules governing consideration of appropriation bills. Under this resolution there would be no occasion for estimating what Congress has done about appropriations or expenditures. It would be in the law—in simple language—in black and white.

Until such a reform is accomplished, in my opinion, there can never be an accurate estimate of deficit or surplus. We are in urgent need of such a foolproof estimate at this very moment.

POLICY

The policy underlying this resolution is to amend the joint rule of the Senate and the House of Representatives contained in section 138 of Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, to accomplish the following broad objectives:

First, the simplification and clarification of Federal appropriation bills; and Second, to enable Congress to legislate intelligently and effectively toward a balance between expenditures and revenue by means of considering all major appropriation legislation in one bill and by extending legislative control over annual expenditures through statutory limitations on annual obligations.

PURPOSES

To recap the purposes of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, they are:

First, consolidation of all general appropriation measures into one general consolidated appropriation bill;

Second, statutory limitations on obligations against appropriations which would have the effect of controlling expenditures and keeping them within the revenue; and

Third, show by means of an informative table in the reports of the respective Appropriations Committees and conference committees on appropriations an itemized estimate of annual expenditures.

For the information of the committee, the resolution may be analyzed in more detail, as follows:

1. The resolution is in the nature of an amendment to the joint rule of the Senate and House of Representatives contained in section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

2. The resolution would be effective with the beginning of the second session of the Eighty-first Congress, next January.

3. The first principal purpose of the resolution would be to provide for the consolidation of all appropriations in one general appropriation bill to be known as the Consolidated General Appropriation Act.

4. Under terms of the resolution the consolidated appropriation bill may be divided into separate titles, each corresponding to 1 of the 12 or more regular general appropriation bills heretofore enacted, and it would permit consideration of the consolidated bill by titles at the subcommittee stage without interruption of the present subcommittee organization of the respective Appropriations Committees. And there is nothing in the resolution to prevent the various subcommittee chairmen from handling their title on the floors of the respective Houses.

5. Nothing in the resolution would preclude necessary deficiency and supplemental appropriation bills in addition to the consolidated bill, but a reduction in the number of such bills probably would result.

6. The resolution, in addition to the consolidated appropriation bill, supplemental, and deficiency bills, provides specifically for private act appropriation bills and for appropriation rescission bills.

7. The second principal purpose of the resolution is to fix within the general consolidated appropriation bill, supplemental and deficiency bills, limitations on funds available for obligation during the ensuing fiscal year, and to show what funds are available for obligation in subsequent years. The language in the resolution to accomplish this purpose has been worked out with the assistance of representatives of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Accounting Office who are here today. And I hope they will have an opportunity to state their approval of the language.

8. In connection with these limitations on obligations, the committee's attention is invited to the fact that the limitations are not to be—

(a) construed to prohibit entering into over-all contracts which would extend beyond the year, providing the contracts do not allow for delivery of property or services during the ensuing year in excess of the limitation on obligations for the year.

(b) are not to be construed to be applicable to appropriations for payment of claims certified by the Comptroller General.

(c) the limitations are not to be construed to be applicable to appropriations for payment of judgments.

(d) they are not to be construed to be applicable to amounts appropriated under private acts of Congress.

(e) the limitations are not to be construed as applicable to appropriations for payment of interest on the public debt.

(f) they are not to be construed as applicable to revolving funds or appropriations thereto.

All the foregoing exemptions are included in the resolution at the suggestion of the representatives of the fiscal agencies. They are more technical than fundamental, and they are made in the interest of administrative efficiency, or for the elimination of unnecessary bookkeeping.

Another principal purpose of the resolution is to provide Congress and the public with accessible information on annual expenditures by the Federal Government. This is accomplished by the provisions in the resolution requiring reports from the respective Appropriations Committees and conference committees on appropriations bills to include an informative table itemizing available appropriations and estimating annual expenditures from the appropriation items with totals in each case. A similar table will be required showing Government corporations' checking account transactions.

Both the provisions for limitations on obligations referred to in paragraph 7, and in the paragraph immediately above with respect to committee reports exclude public debt retirement transactions and trust funds. Trust funds are not considered by the fiscal agencies to represent Federal funds, and debt retirement is paid largely out of surplus revenue—when there is any.

Under provisions of the resolution the expenditure estimates in the reports are to be set up in tabular form. While the resolution does not require that the appropriation bill itself be set up in tabular form, it does not preclude such a presentation. As one of the sponsors I would welcome the consolidated bill in tabular form.

GENERAL APPROVAL

Mr. Chairman, for the record, I should like to quote from the report last year of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration which said:

"The desirable results of a consolidated appropriation bill are numerous and obvious. The undesirable possibilities connected with this objective were found to be as follows:

"1. Length of time required by the Appropriations Committees and the respective Houses in consideration of a consolidated bill.

"2. Necessity for the President to veto a bill containing all appropriations in the event he disapproved of one or more items.

"With respect to the first point, the committee believes that with the customary cooperation between the two Houses and their respective committees the time requirement can be met.

"With respect to the second point, the difference in desirability of the item veto for use in connection with a consolidated bill and for its use in connection with 12 bills is a matter of degree. In view of the controversial viewpoints with respect to the constitutionality of the item veto, the committee believes that the subject of the item veto should not be introduced at this time in the consideration of this concurrent resolution, particularly in view of the fact that fewer vetoes of appropriation bills may be expected since Congress has tightened up the rules prohibiting substantive legislation in appropriation bills."

The Rules and Administration Committee in its report last year said further—with respect to the provisions of the resolution limiting obligations—"the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Accounting Office testified that—

" 'The existing Federal bookkeeping and accounting procedures are not adaptable to control of expenditures on the basis of cash withdrawals from the Treasury without difficulty and additional expense to the Government.'

"On the basis of this contention, the committee requested the sponsors of the resolution, with the assistance of representatives of the fiscal agencies, to work out changes in the resolution which would bring its requirements within the scope of existing Government fiscal procedures for execution in the executive branch.

"This was done in the form of the amendment in the nature of a substitute which was drafted with the assistance of representatives of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, the General Accounting Office, and the Senate Legislative Drafting Counsel."

Mr. Chairman, Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 is identical to the substitute referred to, which was unanimously approved by both the full Committee on Rules and Administration and its subcommittee, last year.

Representatives of the Treasury, the Bureau of the Budget, and the General Accounting Office are here today. Since the bill amends the rules of the legislative branch, it is presumed they will not wish to be called upon to pass on the policy of the resolution. But I hope they may be given opportunity to testify that the provisions of the resolution do not conflict with fiscal procedures in the executive branch.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity to speak in behalf of this resolution. There are other sponsors who wish to be heard in its behalf.

In conclusion I should like to add that the objectives of this resolution have been endorsed as a long step forward in the right direction by such eminent authorities as the late Harold Smith, former director of the Budget, Dr. Fred R. Fairchild, of Yale University, Senator Styles Bridges, former chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Congressman Christian Herter, Mr. Carter W. Atkins, executive director of the Connecticut Public Expenditure Council. And I should like permission to file brief statements by these authorities for the record.

In addition the objectives of the resolution have the endorsement of a great many governors and former governors of the various States of the Union. I should like permission to file brief statements from some of them.

NEW SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I wish to digress for a few minutes from the pending business and address myself to the proposal for the construction of a new Senate Office Building. For the past 3 or 4 weeks the walls of this Chamber have echoed the ardent pleas of many distinguished Senators for economy. I can show them where, by not building the new Senate Office Annex, we can save about $22,000,000. We can also save an additional $1,500,000 that will be necessary in order properly to furnish the building. Last, but not to be overlooked, we can also save the taxpayers in the neighborhood of $1,100,000 per year in the upkeep of the building, and interest payments on the sum we will have to borrow in order to construct this edifice.

I am sorry the chairman of the Public Works Committee is not present. Under date of May 9, I offered a resolution in this body asking that the Architect of the Capitol and the Senate Office Building Commission suspend demolition and removal of the buildings and other structures on the land acquired as a site for an additional office building for the United States Senate until further study and action by the Congress.

I was promised by the chairman of the committee that the committee would look into the matter, but to this moment no action has been taken. I notice from press reports that bids have been received recently for the leveling of the approximately 80 dwelling units now located on the land in question, just across C Street from the present Senate Office Building. It is proposed to let a contract in the near future.

I suggest to the commission in charge of the matter that it cancel the letting of the contract to level the buildings. We have recently passed in the Senate a housing bill on the plea that there was a great housing shortage in Washington, and other parts of the country, and yet we are permitting the leveling of 80 dwelling units within a stone's throw of where I now stand. I think the dwellings should be permitted to remain until new homes are found for the occupants of those buildings.

Mr. President, I wish to devote a few minutes to the legislative history of this proposal. Ordinarily, when a public building is erected or is to be erected at Government expense, under the rules of the Senate, the proposal is first submitted to the Committee on Public Works. In this instance S. 723, Eightieth Congress, authorizing a study of the proposed Senate annex building was approved by the Committee on Public Works. An appropriation of $25,000 was authorized for that purpose. That bill was passed without a hearing of any kind, and became Public Law 169, Eightieth Congress. Later there were meetings of the Commission with reference to the building of the proposed structure. The Commission did not appear before the Committee on Public Works in order to obtain an authorization for its construction. No showing or justification was made. On the contrary, the Commission met, plans were proposed, and in the wee hours one morning last June, when the Senate was about to adjourn, a deficiency appropriation bill was brought into the Chamber authorizing and appropriating $1,100,000 for the purpose of purchasing the building site. In the same measure, $20,600,000 was authorized as the total cost of the building, and $850,000 was appropriated for the purpose of hiring architects and engineers to draw plans for the construction of the proposed structure.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I will gladly yield in just a moment.

Authority for erecting this structure will be found in the deficiency bill to which I have referred. I challenge any Senator to show one single line of testimony from anyone indicating the need or the necessity for the building. It is not to be found. I repeat, the authorization did not come from the Committee on Public Works, from which it should have originated. It will be found in the second deficiency appropriation bill of 1948—Public Law 785, Eightieth Congress—together with the appropriations of $1,100,000 and $850,000 to which I have just referred. The authorization for this building is legislative matter which was included in an appropriation bill, and I am confident that a point of order would have been made against it if Members of the Senate interested in the subject had been aware that it was in the bill.

I now yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I wish to preface my question by saying that neither the Senator from Louisiana nor the junior Senator from Virginia was on the Appropriations Committee when this deficiency bill, containing legislation, was brought to the Senate. Frankly, I did not know about it until it was published in the newspapers.

Mr. ELLENDER. Many of us were in the same situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Has the money already been expended for the land acquisition?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; it has.

Mr. ROBERTSON. How can we best move expeditiously to delay the start of the building and the moving of the families which the Senator says will be dispossessed in a city in which there is a housing shortage?

Mr. ELLENDER. The adoption of the resolution proposed by me under date of May 9, which is now before the Committee on Public Works, would accomplish that, but, up to the present moment, no action has been taken on that resolution. Of course there is another way to stop it, and I propose to take action in due time, namely, when a request comes before the Legislative Branch Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, of which I am chairman, for $20,000,000 plus to erect the structure.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator advise what the final cost of the building is estimated to be, including acquisition of the land, and everything necessary in connection with it?

Mr. ELLENDER. The estimated cost of the structure is $20,600,000. The cost of the land is $1,100,000. Let me invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the engineering and architect's fees alone will be almost $1,000,000.

While I am on the subject—the Senator anticipated me—I have a statement which was made by the architect of the Capitol with respect to the expenditure of the money previously appropriated by the Congress, namely, $1,100,000 for land acquisition and $850,000 for architect and engineering fees.

The following are the items included in the $1,100,000 expended up to May 10, 1949:

Appraisal of properties, $9,750.

Purchase of properties, $928,525.

Advertising, $360.

Miscellaneous, $270.

Total expenditure for the purposes I have just enumerated, $936,905.

Outstanding obligations:

Examination of property titles, $4,500.

Purchase of properties, $59,151.

Miscellaneous, $36.

Total obligations outstanding, $63,687.

Total expended and obligated to May 10, 1949, $1,002,592.

Unobligated as of May 10, 1949, $97,408.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I want to know what the underground trolley will cost.

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe that is included in a lump-sum figure and I do not have the amount. Nor did I try to ascertain what the garages will cost. We have garage space at present, under the terrace, for 214 automobiles, and in the new building it is proposed to furnish space for 200 more automobiles.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to proceed a moment, then I shall be glad to yield.

I should like to give an accounting of the $850,000 appropriated for the purpose of paying the architect and engineering fees. As I have said, this was appropriated in the second deficiency bill the day Congress recessed, on June 19, 1948, in the wee hours of the morning.

There was an item in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act of 1948, as I indicated, of $850,000. Of that amount there was expended up to May 10, 1949, for architectural and engineering fees, $347,345. Test borings on site, $4,075.

Lighting tests, $1,780.

Miscellaneous, $292.

Total expended up to May 10, 1949, for the items just indicated, $353,492.

Outstanding obligations:

Architectural and engineering fee, $573,155. That is in addition to the $347,345 I have just mentioned.

Lighting tests, $975.

Miscellaneous, $82.

Total obligations, $574,212.

Total expended and obligated to May 10 1949, $927,704.

There is a deficit of $77,704.

I now yield to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator understand that this million dollars, approximately, which has been spent in the acquisition of property, does not anywhere near cover the ultimate amount which it is expected will be spent to acquire property which will be needed by the Government around this building?

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that there is a move to buy a few more lots in the neighborhood, but I do not believe that the acquisition of those lots will cost more than $50,000 or $60,000, as I understand from a report submitted by the Architect.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand, the land acquired does not go half way across the block, and the most inexpensive property has been acquired. Will the Senator permit me to agree with him that this is a very good place to save the expenditure of $20,000,000 this year?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am glad the Senator is of that belief.

Mr. AIKEN. Because I have a feeling that the expenditure of the $20,000,000, as in most Government projects, will be only the start.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is not only the $20,000,000 I want to save, but it is the cost of upkeep. Stop and think of it. It is going to require $1,100,000 a year to operate that building and to pay the interest on the money to be borrowed to erect the building. Every Senator knows we do not have the money to erect the building. We are going to have to borrow every cent that is necessary to construct it.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me further agree with the Senator from Louisiana in his protest against turning the families in Schott's Alley out into the street, with nowhere to go. After the Senate has expressed so much sympathy for people who lack places in which to live, it seems to me very poor taste to turn these folks from their very humble homes into the street with nowhere at all to go. I know that is so, because one of them has come to me and asked if I would not help find him a place to go, because so far he has not been able to find any place.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have received many such requests, and I wish to say that I think it is shameful that the great arm of the Government is now being used to put those people out of their homes with no place to go. The officials are not trying to find any places for them, and those people are being ordered cut by the court.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator is telling the truth, I know.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I am in thorough accord with what the Senator is saying, and I wonder if he has devised some plan whereby this appropriation can be stopped.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I indicated a moment ago, the money so far appropriated, in the amount of not quite $2,000,000, has been spent and obligated. The amount needed to erect the building remains to be appropriated. It was authorized in a deficiency appropriation bill during the Eightieth Congress, and I understand that an effort is to be made to appropriate $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950 to start it. I further understand that the Commission plans to get bids in July for construction of the building.

If the Senate can take concrete action early on my resolution, that will be the best procedure. It will accomplish the purpose. In the resolution I am asking that the proposal to contract with someone to level the buildings which are now on the site be dropped. Let us not disturb those buildings for some time. Because of the shortage of houses in Washington suitable for dwellings, the buildings will be put to good use until such time as others are erected to take care of the present occupants.

To answer further the distinguished Senator from Virginia, when the request is made before the subcommittee of which I am chairman for the $10,000,000, it is my purpose to go into detail and ascertain the necessity for the building. Congress has never been furnished the justification, to this moment. The record is silent on the subject, and no one has appeared advocating this expenditure. I believe that at some time soon the Senate should be furnished evidence to show why the building is necessary.

Mr. BYRD. As I understand, the plan of the Senator would be to fight the proposed appropriation.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. And attempt to secure the passage of his resolution suspending the work.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. It might be well to go a step further and offer a resolution to cancel the authorization.

Mr. ELLENDER. That could be done, but I would not see any point in doing it now.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator knows I was chairman of the Rules Committee for about 6 or 7 years, and as chairman of that committee I had charge of the allocation of office space in the Senate Office Building. I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that if the proper economy were shown in the use of that space, in other words, if Senators were prohibited from having more office space than they required, and certain committees having more office space than was required, had to give it up, there would be ample office space in the present office building, in the judgment of the Senator from Virginia, to do the work of the Senate. I entirely agree with the Senator. The Senator from Virginia has three rooms, and has many visitors, representing a State immediately adjacent to Washington. As the Senator knows, there are quite a number of offices in the Senate Office Building which could be used for other purposes.

Mr. ELLENDER. I propose to point that out.

Mr. BYRD. I am in thorough accord with the Senator. I think he is undertaking a fine work, and it is one in which I wish him great success.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, as I indicated a moment ago, whenever any Government bureau appears before the Congress to ask for an appropriation of funds to build any kind of a structure, a justification must be made, else the request will fall on deaf ears. Every Senator knows that. Yet when it comes to building for the Senate no justification whatever is presented. First, an appropriation of $25,000 is made to make a study of the proposal and without any further ado the Senate authorizes the erection of the structure without a scintilla of evidence presented to any Senate committee in justification thereof.

I do not believe there is an acute or urgent need for the proposed space. Our only problem here is inefficient management and utilization of the space we already have, as has just been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD.]

There is a common misconception that most Senators are struggling along with three rooms for offices. As a matter of fact, only 30 Senators have three-room suites. According to information given me by the Rules Committee the remaining Senators have four, five, and six rooms each, including rooms assigned them in the Capitol, and excluding committee rooms.

I have a summary of existing office space and its assignment which I wish to present to the Senate. Five Senators have six rooms. Twenty-six Senators have five rooms. Thirty-five Senators have four rooms. Thirty Senators have three rooms. The total rooms assigned are 328 in regular suites in the Senate Office Building, 31 detached rooms in the Senate Office Building, and 31 rooms in the Capitol, or a total of 390 rooms assigned to the 96 Senators.

If the total number of rooms presently assigned to Senators were equally divided among the 96 Senators, each would have four rooms, and there would be six rooms left over.

I realize, of course, that quite a few Capitol rooms assigned to Senators are not occupied by office personnel, but by dividing the total number of rooms assigned to Senators, less one for each Senator, into the total number of employees that Senators' offices say they have, I find that the average number of people per room is two and seven-tenths. That does not sound overcrowded to me. I have yet to see a room in the Senate Office Building or in the Capitol that cannot accommodate three people, and many rooms can accommodate more.

One of the purposes of the new building is to give each committee chairman a suite of five rooms for his own office staff. Let me point out that at the present time three chairmen have six rooms, eight have five rooms, three have four rooms and one has three rooms.

The 15 standing committees have 52 rooms and 124 employees, an average of 2.4 employees per room. Bear in mind that 11 committees have large-sized committee rooms. I admit there are a couple of committees that are overcrowded, but there are several others with a surplus of space. I can think of one committee, the Finance Committee, for instance, that has one large committee room, and four office rooms, with only four employees, or less than one employee per room.

Mr. President, I should like to show the Senate what is proposed with respect to this new building to be erected. I wish Senators would listen to this. The new building is contemplated for the use of a mere handful of people. I will list them: 15 Senators who are chairmen of standing committees, and their office staffs; the staffs of the 15 committees, and 4 subcommittees; the Vice President and his staff, and the employees of the Legislative Council. Now that is the personnel to be provided for in the new building and nothing else. In other words, if the plans are followed through, then in order for a Senator to be able to secure office space in that building he will have to be chairman of a committee. That is the plan.

I realize that there will also be space for press and radio people, for the telephone exchange, the page school, and a few others, but this building is not being constructed for them. It is not their space needs that dictate this expenditure. This building, I repeat, is being built for the use and occupancy of a grand total of 377 persons. My office force obtained that information by adding the present staff of the 15 Senators who are now chairmen, and the present or projected staffs of the committees, and other activities that will occupy the new building.

The Appropriations Committee will have space for 22 employees. I have allowed 10 employees for each of the other 14 committees, a total of 140 employees, although their current strength is less.

With respect to subcommittees, provision is made in the new building to accommodate employees of four subcommittees, as follows: The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, 19; Finance Committee, 8; the Committee on the Judiciary, 7; the Committee on Rules and Administration, 12. Or a total of 46.

With respect to committee chairmen and their office employees—and I obtained this information from each chairman's office—the total number is 135, including the 15 Senators. Vice President and his staff, 8. Legislative counsel, 15. Provision for joint committee staffs, 11. The latter figure is an arbitrary one. No specific provision is made for joint committee offices, but I am informed the space will be available if desired. That is a grand total of 377 persons to occupy that building.

Each of the Senators will have a suite of five rooms for himself and his staff. Except for Appropriations, Foreign Relations, and Finance, each standing committee will be furnished a committee room with seating capacity of 90 persons, an anteroom, and four office rooms. The Appropriations Committee will have a committee room, seating 250 persons; 3 subcommittee rooms, one seating 150 persons and the other two seating 100 persons each; 4 anterooms; 1 conference room; and 4 office rooms. Foreign Relations and Finance will each have a committee room, seating 120 persons, 1 anteroom, and 4 office rooms for the staff.

Provision is also made for offices for 4 subcommittees, 11 rooms for joint committees if the space is desired, and an auditorium seating 500 persons, with facilities for recording hearings, moving-picture projection, broadcasting, and television. It would appear that we are going to have some entertainment around here if the plans materialize.

In addition, there will be two large special hearings rooms, each about the size of the caucus room in the present Senate Office Building. There will also be accommodations for a press room and for various service personnel.

The plans also call for a physical-therapy department. That sounds like a clinic, but its principal feature is a swimming pool measuring 40 feet by 25 feet 6 inches. We already have one in the Senate Office Building for the accommodation of Senators.

There is to be provided also a two-level garage that will take care of approximately 200 cars. As a matter of fact, one-fourth of the net square footage of the building is taken up by the garage. Inasmuch as the existing garage built for Senators can accommodate 214 cars, and there are only 96 Senators, I am unable to understand the purpose of providing additional garage space.

There will also be a cafeteria seating about 700 persons, and, of course, private dining rooms with waiter service for Senators. The plans also include a dining terrace for Senators on the roof, but I understand that somebody decided that was too much, and it is being eliminated. But that provision for the dining terrace was contained in the original plans. Mr. President, with all of this additional space, I am wondering of what use will be our spacious caucus room and the many beautiful committee rooms now located in the Senate Office Building. I presume that use will be found for them, all of which will further aggravate an already top-heavy governmental machinery.

Let us contrast this proposed Senate Office Building with two Federal office buildings; one that is being erected for the General Accounting Office and one that is proposed for the Bureau of the Census. Listen to the comparisons, Senators. The authorized cost of the Census Building is $11,500,000. The gross square feet, 700,000. Office personnel for that space, 5,000. Cost per gross square foot, $16.42. Cost per person, $2,300.

The General Accounting Office: The authorized cost is $25,400,000. Gross square feet, 1,891,000. Office personnel to be housed in that office building, 5,575. The cost per square foot is $13.43, and the cost per person is $4,556.

Listen to the figures for the Senate Office Building: The authorized cost will be $20,600,000—and remember, that is for the structure only; it does not include the cost of the land; it does not include the cost of the furnishings. The gross number of square feet is 626,000; personnel for the building, 377; cost per gross square foot, $32.90, in contrast to $16.42 for the Census Building and $13.43 for the General Accounting Office. The cost per person to occupy the building is $54,655, in contrast with the cost per person in the United States Census Building of $2,300, and the cost per person in the case of the General Accounting Office of $4,556.

In order to further illustrate the extravagance to which we go, Senators have only to step out on the north porch of this very building and note the high-grade lumber which is being used to make a tool shed for the contractor who is going to repair the roof on the Capitol building. He is using grade A lumber. He does not have to worry about the cost. His fee is fixed. Look at the fence being erected around that space. It is built of fine plywood. I do not know what that costs, but some time ago I bought some plywood which cost me 55 cents a square foot. I do not know what this particular plywood costs, but whenever the Government is involved no one looks at the cost. There are many examples of extravagance within sight. I ask Senators to look at them. The finest kind of lumber is being used to build tool sheds and fences so that the roof of the Senate Chamber may be repaired.

As I have pointed out, if the present plans are carried through it will cost $54,655 for each of the 377 persons to be accommodated in the new building. Its operation will cost the American taxpayers $11,400 a year for each of the 96 Senators in addition to the huge sum now being spent to give Senators office space. How do I get those figures? I arrived at them in this manner: The $22,000,000 to be spent on construction, if applied toward our national debt, would reduce the amount of interest our Government is paying by $550,000 a year, figured at 2½ percent on the bonds. The new building will cost about $550,000 a year to operate. Therefore, if the new building is not constructed there will be a total saving to the taxpayers each year of $1,100,000, which amounts to $11,400 for each of the 96 Senators.

As I have just indicated, the building is being erected for the purpose of housing the chairmen of the 15 committees of the Senate and 4 subcommittees, together with their staffs. In other words, when we vote for the construction of the new building we are adding $11,400 a year to the cost of operating each Senator's office.

The Congress has already appropriated a total of $1,975,000 for this building. Most of this money has been spent. However, $1,100,000 was used to purchase the site for the new building, and that is not wasted. The other $875,000 has been spent or obligated for plans and architectural and engineering advice.

Perhaps some of that can be recovered. In any event, I do not believe that the Senate should be influenced by the possible loss of $875,000 in determining whether or not the new building should be constructed. As I have stated, by eliminating this project we can save in 1 year approximately $1,100,000, which would more than offset the $875,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter addressed to Mr. David Lynn, Architect of the Capitol, by Eggers & Higgins, architects. The letter is dated May 28, 1948. It shows how the building is to be built and how the space is to be occupied.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 28, 1948.

Mr. DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LYNN: Complying with our agreement for preliminary plans for the proposed new Senate Office Building, to be constructed on the westerly half of square 725 and facing on First Street, B Street, and C Street, we are reporting to you as follows:

The site, approved by the Senate Office Building Commission for the proposed new building, is located directly East of the present Senate Office Building.

The building is to be a seven-story structure above grade and two stories below grade, with a marble exterior of an architecture in the classic style in harmony with the existing buildings on Capitol Hill. The general dimensions of the building are 249½ feet east and west by 447 feet north and south. The building will be approximately 9,000,000 cubic feet in content and will be connected with the present Senate Office Building by suitable transportation and pedestrian tunnels.

The set of preliminary drawings herewith submitted consists of the following:

1. A site plan.
2. Basement-floor plan.
3. Ground-floor plan.
4. First-floor plan.
5. Second- and fourth-floor plans.
6. Third- and fifth-floor plans.
7. Sixth-floor plan.
8. Seventh-floor plan.
9. Sections.
10. Elevations.
11. Details and isometric.
12. Perspective of exterior.
13. Alternate plan of special hearing rooms and dining room.

PRIMARY PURPOSE OF NEW BUILDING

As planned, the primary purpose of the proposed new building is to house the 15 standing committees of the Senate, including office accommodations for the chairman and employees of each standing committee, and the senatorial staff of the chairman of each standing committee.

We have been informed that the committees are inadequately accommodated in the Capitol and Senate Office Building. Under the proposed plans, committee activities will be adequately housed and centralized in the new building.

It is understood that the committee rooms in the present Senate Office Building, when vacated by the standing committees, are proposed to be made available for use by subcommittees, and office rooms vacated are to be made available to increase the office accommodations of the Senators continued to be housed in the existing building.

Under our plans, provisions are made as follows:

Committee on Appropriations:

One large standing committee room, with rostrum, and seating capacity of 250 persons. Approximate size of room: 60 feet by 70 feet by 21 feet high.

Three subcommittee rooms, each with rostrum; one with seating capacity of 150 persons and two with seating capacity of approximately 100 persons each. Approximate size of rooms:

One, 32 feet by 78.5 feet by 21 feet high.

Two, each 31.4 feet by 66 feet by 12.5 feet high.

Four anterooms (one for each committee room).

Five office rooms for standing committee chairman and his senatorial office staff.

Eight office rooms for 22 committee employees, with capacity for future expansion.

One conference room.

Committee on Foreign Relations; Committee on Finance:

Each of these committees to be provided with the following:

One large standing committee room, with rostrum and seating capacity of 120 persons. Approximate size of room: 32 feet by 55 feet by 21 feet high.

One anteroom.

Five office rooms for standing committee chairman and his senatorial office staff.

Four office rooms for committee employees with capacity for future expansion.

Other 12 standing committees:

Each of the other 12 standing committees to be provided with the following:

One standing committee room with rostrum and seating capacity of 90 persons. Approximate size of room: 31 feet by 52 feet by 23 feet high.

One anteroom.

Five office rooms for standing committee chairman and his senatorial office staff.

Four office rooms for committee employees.

General lay-out of standing committee quarters: As indicated in the foregoing, the plans provide a committee room for each of the 15 standing committees of the Senate, equipped with a rostrum of sufficient size to accommodate the full membership of the respective standing committees; an adjoining anteroom of sufficient size to accommodate the full membership of the respective committees, seated at a conference table; 4 office rooms, adjoining each committee room, for the committee employees.

The plans also provide an office for the chairman of each of the standing committees, and four adjoining offices for the chairman's senatorial office staff.

Subcommittee quarters: No provision is made in the new building for subcommittee rooms except the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations. It is understood, as previously indicated, that it is proposed to make the committee rooms in the present Senate Office Building available for the use of the other subcommittees.

Provision is, however, made for office accommodations for the employees of 4 subcommittees, as follows: Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, 19 employees; Committee on Finance, 8 employees; Committee on the Judiciary, 7 employees; Commitee on Rules and Administration, 12 employees.

Joint committees: No provision is made in the new building for committee rooms for any of the joint committees of Congress. Provision is made, however, for a minimum of 11 offices for employees of these committees, if such assignment is desired.

Auditorium: The plans provide for an auditorium, with seating capacity of 500 persons, and with facilities for recording hearings, moving-picture projection, broadcasting, and television.

Special hearing rooms: The plans provide for two large special hearing rooms, each about the size of the Caucus Room in the present Senate Office Building.

Quarters for Vice President:

The plans provide 4 rooms, located in the corner of the building nearest to the Capitol, for the office of the Vice President.

Office of the Legislative Counsel:

The plans provide 15 office rooms, 1 file room, and a library for the Office of the Legislative Counsel. The accommodations are such as to provide amply for future expansion of this office.

Miscellaneous activities:

Other activities, for which accommodations are planned in the new building, include the following:

Accommodations for: The press, the periodical press, radio, and television.

A cafeteria seating about 700 persons, with kitchen and other auxiliary services; also, dining rooms with waiter service.

Folding room.

Stationery room.

Barber and beauty shops.

Mechanical and maintenance shops.

Shipping and receiving facilities.

Storage and locker facilities.

Mail receiving and distribution center.

A telephone exchange adequate for needs of Congress.

A physical therapy department.

School for pages.

Automobile parking facilities for approximately 200 cars under cover.

Estimates of cost

Acquisition of site: As per estimate of Architect of the Capitol on an assumed condemnation basis, for the acquisition of all privately owned property in the westerly half of square 725	$1,100,000
Construction and equipment of building: The cost of the building including tunnels, architectural and engineering fees and other incidental expenses, but exclusive of the cost of furniture and furnishings, is estimated at	$20,600,000
Total estimated cost of site and building	21,700,000

Additional land considered desirable to acquire: It is suggested that consideration be given to the acquisition of plot No. 852 (24) with a 15.5-foot frontage on C Street. This would permit a thorough circulation of service alleys in the easterly half of this block, and thus avoid the inevitable congestion that would result from a cul-de-sac.

Very truly yours,

EGGERS & HIGGINS,
OTTO R. EGGERS.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, if Senators feel that our space needs are sufficiently urgent to warrant new construction, it would seem to me to be a wiser and more economic expenditure if we were to use the money, or a portion of it, to build a comfortable, functional, and adequate building—but not ornate or luxurious—for the use of the 81 Senators who are not chairmen of committees. The present building could then be used by the committees and the chairmen, and surely it would prove adequate for their needs.

To my mind, there is no evidence of urgent need for any new construction at all. I think it is a waste of money. I think the Senate can do very well with its existing space. I am confident that a comprehensive survey would show that present space can be redistributed so as to effect better utilization.

If, however, the Senate determines to go ahead with the proposed building, I can only say that this construction is not a matter of public necessity, or in the public interest, but is a patent luxury, in which the Senate indulges itself only because there is no check on our actions such as we exercise over other Federal establishments. I can imagine the storm of protests which would arise if some other department of our Government were to come before the Congress at this time and ask for $21,725,000 to build accommodations for 377 persons, at a cost per person of $54,655.

Mr. President, I again urge consideration of my resolution so that a thorough study can be made of the needs for the proposed structure.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words about the pending amendment, which has been offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. Let me say that if he had not offered it I would have offered it, because I believe very strongly in the amendment.

I think the Senate should understand that this amendment, which would strike out everything beginning with the word "but" in line 19 on page 4, over to line 3 on page 5, does nothing but strike from the bill language which is already in the existing law. We may approve or disapprove of the existing law. I am not discussing that point; but all that this language does is to reiterate what is in the existing law. So it cannot have any additional effect from a practical standpoint; but it does have a very fundamental effect from a symbolic standpoint, and it does raise a question of principle.

If Senators will turn to page 4, they will see that the duties of the Secretary of Defense are listed in three paragraphs. The third paragraph provides that one of his duties shall be—

> Taking of appropriate steps, including such coordination, transfers, and consolidations as may be necessary, to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, health, research, and personnel, and in such other fields, as he may deem proper—

Then, instead of a period, there follows the word "but."

Yesterday I asked the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], chairman of the committee, what the reason was for this provision. He said—and you can see it for yourself in yesterday's RECORD—that the reason for the provision is that it would not have been possible to get the votes to report the bill from the Armed Services Committee unless this provision were in the bill. The Senator from Maryland indicated that he himself was not particularly in favor of it. I asked him why those who wanted it were so much in favor of it. He said that they were very enthusiastically for it. I asked him why they were for it, and he did not answer. Today I have tried to find out why those who want to repeat this piece of the existing law in the bill want to do so, and no Senator arises to answer my question.

Mr. DOUGLAS rose.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois, if he wishes to answer my question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, I will say that in due course of time, after he shall have completed his address, I shall be very glad to state why some of us, at least, are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad that someone is to give me some substantive reasons for it, in addition to the reason that it is necessary to have it in the bill in order to get votes. The only argument made so far has been that the votes to pass the bill could not be obtained unless this piece of the existing law were repeated. That is what is called an ad hominem argument. It is a very powerful argument to get the votes to get something through. But it is not an appeal to reason, and it does not give a rational motive for putting in this language, which repeats the language of the existing law, and thereby nullifies the language in section 3.

My reason for wishing to have this language taken out of the bill is that it does violence to the spirit of unification of the armed services. It seems to me that the United States must unify its armed services, or she will perish. We simply do not have the inexhaustible economic resources and we do not have the inexhaustible resources in young manpower of military age to be able to afford proliferation and triplication and quadruplication and all the other things that are indulged in at the present time in the armed services. We must build up a loyalty to the armed forces as a whole, and not build up unification as sort of a stepchild, something of which we are ashamed.

Whenever we bring in a unification bill with so many limitations that it actually fosters separatism, we make a grave mistake. It is all very well to be respectful of the feelings of some of the gentlemen in the Pentagon; but when the shooting actually starts, if we misuse our young manhood and waste it because we have not organized the military machine according to the teachings of science, we pay a terrifically high price for our failure to organize our military machine in the way that we should.

The language of this bill is harmful, of course, from an economic standpoint. We know that out of each Federal Government dollar 34 cents goes to the Pentagon and 16 cents goes to foreign aid. Thus, 50 cents, one-half of each dollar of the total Federal expenditures, is being spent because of the dangerous nature of the world situation. I think it has been estimated that a person with an income of $2,000 pays $68 in taxes to the Pentagon. I submit that if the money that is being spent for the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard were spent in the way that you, Mr. President, spend your own money or in the way that I spend my own money, very, very large sums of money indeed could be saved. However, of course, a government always operates on a much more lavish footing, and for that reason we do not expect such savings.

But certainly if we are going to hold the Secretary of Defense responsible for economy, and then if we are going to put into this bill a provision prohibiting him from moving personnel from one branch of the armed forces to another, we are going to make it very difficult for him to save any money.

Of course it is important to save money, but it is even more important to save manpower, to save lives. What would be the effect of the philosophy of this kind of a bill in the tragic event that our country were to become involved in another war? Of course the effect would be to freeze the manpower of military age into water-tight compartments, so to speak. If the nature of war were to change from one period of time to another—which often happens—we would be stuck with a commitment to have a certain number of men used in a certain unit or a certain branch of the armed services, for we would be prohibited by law from shifting them around. I cannot conceive that that would ever operate as against the Marine Corps, because of course the Marine Corps is used in a land war or in a sea war or in an air war. So no matter what might happen, the Marine Corps would never be obsolete or out of place. Of all the branches of the armed services that do not need this kind of protection, I would put the Marine Corps at the top of the list, because of the versatility of the Marine Corps, for the marines are trained for an air war or a sea war or a land war. So no matter how the nature of warfare may change, the marines will always be in demand.

But I can conceive of a type of operation in which the entire stress of the war might be naval and the major battles might be on the sea. In that event, would it do any good to have millions of men doing squads right on the land because of the requirements of some musty old act of Congress? Of course, Mr. President, all of us perceive the absurdity of such a situation.

I remember very well that during World War II, in the spring of 1942 a very large percentage of the young officers were taken out of the Army, in order to build up the Air Force. That was the right thing to do; it was the smart thing to do. The German submarine campaign was being waged very successfully at that time; we were utterly unable to get our divisions across the ocean. We had to win the air war. So we took a great many of the young lieutenants out of the armored divisions and perhaps out of the infantry divisions, for all I know, and put them into the Air Force, and thus built up the Air Force. Then the Air Force struck a tremendous blow, a wonderful blow. The Air Force was never turned back by enemy action in any part of the world, and our Air Force won the air war.

Then we come to the spring of 1945, when the United States Army was beginning to run out of men for the Infantry. At that time there was a change of policy and increments for the Air Force were stopped, and a policy of funneling into the Army the men who had been intended for service in the Air Force was begun. I suppose some of those men did not like that change in policy. Of course, Mr. President, if we are to run a war on the basis of personal likes and dislikes, we never get very far.

The war in Europe came to an end before it was necessary to apply that principle on a very large scale. But I give that illustration to point out the advantage of having the benefit of great fluidity between the armed services, so as to be able to supply the manpower where it is most needed, and not to have men marching around, training for a type of warfare that will not be fought. Efficiency in our armed forces shortens a war and avoids casualties; it saves lives. A policy based on a proper regard for the realities of the situation is the most humane type of policy we can have.

In the war in Africa it was common talk about the British Eighth Army—I cannot vouch for the accuracy of the details—that replacements which arrived there for the Coldstream Guards had, under the rules of the British Army, to be assigned to the Coldstream Guards, and could not be assigned to the King's Own Scottish Borderers, even though the King's Own Scottish Borderers had been almost shot to pieces and were desperately in need of replacements. That was said to be one of the reasons why the British Army had so much trouble.

That illustration, Mr. President, points out the common sense and the reality of this amendment.

Much that is in the pending bill today flies squarely in the face of what should be our main objective. It is a repetition of the mistakes of the old law; it is a gesture of defiance to the whole principle of unification. It is an example of hostility to the idea of economy and efficiency in the conduct of military affairs, either in war or in peace.

For that reason, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. President, one more word before I take my seat: I understand that the able junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] will obtain the floor in a few minutes. I wish to pay a very real, heartfelt, and sincere tribute to him, not only for his accomplishments in civilian life and for all the intelligence and courage he has shown here since he has been a Member of the Senate, but, of course, above all, for his gallant and magnificent war record. He is here now both as a Member of this body, a former combat soldier, and a wounded veteran. All of us would listen to him with respect if he did not have that background; but with that glorious qualification, whatever he says will go straight to our hearts and will receive our very highest consideration.

However, let me say that the loyalty and devotion of the Senator from Illinois to the Marine Corps are no greater than are mine. I was brought up on the traditions of the Marine Corps; one who was very close in my family circle spent his whole life in the Marine Corps. I think the Marine Corps is so good and has such a hold on the admiration and affection of the American people that it does not need a lot of artificial legislation to protect it. I think we are not doing the Marine Corps a real service if we say that it shall be tied down to amphibious warfare. If that had been the case in the war of 1917–18, I do not suppose our country could have had those glorious Marine divisions in France in 1917 and 1918.

It is impossible to tell what the nature of war is going to be; we cannot tell whether it will be amphibious or airborne or armored or of some other character. There is only one thing we can tell, and that is that we are always going to need human bravery to win a war, and we are always going to need shock troops; and so long as we need human bravery and so long as we need shock troops, we are going to need the Marine Corps. So the Senator from Illinois is not looking at anybody who wants to hurt the Marine Corps. I not only do not want to hurt them, I want them to prosper. I do not want to see them reduced to the status of guards at navy yards or ship's complements, or anything of the kind. I think they perform an essential service in our national defense picture as shock troops, and there comes a time in every war when it is impossible to do without shock troops.

So I do not think the Marine Corps needs this type of protection, any more than I think the Army engineers needed to get a special exemption in the Hoover reorganization bill. I think the Marine Corps needs it much less. I think it is much stronger than the Army engineers, because, while the Marines do not have the contact with river and harbor projects the Army engineers have, they have something much more precious, and that is a strong hold on the affections and the confidence and the admiration of the American people.

It seems to me it would be very wastefull and very thoughtless and very bad in the long run if we should ever develop the idea that the welfare of any one of our services is inconsistent with the best interests of economy and efficiency in the conduct of war. So that, Mr. President, is the reason why I am supporting the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. I hope it will be agreed to. I yield the floor.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1949

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou source of all life and power, do Thou impart to blind, mortal eyes the abiding assurance that Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee. Stir up our hearts and wills, that we may attain more of self-mastery; help us to think and do only those things that will leave no regrets in our hearts, and no pain in Thine.

Do Thou guide the world, for it is failing to see; deliver it, for it is in bondage; and save it, ere it is too late. Above all, give us a larger sympathy for all men, and a holy ambition to be of service in a needy world.

In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

There was no objection.

USE OF INFERIOR HARDWOODS IN MANUFACTURE OF PAPER

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the first white paper made from scrub oak. It is a product of the laboratories of the University of Florida at Gainesville. Please let me emphasize its importance. Scrub oak is one of a number of so-called inferior hardwoods which occupy hundreds of thousands of acres in this Nation, and for which at present there is practically no market value.

If it is possible to develop production techniques which will permit the use of the inferior hardwoods in the manufacture of paper, wallboard, and plastics, a market will have been created for the product of these hundreds of thousands of now near worthless acres. In addition the ever growing shortage of timber products in this country will be alleviated.

The University of Florida is carrying on much work of importance in this and similar fields, and it is felt that industry can shortly take advantage of its developments. I would like to point out that this is the same institution and part of the same staff which developed the proximity fuze, one of the three most important weapons of the last war.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

[Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an excerpt from the broadcast of William Hillman over the Mutual network in relation to the tragic and most unfortunate death of the late Secretary of Defense James V. Forrestal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Truman program and include an editorial on the same subject from a great Democratic paper, the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

PRICE DECLINES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a brief table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. I was very much interested, Mr. Speaker, to notice in the United States News and World Report a chart showing that you can get five meals now for what four cost in July 1948, and I shall include the list in my remarks. It shows that prices of commodities are coming down. They have been ever since last December. I wonder what Mr. Keyserling, one of the President's chief economic advisers, thinks now, after he advocated the regimentation of everything and considered all the time that prices were going up. He was a bull in price market, wanted the Government to build steel mills in January, he said they would continue to advance. The opposite has been the case. He wrote the President's economic report in January, and it is as wrong as anything could be. He not only wrote the President's report as an economic adviser but he helped write the report of the joint committee of House and Senate, which all the Democratic Members signed. The Republicans refused to do so for they knew it was wrong. I wish you would just read this table of prices and see how far he was out of line in saying cost of living was going up and up, he is the President's chief economic adviser. It seems to me if they would appoint somebody else than Mr. Keyserling it would be better for the country, the President, and the people.

This chart shows how table prices are coming down:

How the food dollar has stretched

[Retail prices in Washington, D. C.]

	July 1948	April 1949
Hamburger, 2 pounds	$1.32	$0.86
Pork chops, 2 pounds	1.71	1.30
Sliced bacon, 1 pound	.79	.49
Butter, 1 pound	.93	.69
Milk, 2 quarts	.40	.34
Eggs, 1 dozen	.72	.61
Bread, 3 loaves	.39	.36
Flour, 5 pounds	.49	.48
Coffee, 1 pound	.51	.47
Sugar, 5 pounds	.48	.44
Apples, 3 pounds	.35	.38
Oranges, 1 dozen	.49	.29
Potatoes, 10 pounds	.52	.53
Green beans, 2 pounds	.35	.29
Carrots, 1 bunch	.13	.07
Cabbage, 2 pounds	.15	.10
Tomatoes, 3	.19	.19
Onions, 1 pound	.08	.04
Total	10.00	7.93

The prices of all commodities are less today than 6 months ago. This is now a buyer's market. It pays everybody to shop and take advantage of it. Keyserling is wrong, all wrong.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from Dr. J. A. Cosgriff, of Olivia, Minn., relative to the utilization of doctors in the armed services.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include certain newspaper articles and editorials.

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNISM

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d of January 1949, the day the Eighty-first Congress convened, I introduced what is now H. R. 83, a bill to outlaw the Communist Party.

We are facing the most serious menace of all times—international communism. The Communist Party in the United States should be outlawed because its activities have become so dangerous to the welfare of our citizens that it can no longer be allowed to shield itself behind the protective bulwark of American law. In reality the American Communist Party is not a political party in the true sense of the word but is an arm and an agent of a foreign power—the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. This is clearly demonstrated by the history of the Communist Party in the United States.

The ultimate aims of the Communist Party in this country are to overthrow the American form of government and the democratic way of life. The Communists would establish in the United States a totalitarian dictatorship which we have already seen imposed on many countries of the world.

By praising the revolutionary teachings of Lenin and Stalin, the American Communists practically admit advocating the use of force and violence for attaining their aims. Because of its loyalty to the Red flag of international communism and the Soviet Union, the Communist Party in the United States is a fifth column, and thus a threat to American security. Prime Minister Paul-Henri Spaak, in a speech before the UN Assembly on September 28, 1948, in Paris, stated:

> You make us uneasy because in every one of the countries represented here you maintain a fifth column, alongside which Hitler's fifth column was but an organization of boy scouts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Kansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on States' rights.

AMENDING THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 643)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (Public Law Numbered 806, Eightieth Congress) is amended by deleting the words 'direction and control of its Board of Directors' at the end of the said section and substituting therefor the words 'supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary").'

"SEC. 2. Section 4 (h) of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: 'The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation: Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: Provided further, That no refrigerated cold storage facilities shall be constructed or purchased except with funds specifically provided by Congress for that purpose: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities: And provided further, That to encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. Insofar as practicable, in effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized and priority shall be given to commodities easily storable and those which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials. The determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling and the determination of which materials are strategic and critical shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall, to the extent approved by the Munitions Board of the National Military Establishment, be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act; and when transferred to the stock pile the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purchase of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile. Nothing contained herein shall limit the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire, hold, or dispose of such quantity of strategic and critical materials as it deems advisable in carrying out its functions and protecting its assets.'

"SEC. 3. Section 9 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 9. DIRECTORS, ADVISORY BOARD: (a) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), subject to the general supervision and direction of the Secretary. The Secretary shall be an ex officio director and shall serve as Chairman of the Board. The Board shall consist, of six members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In addition to their duties as members of the Board, such appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary, except that any such member who holds another office or position under the Federal Government the compensation for which exceeds such rate may elect to receive compensation at the rate provided for such other office or position in lieu of the compensation provided by this section. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present.

"'(b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Not more than three of such members shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each ninety days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings.'

"SEC. 4. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 edition, 661).'

"SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended—

"(a) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the word 'jurisdiction' a comma and the following: 'without regard to the amount in controversy,';

"(b) by striking out the fourth sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless (1) it shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, or (2) in the event that the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued, the suit shall have been brought within three years after the disability shall have ceased or within six years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, whichever period is longer. The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead, by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit.'; and

"(c) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'except that (1) any such suit against the United States based upon any claim of the type enumerated in title 28, section 1491, of the United States Code, may be brought in the United States Court of Claims, and (2) no such suit against the United States may be brought in a district court unless such suit might, without regard to the provisions of this Act, be brought in such court.'

"SEC. 6. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"'USE OF WORDS "COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION"

"'(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Commodity Credit Corporation" or any combination of the same, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.'"

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The committee of conference recommended that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment and that the House agree to the same.

In general the conference substitute follows the language of the House amendment. Except for clarifying changes, the differences between the conference substitute and the House amendment are indicated below.

The House amendment provided that the members of the Board of Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation would be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and serve at his pleasure. The Senate bill provided that the members of the Board of Directors would be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Both the House amendment and the Senate bill provided for an Advisory Board. The conference substitute retained the language of the House amendment with respect to the Board of Directors of the Corporation, but modified the provisions relating to the Advisory Board so that appointment of the five members of the Advisory Board would be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the members of the Advisory Board would serve at the pleasure of the President.

The House amendment modified the provision in the present Charter Act which prohibits the Corporation from acquiring real property or any interest therein in such a manner that the Corporation could rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business, or acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing and discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interest of the Corporation. The Senate bill provided that such authority could not be used for storage for cotton, tobacco, and refrigerated cold storage. The conference substitute contains the language of the House amendment and the following proviso with respect to refrigerated cold storage:

"Provided further, That no refrigerated cold-storage facilities shall be constructed or purchased except with funds specifically provided by Congress for that purpose."

The conference substitute would permit the Corporation to lease refrigerated cold storage facilities but would prohibit it from constructing or purchasing such facilities except with funds specifically provided by Congress for that purpose. This limitation on the construction or purchase of refrigerated cold storage facilities is not intended to prevent the Corporation from making replacements of machines and equipment, repairs or improvements necessary to operate and maintain leased cold storage facilities.

Both the House amendment and the Senate bill contained a provision, included in the conference substitute, which provides that before the Corporation could acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage facilities for any commodity, it must determine that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate. It is understood that the Corporation, in its determination of the adequacy of storage space "in the area concerned", will give due consideration to marketing and storage practices employed by private agencies in the case of the particular commodity involved. For some commodities, especially those which are largely consumed on or near the farms which produce them, the "area concerned" must of necessity mean the immediate area in which the commodity is produced, because it is not customary or practicable to store the commodity in areas remote from points of origin. For other commodities a different situation prevails. In the case of cotton, as an example, the "area concerned" could well mean the entire cotton producing belt. The whole cotton marketing system, as well as the freight rate structure, is built around the fact that cotton moves for storage toward the ports and consuming mills at no additional expense to the grower.

Wool, as another example, normally is stored in the consuming areas of the Northeast, far removed from the heavier producing areas of the West.

This fact has been recognized by the Corporation in the operation of its cotton loan and purchase programs. Where threatened or confronted with total local cotton stocks in excess of local storage capacity, it has been the practice of the Corporation to "reconcentrate" sufficient loan or purchased stocks to provide storage space for the remainder of local cotton storage demand. Such "reconcentrated" cotton has been moved to available cotton storage facilities en route to ports of exportation and domestic consuming areas so that, under the railroad cotton rate and "transit" structure, the cotton could be reshipped to consuming destinations without loss in transportation costs. This practice—common among private cotton marketing agencies—recognizes the economy of utilizing available storage capacity along routes of normal movement, as opposed to the waste involved in providing additional local storage capacity which will not be substantially utilized year after year.

In its 1948 cotton loan program, the Corporation applied this principle in inaugurating its "receiving agency" arrangements, under which the Corporation "receiving agent" would receive the cotton from the producer, and, without delay, provide the producer with full benefits of the loan program. Such cotton was placed under railroad bills of lading, consigned to available cotton warehouses located along authorized railroad routes to seaports and domestic consuming areas. Under this procedure, the railroad bills of lading, initially used in lieu of warehouse receipts in consummating the loan, are later exchanged for insured warehouse receipts issued by the warehouses to which the cotton is consigned. This procedure has operated to the satisfaction of all concerned. It permits prompt use of the loan procedure by cotton producers, and maximum economical utilization of available cotton storage facilities.

The House amendment contained a provision with respect to the storage of grain on farms which provided that the Corporation shall make loans not to exceed 17½ cents per bushel of the estimated crop to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements made by the Corporation and the growers. The Senate bill contained no similar provision. The conference substitute follows the language of the House amendment except that it eliminates the condition that the loans not exceed 17½ cents per bushel of the estimated crop.

The provision for loans to grain growers for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage does not intend that the Corporation (1) shall be limited in any way in utilizing other authority contained in its Charter to assist farmers including other than grain farmers by loans or other means in providing adequate storage facilities; (2) shall look exclusively to the proceeds of price support loans or purchase agreements received by the grower for the repayment of the loan to the grower for storage facilities; (3) shall be restricted from making loans available to growers for storage facilities through banks and other established lending agencies; and (4) shall be required to apply the full amount of the proceeds of any price support received by a grower against the loan made to the grower for storage (on the contrary, it is contemplated that the Corporation would provide for repayment of the loan over a period of time).

Both the Senate bill and the House amendment contained provisions permitting the Commodity Credit Corporation to exchange agricultural commodities for strategic and critical materials produced abroad. The Senate bill placed these provisions in section 4 (h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act. The House amendment set them forth as an amendment to the Act approved August 11, 1939, entitled "An Act to facilitate the execution of arrangements for the exchange of surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States for reserve stocks of strategic and critical materials produced abroad". The conference substitute places these provisions in section 4 (h) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act and follows the language of the provision in the House amendment except that there was added thereto the words "easily storable", contained in the Senate bill, in the description of the agricultural commodities which shall be given priority in exchange for strategic and critical materials, and there was also added a provision contained in the Senate bill that strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation shall be transferred to the stock pile "to the extent approved by the Munitions Board of the National Military Establishment". In placing the authority for the exchange of agricultural commodities for strategic and critical materials in the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, as did the Senate bill, the term "agricultural commodities" has the meaning ascribed to it in Section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
MIKE MONRONEY,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is practically the House bill that passed the House by a vote of 326 to 52. As nobody has asked for time, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAMBLE) there were—ayes 158, noes 28.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAY, ALLOWANCES, AND PHYSICAL DISABILITY RETIREMENT FOR MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4591) to provide pay, allowances, and physical disability retirement for members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Public Health Service, the Reserve components thereof, the National Guard, and the Air National Guard, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4591) providing pay and physical disability retirement for members of the uniformed services, with Mr. RABAUT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Friday, May 20, the Clerk had read through line 4 on page 1 of the bill.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, on Friday when the Committee rose we had barely begun to read the bill. I feel that there is a preliminary statement I should make at this time.

The first is that we are concerned with our ability to attract and retain the type of men we need in the armed services. I may point out that prior to the war when commissions in the Regular service were tendered to honor graduates of schools they were invariably accepted. Rarely was there a vacancy. This year 1,000 such commissions were tendered and thus far only 11 have been accepted. Those two facts alone, I believe, indicate the situation which exists in reference to our ability to attract men from the honor graduates who are tendered a commission in the Regular service.

The other day I went over in quite some detail the number of resignations which we have had in the service. The fact is that of those men who were integrated into the Regular Navy since 1946, 15 percent have resigned. I appreciate the statements which have been made here to the effect that there are a great many men who have applied for return to extended active duty and have not been accepted. That situation does exist. There is a large number of them. But the acceptance of those applications does nothing to solve the problem which confronts us. It is not a case of securing men on a temporary basis to go on extended active duty. We have to attract the kind of men we want and retain them in the proper age distributions. It does no good for us to have men on temporary duty so far as the career service is concerned.

This bill provides a career compensation plan. We want to attract men who are under 25 years of age and who are willing to go into the service for the purpose of remaining there, we hope, for the full active period of 30 years. Unless and until we can do that, our Military Establishment will remain upon a temporary basis. I believe you will agree that that is a very unhealthy situation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. What the gentleman says is also true with reference to the enlisted man. Since the war we have enlisted over 1,000,000 men. The reason they do not reenlist is because there is not enough attraction in the future life of a soldier for them. This bill will correct that situation.

Mr. KILDAY. That is true. I am coming to the question of enlisted men.

There has been concern expressed on the floor of the House with reference to the enlisted men. I have noted that there is a great deal of confusion with reference to what this bill does as to the enlisted men. First of all, may I say that the committee has received hundreds of letters from men in the enlisted ranks as well as in the officer corps. At first there was a good deal of confusion as to what the bill provided. Radio commentators and newspaper columnists have publicized what they claim to be discrimination against the enlisted men. It answered those letters, and I believe we have been able to convince the enlisted men that under this bill they are given a most attractive career.

In addition to that, the Hook Commission was composed of three outstanding businessmen and one educator, and that was the Reverend John Cavanaugh, president of the Notre Dame University. Father Cavanaugh was primarily concerned with the sociological provisions of the bill and the manner in which it would affect the young men, and the moral standards which would apply in the service. He appeared before our committee and wholeheartedly endorsed this bill. He stated that he had been primarily concerned with the welfare and the interests of the enlisted men.

A great deal of confusion has arisen over the provision of abolishing family allowances. I hope that I may have your attention while that is discussed, because there is great confusion among the membership as to that provision. It does not affect the compensation of the enlisted men so far as pay allowance for quarters and for subsistence is concerned. By that I mean it does not affect them adversely, but it does give them a very substantial increase.

At the present time quarters allowance is drawn by only the three highest grade enlisted men, the three highest grades of noncommissioned officers. At the present time those allowances are $31.50 for subsistence and $37.50 for quarters. Under this bill, we increase the quarters allowance for the first three grades to $67.50 a month, an increase of $30. In addition we provide that the first four grades will hereafter be entitled to quarters allowances, and when a fourth-grade man has served for a period of less than 7 years his quarters allowance is $45, but when he has served 7 years his quarters allowance goes up to $67.50.

What does this mean? It means that the married enlisted man who has heretofore had a total in allowances of $69 under the provisions of this bill is going up to $99, so that there is that substantial increase.

The opinion seems to prevail on the part of some that the family allowance has some connection with this provision. It does not, even with the abolition of the family allowance, which is not a portion of this compensation, but is a gratuity that was instituted during the war to provide for the family when the man who was supporting them went into the service. Under the provisions of this bill, any man above the bottom three grades, with four dependents or less, will draw more money even though the family-allowance law is repealed.

Now the people that we are worried about; the fact that we have 150,000 single men who are claiming dependents because under the Dependents Allowance Act, the family Allowance Act, it does not have to be a wife and children, but it extends to parents, brothers and sisters and in-laws. Do you realize that we have one private who is now drawing family allowance for 14 people? He is a private in the Army drawing family allowance for 14 people. If you are going to have a career plan where men are willing to pursue that career, you are not going to be able to be paying a man about half for long service, and for important service, of what you are paying a man who is rendering very relatively unimportant service, but you are paying him because of the number of children or brothers and sisters that he might have. We have a corporal with 12 dependents, a wife and 11 children, who is drawing $280 a month in family allowance. That is in addition to his pay, quarters, subsistence, and clothing. In cash he draws $400 a month. The total value of his pay is $508 a month. We have a private with 9 dependents, a wife and 8 children, total allowance $220; a private with 14 dependents, 5 class A, wife and 4 children; 9 class B, one parent and 8 brothers and sisters, total family allowance $285. This is the phase of the family law which is abolished by this bill. During the war the family allowance was absolutely essential and thoroughly justified. It was something that had to be done in morality and justice, when you were taking men into the service who had families and there was no one to support them, but can it be contended that on a career compensation plan this can be continued? I submit that it cannot.

Now, on the family-allowance provision, somebody asked me to yield, and I will yield at this time. I have another point I want to make.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will yield, under what conditions does the soldier draw the quarters allowance? In other words, if he is overseas does his family get the quarters allowance?

Mr. KILDAY. Unless they are occupying Government quarters, they get it.

Mr. LANHAM. But if the soldier himself and his family are occupying Government quarters they do not get that allowance, or the subsistence allowance?

Mr. KILDAY. They get the subsistence.

Mr. LANHAM. They do get the subsistence? Does the family get that even if the soldier is overseas?

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. Would it be possible to repeal the family-allowance provision at the end of the enlistment period instead of at the end of 6 months, because it seems unfair that a man who has gone into the Army depending upon getting that family allowance should have it withdrawn arbitrarily.

Mr. KILDAY. I agree that that is one view of it. The other view is that the man who enlisted prior to July 1, 1946, has a contractual right to draw this family allowance until the termination of the enlistment which he accepted prior to July 1, 1948, and in this bill we protect that. Some of those men went in for 6 years. So long as they serve, under that enlistment, they will continue to draw it under this bill because we gave them an absolute contract to pay them. But as to those who went in after July 1, 1946, who went in under the provisions of law then existing, it was understood that it would terminate at any time the war was declared over, plus 6 months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. As the law now exists and in the Family Allowance Act of 1942 there is a provision that it shall terminate 6 months after the war is declared to have terminated, so if we do not do something to revise the pay scales, such as we have done in this bill, to bring these men with four dependents or less up to something comparable to what they are getting now, or more, you face the prospect of having all of these families find themselves with no family allowance because of the termination of the war. So those who are concerned about the families must remember that that is the situation.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SIKES. I wish my distinguished friend would explain this saving clause which states that by the passage of this bill no one shall draw less than he is now drawing. It seems to me that if that is followed out, you will have two pay scales in effect and a great deal of confusion. Will the gentleman straighten that out?

Mr. KILDAY. That is the provision in the bill, and it is not an unusual provision. I think we have had grandfather clauses in legislation from the beginning of the Government. So that is provided, with the exception of this family allowance provision.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUTTON. With respect to the two cases the gentleman presented, where one man has 14 dependents and another 8, that does not occur all the way through the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps. In a case like that, does not the gentleman believe that if we cut out this contract we have offered them, of family allowances, pretty soon we are going to have pitched into our lap compulsory military training?

Mr. KILDAY. No; I cannot agree with the gentleman on that. I handled the bill on the floor last summer when we had the Selective Service Act up, and I still have some scars from that fight, too. I think we are going ahead pretty nicely now. If we get our pay scales correct, we are going to be able to get them.

Mr. SUTTON. I agree with the gentleman, we need a pay raise, but I am disagreeing with him on the way of bringing it about, which I hope to tell the gentleman about a little bit later.

I have another question in regard to enlistment. When men are taken into the service with dependents in that number, does not the gentleman believe that is the fault of the recruiting officer and not the fault of the family-allowance provision?

Mr. KILDAY. I would not undertake to defend it for a minute. Of course, since September of last year no recruit has been accepted with any dependents. That has ceased. Before the war, no one except those of the first three grades could marry without permission, and if they did, they were subject to be released from the service. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. I think the gentlemen of the committee have done a very good job trying to meet this problem, because it is a real problem. Here is one criticism, or suggestion, that I have to make. I note that as you drew the first bill there was a proviso in it to give those who were presently in the Army and came in after 1946 the benefit of the provisions of the law until their enlistments expired.

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand the present law you give them the option of being discharged in the event their allowances are decreased.

Mr. KILDAY. That is right.

Mr. CARROLL. That is correct?

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. I would like to have you consider this: If you permit them to be discharged—let us assume a man has some children and he is going to be reduced in his allowance, and he wants to go out. You are moving now into a period where there is some unemployment, and I do not think it is quite fair.

Mr. KILDAY. I am certain the gentleman would agree with me that that would only be postponing the agony because if the gentleman will permit me to make this point, if you institute the higher pay scales and on top of that he draws more allowance, sooner or later some day the family allowance is going to go out and then you have the situation more aggravated because the reduction is more.

Mr. CARROLL. May I ask the gentleman how many men are in after 1946 that this might possibly affect?

Mr. KILDAY. I am sorry, I cannot give you the figure. I may have that in my file, and I will try to look it up.

Mr. CARROLL. You see my point on that. In the original bill that you drew you made such a provision and then the committee voted it out.

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. I think you ought to give some protection to these men until their period of enlistment expires.

Mr. KILDAY. There are many things in this bill that the committee is responsible for, because we thought they improved the bill. We were amazed to see how much money was going out on bases other than for responsibility and services performed. And when you get $314,000,000 a year, sooner or later you are going to have to get out from under that load, and if you postpone it you postpone the agony because it is going to be there when you reach that point. This was our considered judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an additional question?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. Can the gentleman tell me, as to those men who came in after 1946, what was their period of enlistment, on the average?

Mr. KILDAY. I think it was 3, 4, and 6 years.

Mr. CARROLL. If you had some men in for 3, 4, and 6 years, do you not think it would be more equitable that those men, having come in for a 6-year period after 1946, be protected, inasmuch as they came in with certain inducements? To cut them off now seems to me to be inequitable. I think the position of the committee originally, giving them protection, was sound.

Mr. KILDAY. The committee never took that position. That was the bill which I introduced.

Mr. CARROLL. Then I commend the gentleman for the bill that he offered.

Mr. KILDAY. I was willing to be convinced of my error and I hope the gentleman will be.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. In connection with this question of the removal of the family allowances, I think it should be remembered, and it may be the gentleman has already given the figures of the amount of the family allowances withdrawn by this bill, annually, that the amount involved is $314,000,000. To offset that, based upon the same number of personnel that are in the services today with the added increase in basic pay of $314,800,000, and also added an aggregate of $142,000,000 in quarters allowances makes a difference in favor of the enlisted man, both from basic-pay increases and from added quarters allowances of $143,000,000 more than that same group of people are receiving today.

Mr. KILDAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. HÉBERT. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to clarify that particular section to which he is addressing himself. That is Public Law 625, title I, section 101. I will read the specific language of the law so that there will be no doubt in anyone's mind as to when the pay allowances can be determined.

Section 101 reads:

> The dependent or dependents of any enlisted man in the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps or the Coast Guard, including any of the retired and reserved components of such services, shall be entitled to receive monthly family allowances for any period during which such enlisted man is in the active military or naval services of the United States on or after June 1, 1942.
> (1) During the existence of any war declared by Congress and the 6 months immediately following the termination of any such war, or
> (2) During a period of enlistment or reenlistment contracted by such enlisted man prior to July 1, 1946.

In other words, under the provisions of section 1, I think the gentleman has pointed it out, but I want to reemphasize it, according to the language of the statute, no further legislation is needed in the event we would not even pass this pay bill and that a family allowance may be cut off at any time under the terms of this particular act.

Mr. KILDAY. Whenever the President sees fit.

Mr. HÉBERT. Whenever the President sees fit, he can terminate the pay allowance.

Mr. RIVERS. Or when the Congress declares the emergency over.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. Did the gentleman state that in his judgment, taking the over-all provisions of the bill, it will encourage enlistments?

Mr. KILDAY. I do not have the slightest doubt of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Would the gentleman assure the House that there was no purpose on the part of the committee, or of anyone that you know of, to discourage enlistments?

Mr. KILDAY. No, indeed, sir. Those of us who had to deal with compulsory service legislation appreciate that situation. May I say to the gentleman that everybody who has responsibility for maintaining an adequate armed force endorses this bill. When we began our hearings James Forrestal, who was then Secretary of National Defense, appeared before the committee and endorsed it, and urged its passage. After he was succeeded by Mr. Louis Johnson, Mr. Johnson wrote to the committee and urged the passage of the bill.

On yesterday the President addressed the following letter to the Speaker of the House:

> THE WHITE HOUSE,
> Washington, May 23, 1949.
> Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
> The Speaker,
> House of Representatives.
> MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: For some time I have been concerned over the personnel situation in the armed forces. We are having great difficulty in attracting and retaining the caliber of personnel, both officer and enlisted, on a career basis which is essential to our fighting forces.
> The Career Compensation Act of 1949 now pending before the House of Representatives will, in my opinion, provide the necessary incentive to follow a career in the armed services.
> I feel that this legislation is a most important part of our defense program, and that it will do much to strengthen our national security in this critical period. Consequently, it is my hope that the House will see fit to take favorable action on this legislation.
> Sincerely yours,
> HARRY S. TRUMAN.

All responsible officials of the Government say that it will do that, and without this legislation it is difficult, if not impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] has again expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

First I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] for the manner in which he has explained the rather intricate precedents involved in the legislation under consideration. As a member of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which drew up the appropriations bill for the National Military Establishment for fiscal 1950—and recently passed by this House—I am thoroughly familiar with the fiscal problems of the armed services in particular and with the Government in general. I am also thoroughly cognizant of the burdens of the taxpayer.

The appropriation bill for the armed forces passed by this House carried over $14,000,000,000 for fiscal 1950. Of that amount about a third is for the pay and allowances of personnel. We are now considering a bill which would increase these sums by $360,000,000. It is a large item and one that requires careful scrutiny and precise justification.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] has presented facts as to the situation in which the armed forces find themselves today in their efforts to attract and retain men of the ability required by our fighting forces. These facts add up to one inescapable truth—steady deterioration unless the Congress takes remedial action.

None of the services is currently having any difficulty keeping its enlisted ranks filled. A curious situation when we are asked to raise their pay—but the reason is not hard to find. Technological advances in all the services now require highly trained, skilled men. To meet this demand, the services maintain numerous schools which absorb more personnel as instructors and maintenance crews. And what is the result? These trained men acquire the skills that equip them to command good jobs in industry. The services constitute about as fine a training plant as there is in the country. And then we lose them because we have no planned compensation on a career basis. The turn-over is costly.

The situation with regard to officers is similar. We spend enormous sums to maintain service academies only to lose too large a part of the product through resignation at the end of their obligated service. Since we cannot attract college graduates we take what we can get and then educate them at Government expense. The services are in receipt of many applications for active service; of these most are qualified only in certain fields.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] last week told the House that he participated in the preparation of the Pay Act of 1922, the principles of which obtain today. With his characteristic forthrightness, he told you he thought that act faulty, 27 years ago. Since that time there have been piecemeal changes, until today we have a hodgepodge schedule of compensation devoid of career appeal.

We have under consideration a bill which did not originate in the minds of the generals and admirals. The career compensation plan was developed by a commission composed of three hard-headed businessmen and the president of one of our leading universities. As employers and taxpayers they know the value of responsibilities discharged and services rendered. They know the value of competent management and the false economy of mediocre management coupled with the high turn-over of personnel.

I do not endorse lightly an additional expenditure of $360,000,000 next year. But I tell you in all sincerity, it is my firm conviction that it would be false economy not to pass this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is a lot of merit to this legislation, but there is a lot of demerit to its being called up at this particular time. Our Nation is in peril. Financial peril, bankruptcy. I would not want to be one to keep from any Army officer remuneration sufficient for him to do the work assigned to him in a way for the benefit of our country, and to instill in him that desire to achieve an esprit de corps that makes the finest type of armed forces, but I sometimes wonder whether we are not taking pretty fair care of the Army right now, and I wonder how much more we ought to do for them. None is starving. The officers all seem to like their job. They have security.

The armed services of this country are now costing the taxpayers over $15,000,000,000 a year, and $15,000,000,000 is no chicken feed in anybody's language; the fact of the matter is that $15,000,000,000 is so much that I doubt whether any Member of Congress knows how much it is, whether any Member of Congress can visualize how much it is. It is a tremendous sum of money. Then, I question sometimes all the spending that we do in Congress, whether we are taking the right attitude, whether this is really looking after the welfare of the people of our Nation. Are we going too far? Not only are we trying to take care of the people of our country but we are going so far afield that we are trying to look after everybody everywhere in the world. We do not know our ability to do for others. You have taken on too much, and it is going to sink you if you do not watch out. I know it will wreck us. I just picked up this morning's Times-Herald and my eye fell upon a fine cartoon on the editorial page by Batchelor. I think it would be wise if you all got this issue of the Times-Herald and pondered over this cartoon. It says so much and it is true. It is a cartoon of Uncle Sam down on his knees by the bed offering a prayer. He prays:

> And I pray Thee, let the light of governmental economy open the eyes of Thy servants, no questions being made whether they be Republicans, Democrats, or atheists.

Underneath the cartoon appears the title: "Prayer of a Long-Suffering Man."

Uncle Sam has been a long-suffering man; he is asking the good Lord to give him guidance and to help him in trying to get a little economy into the Government. The title "Uncle Sam" ought to apply to every Member of the House of Representatives, men and women alike; they ought to look at that cartoon and each say to himself: "Am I doing what I should to keep our country sound? Are we operating it economically? Are we doing the thing that is best for these great people of ours? Are we going to perpetuate the great ideals that our forefathers tried to inculcate in this Government of ours when they said in the preamble to the Constitution, 'We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, and promote the general welfare'?" I just wonder whether we are looking after our own affairs today and those of our children and our children's children. It is your duty and it is my duty to perpetuate this country, this form of government; but let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if we keep on the way we have been going in the last 12 or 15 years we are going to wreck this great Nation financially. Some day our children will have to pay this great debt we are heaping upon them, or they will have to repudiate it. I am afraid they are going to repudiate it, because they cannot pay for our ruthless spending. Members of Congress, how many of you think of voting for increased cost of government, of the tremendous responsibilities. We must assume all responsibility when you vote funds as to where and how you will raise the money. Are you willing to tax your people more? Can they pay more taxes? Is it right for them to assume more burdens? Or will you bond the Nation deeper into debt and expect your children and their children to pay for your folly, for your unsound management of the affairs of your Nation?

Oh, men and women, there will be a day of reckoning. It is coming only too quickly. Will it make or break our Nation? Is it good for our country? We are not running this Government as I would run it. I can promise you that. You do not consider all phases of the legislation we consider. I am sure of that.

Whose fault will it be? It is going to be the fault of the Members of Congress who are voting for assuming these financial burdens and adding to our national deficit, so eventually we are going to crack because we cannot carry on. Men, the condition your country is in is a serious situation. Stop, look, listen. Pray for Congress and Uncle Sam.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and be open to amendment at any point thereof.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a very important bill and a long bill. Not everybody in the House has read this bill as carefully as the chairman has, so I am constrained to object.

Mr. VINSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SUTTON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of section 201 (a) be dispensed with, and be printed in the RECORD at this point and be open for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, in the tabulation of commissioned officers under "0-8" "Over 30" strike out "$10,005" and insert "$1,005."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, line 17, strike out "performances" and insert "performance."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTTON: On page 8, line 23, strike out section 201 (a).

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misconception that I am against the pay raise. I am not against a pay raise for the armed services, but I am for an equitable pay raise. Too long has the brass had the breaks. It was the civilian in uniform who won World War II, it was not those who sought refuge in the bombproof shelters of the Pentagon. It was your enlisted man, your second lieutenants, your first lieutenants, your captains, and they are the ones who are suffering, along with those in equivalent ranks. They are the boys that need a break, they are the boys that are entitled to a pay raise, and they need it badly. They should receive a considerable increase. I am in favor of giving it to them. If you will bring in a bill providing for a pay raise that takes care of the enlisted man and compensates him for taking away his family allowance, and include the ensigns, second lieutenants, first lieutenants, lieutenants (jg), lieutenants, and captains, then I am for it. On top of that, we should raise the generals just a little, but I am not in favor of giving the whole thing to the top brass. They do not need it as these other boys do.

You speak of career boys. With 200,000 applicants right now for 9,000 billets, do not tell me we cannot get Army officers and Navy officers back in the service. I have them applying, and you have, too. Every Member of this body knows numerous ex-officers who are seeking to reenlist in the Army or Navy. They were good officers. They went down through the valley of hell during World War II. You cannot tell me they are not competent and efficient enough to run the armed services of this great Government.

A substitute is going to be offered for my amendment, and it is a good amendment, too. It will be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING]. It gives the second lieutenant, the first lieutenant, and the captain the same pay raise you are asking for and at the same time makes the pay raise on a gradual scale. I hope this committee will adopt the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri because it is a fair amendment. We do not want to disrupt the armed services. Heaven knows we do not. Above all, I believe in the armed forces of our country, but I believe in fair and equitable treatment of all men regardless of their rank.

In spite of what the gentleman from Texas has said, I do not believe that he can specifically name one man in the enlisted men's group who, with his family, will have as much take-home pay after you repeal his family allowance.

I will not go back to my district in the State of Tennessee, the grand old Volunteer State, that has been the Volunteer State in every war this country has ever had, and tell the wife of that enlisted man or the baby of that enlisted man, "I am the one who took the food out of your mouth." Oh, for shame.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman's amendment would take food out of their mouths, because the gentleman's amendment strikes out all the pay.

Mr. SUTTON. The gentleman did not hear me when I said the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] would offer a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is not then in favor of his own amendment?

Mr. SUTTON. I stand with the statement that I made in the genesis of my remarks, to wit, I favor the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING], which we have worked out and agreed upon.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman's amendment takes the food out of the mouths of the enlisted men and everybody.

Mr. SUTTON. In the same breath I told the gentleman I was in favor of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING], which would take care of the enlisted man, the second lieutenant, the first lieutenant, the captain, and equivalent ranks.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is not asking the committee to adopt his amendment?

Mr. SUTTON. I repeat again that I am asking the committee to adopt the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri, which we have agreed is equitable and fair.

Mr. VINSON. Therefore the gentleman is against the amendment he has offered.

Mr. SUTTON. I am for a pay raise, as I said and I will support the amendment which I am happy to state provides for a fair, just, and equitable pay raise for the lower ranks.

Let us get back to what I was saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUTTON. I will not go back to my people and tell them I did my duty here at the Capitol, if I take this food and clothing away from their babies. You made a contract with those boys who enlisted after 1946, and a promise made is a debt unpaid. They knew that this family-allowance provision existed. You have a few extreme cases of men having 14 dependents, or 8 dependents. Show me how many cases like that there are in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps. That is strictly a matter of policy of the recruiting officer and not an argument against the family-allowance provision. It is time that we started to think. It is time we started to fulfill our contracts. If we cannot fulfill our contracts to the boys in the service, and their wives, mothers, and children, how can we even look at ourselves in the mirror? My conscience would hound me to my grave. My sense of fairness will not permit me to take away that family allowance after we made a contract with those boys who enlisted after 1946. Are you not going to fulfill this pledge and this promise to them? Are you going to say to these people, "Get out of the Army," with economic conditions as they are today? And with unemployment coming on us? Do you want to pitch the United States into more unemployment and refuse to comply with your promise?

Mr. Chairman, something is wrong. Let us look at it sensibly. Let us help the people who need some help. Let us help these enlisted men. Let us help the man who is gun fodder, and that is not demagogery—that is actuality, because I saw it. Let us give them their just dues and a fair break. Let us give the low ranks their break, then help the upper brackets. But take care of those boys who are actually doing the fighting, not the ones who are sitting behind a desk at the Pentagon Building, and not the ones who have a chauffeur. May I say to my friend from Georgia that there were two cars sitting out there this morning in front of the Capitol. I asked the boy, "What are you doing over here? Who is in this car?" "I brought three officers over here to lobby for this bill."

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr COLE of New York. I do not think the gentleman has a monopoly on interest in the enlisted man. I should like to remind him that to take the place of this family allowance which he regrets is to be withdrawn by this bill, amounting to an annual cost of $314,000,000, this bill gives to that same enlisted man——

Mr. SUTTON. Yes; it gives him $173,000,000.

Mr. COLE of New York. It gives to that same enlisted man an added basic pay of $314,000,000, plus an added quarters allowance of $142,000,000, making a net gain to those same people in whom you and I are interested, $143,000,000.

Mr. SUTTON. When a man gets a 3-percent raise amounting to $2.50 a month, how can that compare with the $50 a month that his dependents are getting? How can a corporal getting $7.50 a month raise compare that with the $50 a month that you have taken away from him? Answer that, if you will.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Does the gentleman favor the family allowance as a permanent policy?

Mr. SUTTON. Not as a permanent policy; but there was a contract with these men and I favor the Government complying with its promises.

Mr. HARE. Does the gentleman realize that the family-allowance proposition was a temporary wartime measure?

Mr. SUTTON. Does not the gentleman realize that conditions in the world are still in a crisis, and that the war has not been officially declared over; and does not the gentleman realize that China is still in a state of war; and does not the gentleman also realize that we are appropriating $5,500,000,000 for ECA to keep down communism?

Mr. HARE. Does the gentleman realize, by the same token, that we can certainly appropriate $500,000,000 for the pay of our own armed services?

Mr. SUTTON. I am in favor of the pay raise, and I have repeatedly said that, but I am in favor of a fair, impartial, just, and equitable pay raise.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. In the committee hearings on the bill, H. R. 2553, at page 1384, the original bill sustains the gentleman's position.

Mr. SUTTON. That is what should have been kept in this bill. I congratulate the gentleman from Texas on putting that in his original bill.

Mr. CARROLL. That sustains the very argument that the gentleman is making now, because it was provided in substance that no enlistment term shall operate inequitably against men who have entered a contract with the Government.

Mr. SUTTON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CASE of South Dakota (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I may state that the body of the amendment constitutes a new table to the request of the gentleman from page 9 of the bill. It would be a little involved for the Clerk to read it. I can explain it much more readily. I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for five additional minutes and that the amendment may be considered as read and printed in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a simple statement before I state in detail what this amendment does.

The thing I am concerned with is whether or not action today will tie the hands of the Appropriations Committee in such a way as to make it impossible to make an equitable readjustment of appropriations in future years. The pending bill will, in effect, add $406,000,000 to the annual appropriations for the Military Establishment. It is not a matter of $406,000,000 for 1 year. It is a matter of $406,000,000 every year that you have the same composition and size of the armed services. We here would establish a pay scale. It would be frozen at this figure until subsequent legislation might modify it one way or another.

Back in 1933, when the pay scale of the Army was high in relation to general economic conditions, it brought on the Economy Act, and that produced a great deal of difficulty throughout the country, in veterans' compensation as well as in the Army. I would like to see us establish a pay scale that is scientific, that is based upon responsibility, that is graduated, that does get away from the hodgepodge that has grown up over a period of years.

So, over the week end I got in contact with the Budget Division of the armed services in the Pentagon. I asked for tables, which could be substituted for this table which is in the committee bill, that would save in the nature of $100,000,000 from the estimates that they had made of the cost of the bill as presented by the committee. They did prepare two such tables for me, one based on a 3-percent reduction from the committee schedule, the other a 5-percent reduction in the upper grades. I have them here under a memorandum from the Office of the Secretary of Defense. These are not tables that I have worked out. They are tables worked out by the Budget Office in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the same technical people who worked out the schedule that is in the bill presented here and also the schedule for the Hook Commission. I have taken the top part of the 5-percent table—that covering field grade and general officers—and combined it with the 3-percent table for all grades below that—that is, below major—and have offered that as a new pay schedule. Applying the estimates of savings also supplied by the Budget Office in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, this amendment will save approximately $114,000,000 each year out of the proposed $406,000,000 increase.

I am striking at the problem of the over-all cost of Government. Many people speak about reducing the cost of Government, but the practical problem is before you right now. If we pass a bill that requires an additional $400,000,000 or more for the Military Establishment every year, then the Appropriations Committee has its hands tied. If you want them next year to cut the total appropriation for the armed services by half a billion dollars, they cannot do it on the Army pay unless they reduce the size of the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps. They have to do it in subsistence or equipment or in matériel. So what I am seeking here is to get a schedule which would permit us to save something and still preserve what I consider the fine features of this bill, in establishing a scientific, graduated pay scale for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. In view of the fact that the amendment was not read, will the gentleman now give us some comparisons? For instance, let us start right at the bottom.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to take all these individual cases. The pay schedule under the amendment, from the grade of general to major, inclusive, is 5 percent below the schedule proposed in the committee bill. From major down it is 3 percent less than the committee has proposed.

Mr. VINSON. Then is it 5 percent on each grade from the grade of major up?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. From major up through general it is 5 percent below the new pay schedule in the committee bill.

Mr. VINSON. In the proposed bill a major's pay is fixed at $480. It would be 5 percent less than that? That is the way you make your calculation, is it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. VINSON. And from captain on down to the enlisted grades, grade 7, it is 3 percent under what the proposed bill carries for each grade; is that correct?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. How much saving will that bring about?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That will accomplish a saving of approximately $114,000,000.

Mr. VINSON. For each fiscal year?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. For each fiscal year.

Mr. VINSON. That is for a full year?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is for a full year.

Mr. VINSON. So therefore this bill going into effect in October, there would be a greater saving? It would not cost that much?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is true the first year.

Mr. VINSON. So the Committee can thoroughly understand it, just take this scale and show the difference between the committee figures and the gentleman's figures: For instance, a major general under the proposed bill would get $1,005 a month; under the gentleman's 5-percent reduction what would he get?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Let us take the figures under the first column. The major general at the present time, according to the table in the committee report on page 49 would be getting $733.

Mr. VINSON. That is his present pay.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. And the committee bill carries $975.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And my amendment would carry $926.25; but with 30 years' service it would be $954.

Mr. VINSON. Then, that is a 5-percent cut in each grade.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is right.

Mr. VINSON. And it is not an overall cut, but it is a 5-percent cut on each grade.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. On each grade down to captain.

Mr. VINSON. Because, that makes a big difference.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Maybe it is too early to ask this question, but does the gentleman's amendment apply to warrant officers and enlisted men also?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Three percent when you get to the rank of captain and below; not a 3-percent cut of their present pay, but a 3-percent cut of the committee schedule.

Mr. JOHNSON. But my specific question is: Does it include warrant officers and enlisted men?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. All the way down?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. It is a complete table.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment includes a 3-percent cut on the present salaries?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Only a 3-percent cut on the total that is in the committee bill, which leaves, in all instances, a raise over present pay.

Mr. VINSON. It is 3 percent under what we put in the bill for each grade under the rank of captain and 5 percent for each grade over the rank of captain.

Mr. CARROLL. The point I had in mind, if the gentleman from South Dakota would yield so that the chairman of the committee might answer, is the enlisted man on a salary of $75. Does this 3-percent cut apply to his salary?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Let us take the $75 per month man. In the first place, the $75 salary applies only to a recruit and only for 3 months; he gets $75 only for 3 months. When you apply the 3-percent cut to the $75, bearing in mind that this would not apply to the recruit already in the service, it would mean that the recruit who came in after this law became effective would get $72.75.

Mr. CARROLL. That is the point I wanted to make.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is correct for 3 months. It still is a pretty fair entrance salary when subsistence, clothing, lodging, medical care, et cetera are concerned.

Mr. CARROLL. So actually the gentleman's amendment provides a lower pay than the present bill.

Mr. VINSON. That is the only category.

Mr. CARROLL. In that particular category.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In that one instance only; and that would apply only to the recruit; and in that instance he has a reduction of $2.25 for only 3 months, which would be a little over $6 for the entire period it would be applicable but it makes the schedule consistent.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Under this bill the brigadier general would get approximately a 60-percent increase, yet the gentleman's amendment would cut him only 5 percent.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is not quite that bad when you consider changes in allowances. Yet you cannot make any uniform increases under the theory of the bill. The theory of the bill is to get rid of some of the inequities that exist at the present time and place pay on the basis of responsibility and advancement in service. Let us take another example; let us take the master sergeant.

Mr. VINSON. The master sergeant gets $214.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is as of today. By the table on page 49 of the committee report, the bill would increase that to $270. My amendment would be 3 percent less than that or approximately $262, leaving him with a substantial raise over his $214, and even better than that when other allowances are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Georgia has the table in front of him I will run over the table. Let us take the private now in class E-2. He gets $80; the committee bill proposes $82.50; my amendment would cut him to $80.03. He gets just a nominal increase. A private first class, E-3, under present law gets $90; the committee bill proposes $97.50; my amendment would give him $94.58.

Mr. VINSON. That is true.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This table uses the 3 percent clear on through up to and including the grade of captain.

Mr. VINSON. And the reduction of 3 percent is on the committee bill's figures.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is exactly correct.

I have here a memorandum on the economies effected by using an over-all 3-percent cut in all grades and by a 5-percent cut from the top down to and including the top three grades of enlisted personnel. A straight 3-percent cut would save $107,500,000; the limited 5 percent would save $103,800,000 according to the study in the office of the budget of the Secretary of Defense. By combining them, using the 5 percent for the grades above captain and the 3 percent below that, as my amendment does, the saving will be approximately $114,000,000 and still mean substantial improvement in individual pay and retain the careful graduated relationship worked out by the Hook Commission and the Committee on Armed Services.

The memorandum referred to follows:

National Military Establishment—Summary table of effect of reductions in basic pay scale on cost of H. R. 4591, based on fiscal year 1950, average strength

[In millions of dollars]

	Cost at rates in H. R. 4591	Cost at reduced rates	Reduction in cost by reason of amendment

Retirement and severance payments	269.1	261.0	8.1
Total, items affected by changes in basic pay scale	3,581.4	3,473.9	107.5

The tables or schedule in the amendment were prepared by the Defense Establishment and I am depending upon their figures and estimates. They are the same group who prepared the data for the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand the gentleman's arguments, he believes in the principles of the bill the committee has reported; the only thing in which he differs is that we should have a little lower scale. The underlying philosophy, the idea of the bill that it will bring about a good career service, is concurred in by the gentleman. Is that true?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is true. I want to accomplish the general objectives of this bill, but I cannot escape the fact that there is a feeling in the country that we should not freeze the pay schedules to the economic outlook of 6 months or a year ago.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think there is a lot of merit in the gentleman's attitude. I may say to the gentleman that I am glad to find that the gentleman who for years has been on the committee making appropriations for the Military Establishment, agrees that this is a bill that is well-conceived in principle and will bring about the principle set forth, which is to get a career system for our armed services.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. RIVERS. The gentleman realizes that under the present situation it is just a hodgepodge set-up, entirely inaccurate, very inconsistent, and something should be done. Our bill is the approach.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do realize that, and that is why I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out the section entirely will not prevail. I have offered my amendment as a perfecting amendment. It should be voted upon first so that there is a chance to have a new schedule before us and draw the issue between that and striking out the section completely.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. What the gentleman has just said is that this bill and these figures were arrived at some 6 months ago, and therefore he thinks the conditions have changed. But, that line of argument would hold with reference to every appropriation bill, because your appropriation bills were made up last August. So, I do not think the gentleman's argument is upon sound foundation, because we proceeded to enact every appropriation bill based upon facts and conclusions that were reached by the budget last August.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, in the bill reported by the subcommittee on independent offices, with which I had something to do, we did not accept the figures that were made last August, and we brought in a bill that reduced the budget estimate by $673,000,000. And the recently reported ECA bill, it might be noted, was modified from last summer's estimates by the Bureau of the Budget as well as by the Appropriations Committee precisely upon that ground.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman himself recognizes that this bill is not based upon the philosophy of cost of living. This bill is based upon the philosophy of responsibility, and if the responsibility existed in August and it exists today, the conclusion reached in August would be the proper conclusion to apply when you enact the law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Except that salaries are running on into the future. I would like to leave just this little incident with the committee. This matter of Army pay was a concern of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Army and the Air Force at the time we had the last hearing with General Eisenhower, when he was Chief of Staff. We were aware then of the danger of losing some of the best men in the Military Establishment, and the Committee on Appropriations could not deal with the situation then because we were limited to the pay schedule in existence then. The chairman of our committee said to General Eisenhower, "General, how do you face such a situation as that?"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman should point out, and it should be considered by the Committee in the consideration of the gentleman's amendment, that it is anticipated by the Armed Services Committee that in the next year there will be put on the statute books a law providing for a contributory retirement system for the military people, under which they will be required to pay approximately 6 percent of their base pay, so that if that should develop within the next year it will result in a reduction over the pay scales proposed in the bill of approximately 6 percent. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what his view would be, assuming that his amendment is adopted, and eventually becomes part of the law, should the Congress, when it considers the contributory retirement proposal, make some appropriate adjustment of the pay scale at that time to compensate for the reduction occasioned by reason of his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I still continue my reservation of objection. I do not object; I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman wishes me to respond to him in the time he has under the reservation of objection, which I am perfectly willing to do. My reply to the gentleman is that my position on that bill will be governed, of course, by the terms of the bill and by conditions at the time. In general, I believe in the principle of contribution to retirement funds. I think at that time if the committee brings in that kind of a bill it should bring in a report which would give us the facts comparing the pay scale that might be in existence then with the economic outlook at that time, and showing the comparative benefits that go with holding a commissioned rank in the Army. There are many things that go into making a career in the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps attractive entirely apart from the pay itself. There is the fact that there is security in the job. That is something you do not get outside.

Mr. COLE of New York. I take it that it is the position of the gentleman that the pay scale for the military people should be revised from year to year by the Congress depending on the economic conditions that might exist.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not think it is a practical proposition to revise it each year, but I think that you should take into consideration the overall picture. You should realize that the Government trains these people who are in the armed services. They get their education free, even after they are out holding a job, so to speak. They may then be sent to graduate schools or to the command school to further their education on Government time and Government pay to fit themselves for a higher grade or rank.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman cannot continue indefinitely under a reservation of objection. He has already used 5 minutes in answering the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The Committee, of course, is aware that the way the time developed was outside of my control. I was merely answering a question raised under a reservation of objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOYLE. The gentleman stated a minute or two ago that he thought the bill was written with the cost of living 6 or 8 months ago in mind. Does the gentleman not know that the record shows that in the last two consecutive months the cost of living has risen and not lowered?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I also know that the receipts of the Federal Government are going down, and that under the Treasury statement I had with me Friday, in the month of May of this year the net position of the Treasury on the basis of receipts from withholding taxes and other sources of revenue is down. It had worsened by $600,000,000 in the first 17 days of May as compared to the first 17 days of May a year ago. If the Treasury was off $500,000,000 in its receipts in the first 17 days of May, largely the outcome of a change in the amount of withholding taxes received on wages paid, then the economy of the country has changed so much that we should not tie the hands of the Committee on Appropriations too much to a pay schedule based on the economic outlook of 6 months or a year ago. Remember that this bill will create a legal basis for pay obligations from now on—it is not an appropriation for a single year.

May I recite this little incident. The last time General Eisenhower appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, was when we were discussing this matter of military pay. We were all bothered by the difference in salaries offered in the Army and those offered outside in the early postwar months but we did mention some of the perquisites that go with a military career. It was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], I think who said: "General, what do you say, how do you handle it when one of the men you need is offered big pay outside?" Then, as nearly as I recall, General Eisenhower said that he had to rely in part on the appeal in public service, and he added in a way I shall never forget: "I think, Mr. Chairman, a great mistake was made when we started leaving the word 'patriotism' out of our Fourth of July speeches."

Mr. Chairman, I think it is impossible for the Congress, in regard to civilian careers in Government or the service in Congress or service in the armed forces, always to measure the compensation in terms of dollars. Unless the men who serve in this body, unless the men who serve in the uniformed services, unless the men who serve in the civilian branches of the Government, are actuated by a spirit of patriotism and public service, then God help America. It will always be necessary in a country like ours that men and women have a desire to serve the common good if we are to have the public service the country needs.

To summarize, the pending amendment does preserve the relationship proposed by the committee bill and gets away from the hodgepodge that has grown up through the years, but it does offer an opportunity to save $114,000,000 below the bill as presented, and it does permit the bill to be enacted and have the various improvements in retirement and other features that are tied in with the pay schedule. If you strike out the pay schedule completely, then you do not know what you have done to the rest of the bill because it is referred to in instance after instance as you go on through the bill.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOLLING as a substitute for the Case amendment: On page 9, strike out the tables following line 2 and insert:

Mr. BOLLING (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, are the other items, remaining to be read, identical with what is in the bill?

Mr. BOLLING. Yes; they are identical with the committee's proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON. Only the ones that have been read are those that are changed?

Mr. BOLLING. That is right.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, then the gentleman's amendment merely deals with the rank of major on up?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. And it does not deal with the balance of the pay scale at all?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us represents an effort to make an important step forward in developing a sound national defense policy. It is vitally important that the United States not do in the coming years what we did in the twenties and thirties—drop our guard, as it were. In those years, our armed services were treated like unwanted orphans. They had inadequate recognition, inadequate appropriations, inadequate pay to maintain minimum morale, minimum equipment, minimum effectiveness. We suffered for this at Pearl Harbor in 1941 and we paid for it time and again on Bataan, at Wake, and in the shipping lanes of all oceans during 1942 and 1943.

We must not make the same mistake again. The Armed Services Committee in this bill is attempting to take one of the many steps which we must take if we are to be adequately defended.

I agree with those Members who have cited the frightening significance of the increased rate of resignations from the services. I agree that we must attract into our services the highest type of career men. One of the important attractions must inevitably be the rate of monetary compensation. Permit me to point out that this is equally important in our civilian departments and that as yet we have not remedied the equally discouraging situation which finds us unable to attract our ablest men and women into the service of their country in civilian government service.

However, the matter before us now is the armed services. The fundamental purpose of this bill is sound. It would bring order out of chaos and modernize an antiquated and patched-up pay, allowance, and retirement system. However, such a measure must be sound, not only in theory, but also in practice. It must take into account conditions as they are, not as the outside observer believes them to be. It was with relief that I noted that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia did not include in his revised remarks which appear in the RECORD of May 20 the flat statement which he made on the floor of the House last Friday afternoon in speaking of general or flag officers, to the effect that they did not have cars or chauffeurs. I do not question the gentleman's good faith in making the remark. It does, however, demonstrate the difference between an academic approach to the theory of the case and a practical approach to the facts. The members of the Armed Services Committee cannot be familiar with relatively minor detail. They concern themselves with strategic concepts, the broad outlines of our national defense. Why should they know that in the Army the gulf between a major and a captain is much greater than that between a captain and a lieutenant? Why should they know that a colonel often has a personal car and chauffeur and that almost without exception a general or flag officer has both?

The amendment which I have offered takes into account the fact that our armed services must be more financially attractive if they are to retain and obtain the high type of young men and women that our national defense requires. But, more than that, my amendment takes into account the equally real fact that increasing rank carries with it substantial special privileges and benefits, some of them with large money value, others less tangible, but equally important—prestige is one of these latter.

My amendment affects no one below the rank of major. It does not change the proposed basic pay and allowance schedules for junior officers, warrant officers, or enlisted men. It lowers the proposed basic pay raises of general or flag officers, colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors and their equivalents to bring them in line with lower ranks, taking into account the substantial special privileges and benefits which I have mentioned earlier.

So that you may follow the effect of my amendment, please turn to table 3 on page 49 of the committee report. Using the same device of the typical year, we find that major generals under my amendment would receive a monthly increase in pay and allowances of $104.67, giving them a monthly income of $1,000. Brigadier generals get a raise of $188 and receive $900.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. Will the gentleman differentiate between base pay and allowance pay so that we can follow him in this? How much is the increase in base pay?

Mr. BOLLING. In the typical year, the proposal of the committee is to pay them $870, that is, to brigadier generals. My proposal is to pay them $705.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman apply the same percent, or what percent does he apply? Does he just merely take $870 and look at it and say, "Well, I will put down a certain sum," or do you work it out on a percentage basis?

Mr. BOLLING. No. I will tell the distinguished gentleman from Georgia I do not work it out on a percentage basis, because I do not think a percentage basis is a sound approach to the problem. I think the percentage basis unfailingly overlooks the fact of the additional special privileges and benefits of increased rank. I have no criticism of those special privileges and benefits. I merely want to consider them in any bill that is passed.

Mr. VINSON. Let us talk about the special benefits. If he is not living in a Government house he would draw $120 a month for rent and $45 a month for subsistence. That is all the special benefits he would get.

Mr. BOLLING. No, sir.

Mr. VINSON. Just a moment. If he is living in Government quarters, the special benefit would only be subsistence $45, and under the law today $42. What is the special benefit, except probably the privilege of purchasing in the PX or the commissaries? What are these special privileges?

Mr. BOLLING. One particular point is the one to which I referred earlier.

Mr. VINSON. Automobiles?

Mr. BOLLING. Automobiles. If the gentleman will excuse me now, I would like to continue and finish this. I think it is rather ridiculous to say that a major or a field officer does not have substantial privileges that do not accrue to a junior officer. I also feel it is quite clear that a general officer has additional privileges in the form of cars and chauffeurs, all other transportation, under almost any conditions. But I wish to make this amendment clear.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I do not yield further at this time.

As I began to say, I find that under my amendment major generals would receive a monthly increase in pay and allowances of $104.67, giving them a monthly income, basic pay and allowance, of $1,000 a month.

Brigadier generals get a raise, under my amendment, of $188 a month, and receive a monthly stipend in a typical year of $900.

Colonels, a raise of $106.33; monthly pay, $800.

Lieutenant colonels, a raise of $83.88; monthly pay, $700.

Majors, an increase of $88.25; basic pay and allowance of $600 a month.

It seems to me this accomplishes the purpose of giving to all ranks a substantial increase in pay, but at the same time takes into account the facts of the case—the facts as we know them, particularly those of us who most recently served.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman's amendment does not preserve the relative gradings that are suggested in the committee's bill, does it?

Mr. BOLLING. No. It certainly does not. I do not believe that the approach on a percentage basis is other than the academic one which I described.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not think the committee proceeded on a percentage basis. As I understood it, the committee proceeded on the basis of attempting to evaluate the responsibilities in different grades and worked out its schedule on that basis.

Mr. BOLLING. I subscribe to the theory of paying for responsibility, but I do not subscribe to the theory that a man who is responsible for the lives of more than one man has a responsibility that can be compensated for.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is substituting his conception of the relative responsibility for that proposed in the committee bill?

Mr. BOLLING. That is not accurate. I have substituted my conception plus my understanding of the additional things that accrue to people of certain rank.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Will the gentleman state the savings that will be made by your amendment as compared with the committee bill?

Mr. BOLLING. The savings would be between twenty-seven and twenty-eight million, in rough figures.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLING. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, you have left the basic pay and allowances for enlisted men and junior officers the same as they are in the pending bill?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. What you have done in your amendment is to skim off some of the cream that has been given to the field and general officers?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. And that reduction results in a saving of about $27,000,000?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. It is to be distinguished from the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] in that his amendment seeks to cut every single grade all the way down through the bill?

Mr. BOLLING. That is correct. I believe the gentleman's amendment would have the effect not of taking the best features of the bill but of generally weakening the bill in toto.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It preserves the same grading, however, that was worked out scientifically by the Hook Commission.

Mr. BOLLING. I doubt that there is any science involved in working out a percentage. I would like to answer the gentleman's question in this respect: The general agreement that we found on the floor of the House has been that there was an urgent necessity for an effective career service. I believe that the people who need to be attracted into the service by a monetary compensation held out to them are in the enlisted, warrant-officer, and lower officer grades. I submit that the kind of pay bill we should have if my amendment passed would encourage everybody to stay in the service once they got there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy that the debate on this bill is on a little higher plane today than it was at the end of the week when we discussed it last. I am glad to know that our good friend from Tennessee and also our good friend from South Dakota, and the other members of the committee have given some thought and study to this bill over the week end and have come to the conclusion that the situation that faces us today in the Military Establishment demands that something be done.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman, of course, had a good deal of time, I have had only 5 minutes, but still I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SUTTON. My opinion has not changed at all; I still hold the same opinion I had. There is probably just a misconception of my meaning.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I understand; the gentleman has offered an amendment to the bill to strike out the entire pay clause; but notwithstanding that the gentleman now says that he will favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING], which puts into effect a pay cut for only the four highest ranking officers. But I have the thought today that we are also likewise deeply interested in what is going to happen to those men in what we call the petty-officer classes and the junior-officer classes. That is a subject matter about which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON] spoke this morning.

When we stop to consider that last year over 4,300 Regular officers have resigned from the Military Establishment, and that 3,000 of these were naval officers, the most of whom we had educated, men who had graduated from the Naval Academy, it makes us stop and wonder what is the cause. I know something about the feeling in the various categories of the armed services. Nobody has given more time than myself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] to a study of the facts. The report of this special commission that was appointed by Mr. Forrestal a year and a half ago, was fully considered and the discussion of the over-all problem facing the men in the service with the men themselves—and it was through my initiative that we got the enlisted men to come before the committee and give us their views as to how they felt about the bill now pending before us—when we stop to consider the plaudits and tributes we are paying these boys, the best that can come from our minds and lips, awarding them medals of honor for participating in one of the grandest and most perfect achievements in the history of the Military Establishment, the Berlin airlift—we last week approved legislation to grant them a medal, and we applauded the general, the hero, who came home after he had done such a magnificent job in directing the destinies of our military forces in the European area—while we are giving these plaudits and speaking overwhelmingly of the splendid job they have done, we are permitting them to take a pay cut at the same time.

What do I mean by a pay cut? I mean that every member of the Military Establishment this year is taking a pay cut below that which he had a year ago. We all know that during the war the enlisted men were exempted from paying any income tax and the officers were exempted up to $1,500 plus the family exemptions; we all know that that exemption came to an end on the first of January this year. As a result of that the enlisted men and officers too are taking a pay cut, the officers $34,000,000 this year below what they had in take-home pay a year ago, and the enlisted men $95,000,000 below what they received last year. This is the amount they will pay this year in taxes.

Now, what does that mean? In dollars and cents what does it mean to the married men in the enlisted grades? Let us take the four grades, 1, 2, 3, and 4. Let us take the petty officer. What has he suffered by way of pay cuts this year as the result of the elimination of the so-called income-tax provision? He takes a pay cut of $139 as a married man in the fourth grade, but the single man takes a pay cut of $238. In the first grade the married man this year takes a pay cut in his take-home pay of $370. A single man takes a pay cut of $608.

We hear so much about these men who are participating in the so-called "pay-lift." These are the men who are taking the highest percentage cut of anybody in the military forces today because of the elimination of the so-called income-tax provision. Stop to consider that only 31 percent of our petty officers are reenlisting. Only 31 percent within the past 6 months have reenlisted because there is no attraction or incentive for them to remain in the service, and we also know that the same thing applies to the officer personnel. We certainly have got to do something about it. When you consider the feeling that they already had prior to January 1 of this year, what is the feeling that they now have when they have to cough up to the Federal Government by way of income taxes from $300 to $600 of the basic pay that they now receive? Those are things, my friends, that we must be interested in. Of course, we are interested in the cost of what this will mean to the Treasury of the United States.

Let me reassert again what we had to say a week ago in regard to the cost of this bill. In the 9 months of 1950 the gross cost will be $360,000,000, but from the $360,000,000 will come back in income-tax payments from the officer and enlisted personnel $182,000,000, or, in other words, the net cost to the taxpayer in the fiscal year 1950 will be $178,000,000. The gross cost of this bill in the fiscal year 1951, for a 12-month period, will be $406,000,000, in round figures. The cash recovery over and above what the men in the service paid in 1948 will be $200,545,000, or, in other words, the net cost to the taxpayer in the fiscal year 1951, the full year, will be $205,593,000.

Now, then, who gets this money? The gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from South Dakota admit that the men who are taking the licking today as the result of the cut in the take-home pay are in the petty-officer class, and the junior-officer class, and they are the ones that are contributing more to the income tax of 1949 as the result of the repeal of the exemption the first of this year.

The petty-officer group, the chief, the first, second, and third petty officers in all branches of the military service receive $244,000,000 out of this bill. The second lieutenants, the first lieutenants, and the captains, that the gentleman from Tennessee is so much interested in, and in whom we all should be interested in, will receive $138,000,000 under the provisions of this bill or, in other words, the petty officers and the junior officers altogether receive in addition to what they now receive $382,000,000 out of the provisions of this bill.

So we are interested, my fellow Members, in what goes on in the Military Establishment. We must maintain the morale. We just cannot stand idly by with all these resignations taking effect. Only 31 percent of the petty officers whose term expired within the last 6 months, reenlisted. We have to do something to cure that situation, and in this report the Hook Commission brought in to us a bill that is scientific, and in which every phase of our military problem has been carefully studied. I sincerely hope the bill as reported by the committee will pass this House.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. How many enlisted men appeared before the committee?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. During the hearings we heard from the officer personnel and we heard from civilian heads of organizations and from veterans' organizations. As we were closing the hearings, we felt we ought to hear from the enlisted men, and we got a representation from the enlisted men. I think there were about eight that came to the hearings, and they gave us a cross section of their views in regard to this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is a member of the subcommittee that handled this bill?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think a lot of us would perhaps be a little better able to weigh the merits of the proposed pay increases if we knew exactly what the purpose of the pay increase is. I have heard it stated by some members of the committee that the purpose of the bill is to provide a cost-of-living increase. Others say it is to compensate the members of the armed forces in a manner commensurate with their duties, obligations, and responsibilities. Others say it is for the purpose of recruiting men who will make the right type of soldier and the right type of officer. As for me, I should like to know what the real purpose of the bill is, so that I might consider it along those lines.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The fundamental purpose behind the bill is to develop an incentive for men who are trained by the Government to stay in the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. They are paid for their responsibility. When we stop to consider that in the case of the first-class petty officers 56 percent did not reenlist last year, in the case of the second-class petty officers 76 percent did not reenlist last year, and in the case of the third-class petty officers 84 percent did not reenlist last year, we realize there is no incentive for them to go ahead. We are trying by the provisions of this bill to give them an incentive to stay in the service and render that service to their fellow men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I believe the first time you were to approach the writing of a pay bill you might feel about it as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] has, and arrive at some figure, wherever you get it, and fix that as the compensation in the various pay grades as you go through the services. Quite frankly, we did that in 1942 and we did it again in 1946. That is the very reason the Hook Commission was appointed, so that an effort might be made to stabilize the pay scales and have the proper percentage of differentials between the grades and responsibilities, and a study might be made from which you could compare the compensation of the military service with the compensation for like jobs in industry. The Hook Commission spent about a year doing that. They analyzed the pay scales of about 100 industries. In the report of the Hook Commission you will find a graph, or chart, showing the comparable rates of pay in private industry and in the military services. It is significant in this graph, that in the military services the entering wage is a little bit in excess of the entering pay in industry. The military entering wage is a little in excess of the entering wage in industry.

When you come to the warrant officers, you will find from that graph that the Commission was unable to find anything in industry comparable to the grade of warrant officer and the graph has no comparison between industry and the services as to warrant officers.

When you come to the officers, the lowest grades are a little bit in excess of industry, and it gradually tapers off until finally you find that the highest grade military man is drawing about one-half the pay drawn by men in industry for handling comparable organizations.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. You are comparing the wages paid in industry and the wages paid in the Army. Do you know of any industry, when a man moves out of the apprentice class, that increases his pay 8 cents a day—I said 8 cents a day, not 8 cents an hour.

Mr. KILDAY. I do not think the gentleman has read the graph correctly.

Mr. GROSS. Yes; your increase here is about $2.50 a month, which means about 8 cents a day; does it not?

Mr. KILDAY. He is only starting his career.

Mr. GROSS. He has moved out of the apprentice stage.

Mr. KILDAY. He has served for a period of 3 months. I hope the gentleman is not going to take the position that he has completed an apprenticeship training equal to from 2 to 4 years.

Mr. GROSS. When does he complete it?

Mr. KILDAY. I do not care to discuss a matter of that kind any further than I have.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. SUTTON. On page 6110 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 12, Senator FLANDERS, of Vermont, inserted an estimate by the Bureau of the Budget giving a comparison of military personnel with classified civilians. I pass this on to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. I have read the Senator's statements.

Mr. SUTTON. In every instance, except three, namely, the major general, the corporal, and the private first class, military personnel is paid in excess of the civilian personnel.

Mr. KILDAY. I have read and analyzed this very carefully. I think I indicated on the opening day of this debate the situation which existed between the Bureau of the Budget and the Hook Commission and your Committee on Armed Services. There has been an attempt made by the Bureau of the Budget to tie their own civil-service pay to the armed-services pay in an attempt to get an increase in pay for themselves. I say deliberately and advisedly there is no comparison between military pay and the table that Senator FLANDERS placed in the RECORD.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I have had some correspondence which leads me to believe that if the family allowances are cut out, as proposed by the bill, we are going to lose a considerable number of enlisted men. Am I to interpret that the motive of the committee is a desire to eliminate married men from the enlisted ranks?

Mr. KILDAY. The committee has no desire to do so. I pointed out that there were men drawing family allowances for as many as 14 dependents, and with as many as 8 or 9 brothers and sisters. The committee takes the position that when you are compensating men for responsibility and services, it is definitely unfair to the man who is really discharging a duty, such as a master sergeant, and to pay him less than the fellow who happens to have 8 or 9 brothers and sisters.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I am speaking of men with just two children.

Mr. KILDAY. People with just two children, under this bill, are going to get more than they would get under the family-allowance provision, unless they are in one of the bottom three grades.

Mr. BIEMILLER. That is not the way the enlisted men understand it, evidently, from the correspondence.

Mr. KILDAY. As I told you, we have had hundreds of letters. The enlisted men were misled by radio commentators and newspaper columnists. Those men who wrote into the committee all received a prompt and courteous reply explaining exactly what their personal situation would be, and those who have asked for information on this bill were given accurate information about it.

Mr. BIEMILLER. In the first three classes; is that true?

Mr. KILDAY. The man with four dependents or less will make more money under this bill.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. I wish the gentleman would elaborate on that a little further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes. Most of his time has been taken up with questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. I do not know that I will require the five additional minutes, but I do want to emphasize the fact that the pay scales set out in the Hook Commission report are definite and scientific. I believe it was the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] who said he did not believe there was anything scientific about it, but the Commission did thoroughly analyze industry wage rates and compared them with military pay rates, and they came up with these figures.

As I have said, Secretary Forrestal, Secretary Johnson, and President Truman have endorsed the rates carried in this bill. In the letter received by the Speaker yesterday the President expressed the hope that this bill would be passed.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. Will you be kind enough to explain simply and briefly, because I sincerely desire this information, what has been the effect of the income-tax law upon officers and upon enlisted men. Let us take them in categories. I think it is an important part of this discussion.

Mr. KILDAY. I am sorry I would not be able to tell you how much in individual cases.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] made a very fine statement. Let us take general officers, for example. When did the income-tax law cease to apply to them?

Mr. KILDAY. January 1.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Up to January 1. They had $1,500 exemption in addition to the family allowance.

Mr. CARROLL. Applying the increase under the present bill, if the income-tax law is applicable to general officers, what will be their base pay, comparing it with the present bill under consideration, as distinguished from the act under which they operate today?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I can give those figures, but it would take quite a while. The general officers all stand to lose under the present take-home pay about 6 percent below what they actually received last year.

Mr. CARROLL. In other words, let us put it this way: If we should adopt some of these amendments, would the general officers or field officers be receiving less pay than they had during the war?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I think it would be very close, if you adopt one of these amendments.

Mr. KILDAY. I have not analyzed it, but under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] I think quite definitely that would be true. What he is going to pay in income tax will depend entirely, of course, upon the bracket in which he falls and the number of dependents he has. It is computed the same as for anyone else. So you would have to go to the individual to determine what he is going to pay.

Mr. CARROLL. I was wondering whether the committee had taken that into consideration.

Mr. KILDAY. Our tables very definitely took that into consideration and it is worked out with that in mind and with the allowances and everything else in mind.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And there is no exemption under the present bill?

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] made a further suggestion, that there is a bill under consideration by your committee under which in the next session, or possibly this session, you are going to begin to consider whether or not officers will be included in the retirement system.

Mr. KILDAY. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. Is that bill under consideration by your committee?

Mr. KILDAY. My subcommittee has been quite busy with this bill since January.

Mr. CARROLL. I wondered if you also had that under consideration when you gave this pay raise.

Mr. KILDAY. I cannot say that that is true.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The contributory pension system is something the men in the service have asked for in many ways, because there is no provision in the present pension system for the dependents of an officer who dies after he leaves the service.

Mr. CARROLL. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts say that this contributory retirement system is going to apply also to enlisted men?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I think the contributory pension system is something we should do something about.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it also proper when we attempt to compare wartime pay with peacetime pay that we must remember that a great many officers during the war held temporary grades above that which they now hold?

Mr. KILDAY. That is true, of course, depending on the service. Some were two or three grades above where they would be on a career basis. We are here talking about career pay on a career basis, where the man has to qualify for promotion under the promotion laws which have been passed by Congress.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. BOLLING. Would the gentleman from Texas seriously contend that a major general who under my amendment receives an increase of $104 would suffer because of the income tax to such an extent that he would be receiving less than he did under his old pay?

Mr. KILDAY. I was not asked that question; I was asked the question whether he would receive less; and as I understood the gentleman from Colorado, a general might conceivably receive less under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment than he now receives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on section 201 and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes, the last 5 to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how many amendments to section 201 are now pending at the Clerk's desk?

The CHAIRMAN. Three amendments are now pending: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, and the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. The Chair did not understand my question; it was how many amendments are at the Clerk's desk that apply to section 201 that are not before the committee at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. There are four, one in addition to the three the Chair previously mentioned.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate to section 201 and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes, the last 5 to be reserved to the committee.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time will be divided equally between the Members seeking recognition.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FORD. Am I correct in understanding that this restriction of time applies only to section 201?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct, and all amendments thereto.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOLDEN].

Mr. GOLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask a question which I think is vital. Under the bill we are now considering, is the enlisted man receiving a sufficient increase in his pay allowance to offset or equal the loss of his family allowance? I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], or some other member of the committee, will explain that so that we will know what grades will receive sufficient increases under the present bill to offset the loss of the family allowance.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, of course a study of this bill will indicate that after the first three grades a man with two children stands to gain as a result of this bill. There is not only an increase in pay, as an incentive to stay in the service, but there is an increase in the so-called quarters allowance which has been increased from $31.50 to $67.50 a month. It is interesting also to note in that regard that out of the total increase for quarters allowances in this bill, the enlisted men get $142,000,000 of that and the officers only receive $3,000,000.

Mr. GOLDEN. Regardless of the sum total, does it take care of the individual?

Mr. VINSON. It does not take care of the first three low-grade groups. It does take care of the situation from the fourth grade up.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is the statement I made to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LECOMPTE].

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, recognizing, as I do, that the committee has put in a great deal of time and conscientious effort on this bill, I still think that the philosophy of the bill is wrong, that the committee has attacked the problem from the top instead of the bottom, that the enlisted men and the recruits, the privates, are the ones who should be taken care of first.

I have heard it repeatedly said by members of the committee that this is a bill for the enlisted men, that it is desired to attract career men into the Army as recruits. I want to ask a question, and I submit it to members of the committee who may answer it. During the war I know of the case of a man from my State, a college graduate, a former State officer, who enlisted voluntarily in the Navy. He went up by rapid strides to the rank of chief petty officer. I discovered he could go no further. So I went over to the Navy Department and talked to one of the admirals, whose name I do not care to repeat at this time. The admiral got out this man's complete record, went over it carefully and he said to me: "I have not found a man with a better record." But he said he could not be commissioned because he is over age in rank. That is the position you are in. The enlisted men cannot overcome the barrier between the enlisted ranks and the officer ranks. There is always something in their way. I submit to any Member of this committee, what is the situation with respect to being over age and still serving in the enlisted ranks?

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield I will say to the gentleman it is always necessary to have an age limit in reference to a grade. As a matter of fact, we have an age limit before a man can come to Congress. A man cannot come to Congress before he is 25 years of age.

Mr. LECOMPTE. But you do not have an upper age prohibition.

Mr. VINSON. When a man is of a certain age, his ability to do the work of that grade might be lessened if he is over the age limit.

Mr. LECOMPTE. If he is capable of serving as a petty officer, certainly he is capable of serving as an officer, and age is a matter of arteries and blood vessels.

Mr. VINSON. Of course, you have to have age limitations. It has been in all legislation.

Mr. LECOMPTE. If the Navy can take in a man and then find that he is so admirably qualified that they made of him a petty officer very soon, and this man has an outstanding record, he must be physically sound and qualified to serve as an ensign.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the facts are that a warrant officer is a specialist in his field.

Mr. LECOMPTE. This admiral said to me, "I am sorry to say, but we make ensigns sometimes very soon, but we cannot get along without some high-class chief petty officers."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Now, it is the man that goes in as an enlisted man that has to overcome that barrier between the enlisted ranks and the officer personnel. The philosophy of this bill is wrong. You ought to do something for the enlisted men instead of doing it all for the officers. The officers are all right. They fought bravely, died heroically, conducted themselves gallantly but for the good of our country and in the name of right and justice do something sometime for the privates. They constitute an important branch of every outfit and organization in the armed services.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, as I maintained last week. I agree with what the preceding speaker just said that this bill is top-heavy. The emphasis is all on top. There are going to be many amendments offered to this bill. I have an amendment to this section and I also have one in connection with the family-allowance section, and some others. But, I do think that there are so many amendments that the thing to do with this bill is to have it recommitted so that the committee in its wisdom and judgment, after knowing how the different Members of the Congress feel about it, may perhaps give a little more time to the subject. I have an amendment to offer in the event the Case amendment is voted down that has to do, on page 9, with the only enlisted man who is not given any sort of raise at all. I understand from the committee that the so-called recruit is only supposed to be in that stage for about 3 months. In spite of that the chart on page 9 indicates that the recruit may well be in that situation up to 30 years. Where every other single man in the service gets some sort of a pay raise after 2 or 3 or 4 years, the enlisted man in grade No. 1 goes in at $75, and according to this chart, even if he is in that same grade for 30 years, he will still get $75. I understand they are not supposed to stay in that grade. If they are not supposed to stay in that grade, it does not make any great difference if we are going to give them a little money, and my amendment, which will be offered if the Case amendment is voted down, is to the effect that beginning the 8th year they will be given a raise of $2 a month, just as every other man gets a raise after a few years.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. How much would the gentleman suggest to the committee the recruits' compensation be raised?

Mr. FURCOLO. It begins at No. 8, after 8 years of service. It goes to $75 a month after the first 8 years, then just as every single other grade is increased, the recruit would go up $2 a month from that time on, $75, $77, and so on up to $93.

I also want to make this point, if I may. We hear a lot about all the officers the Army, Navy, and other services need now, but right at the present time they still have the attrition system, so-called, which forces officers out of the service if they have not been promoted after a certain length of time in a specified grade. Right in the hearings on page 1442 a member of the Commission said:

> There is in limited operation now and it is the Commission's understanding that the practice is to be extended, a so-called attrition plan which forces officers out of the service if they fail of selection for promotion after a specified number of years in grade. These men may have good qualities but due to the limited number which can be promoted under law, they fail to make the grade for selection.

I say that if they have a system like that where admittedly, according to this report, there are qualified men in the service who are being forced out through this attrition system, the Committee on Armed Services can do something about that system. They certainly should at least sit down with the military and say, "Now, why is it you come in here asking for more men, yet you have a system whereby you force qualified men out?" That may be a small thing, it may be only 10 officers, but whatever the number is, let us find out about it. I think the committee can do it.

I have some other amendments I am going to offer later. I did want to mention that in passing. Also, if I get a chance, I shall present my amendment giving the lowest grade enlisted man another $2 a month in line with all the others. I think that is the least you can do. You may say he is not qualified, he is a dope, he is a professional recruit, and so on, but he certainly must have something if the Navy and Army would keep him in for 20 or 30 years. He certainly is entitled to $2 a month increase after serving at the same pay for 10, 20, or 30 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, we hear a good deal of talk about the fact that we have not properly taken care of the enlisted man. I think the committee's bill does justice to the enlisted man. Let us talk about the recruit for a moment, the man who comes in as an 18-year-old boy. He gets $75 a month. His allowances, food, clothes, quarters, and so forth, were estimated by the Hook Commission to be worth $108 a month.

He starts life in the services at $183 a month. There are very few boys when they start working that can make that much money in industry, in farming, or in any other kind of business. Then our bill goes along and keep stepping that boy up all the time so that in a very short time he will be getting double what he started with.

Let us look at specific effect for a career enlisted man under this bill.

(a) When he enlists at 18 or 19 years of age he receives $75 a month completely free of all expenses. For 13 weeks while he is in apprentice or recruit training, he receives this cash pay equal to $183 a month.

(b) Upon completion of that training he is advanced to the second grade—private or seaman second class. He now receives $82.50 cash a month. This is a $7.50 raise in 3 months.

(c) At the end of 12 more months he goes to the third grade—private first class or seaman first class—and this gives him $97.50 a month. This is a $22.50 raise in 15 months. This has a total value of $205.50 a month.

(d) At the end of not to exceed 16 months more the enlisted man is eligible for and promoted automatically to the fourth grade—corporal or petty officer third class. He is now a noncommissioned officer and a skilled man. If he is not skilled he is not promoted and not reenlisted. His pay is now $127.50 a month. An increase of $52.50 a month since he enlisted less than 3 years before.

(e) Should this corporal not succeed in getting to the fifth grade—sergeant—because of lack of vacancies he is assured of a $7.50 a month increase each 2 years and at completion of 7 years' service he is entitled to quarters or quarters allowances of $67.50 a month if he is married. This means a total monthly compensation of $210 in cash plus his subsistence, his own quarters, and his clothing. Under present permanent pay scales he would get $110 a month. For this noncommissioned officer who will be about 25 years old this pay bill means at that time in his career if he is a married man an increase of almost 100 percent. It gives him a total pay worth $318 a month. And this is not dependent upon a temporary, illogical, scheme of family allowances.

(f) The outstanding soldier or sailor, however, is not going to remain a corporal or petty officer third class; he is going to become a sergeant or petty officer, second class. This grade is open to him within 3 years after enlistment if he is outstanding. If he reaches the grade in 4 years he receives $150 cash plus family quarters or an allowance of $67.50 or $217.50 a month plus his clothing and food, or a pay worth $325 a month. For each 2 years' service in that grade he gets an increase of $7.50 a month. At the present time an enlisted man in the fifth grade with 4 years' service has an assured permanent pay plus quarters allowance of only $158.25 a month. After 8 years' service the present permanent pay including allowances would be only $164 a month. Under this bill it would be $240 cash a month. This is an increase of 46 percent.

(g) The next step is to sergeant first class or petty officer first class. If this grade is reached at 8 years, which many men succeed in doing, the pay will be $195 plus $67.50 if married or a total of $262.50 a month compared to present pay of $186. This is an increase of 40 percent.

(h) The top of the ladder in enlisted grades is master sergeant and chief petty officer. These are the very keystones of the structure. At 18 years, for instance, the new pay is $270 plus $67.50 or $337.50 cash a month in addition to food and clothing. Compare this with $252 total under present laws. This is the kind of a pay scale which will retain your experts. For the master sergeant who remains in the service for 26 years the pay will reach $300 a month plus $67.50 or $367.50 as contrasted with $268 now. This is an increase of 36 percent.

This pay is assured him. It is not a temporary thing. He gets it because he is worth it, not because he has a big family or can claim seven or eight brothers or sisters as dependents.

The claim that this bill is not an enlisted man's bill does not jibe with the facts. In addition to setting up a decent pay scale based on skill and responsibility, let me just detail the other things it does for enlisted men:

(a) Gives them the same retirement laws as officers for the first time.

(b) Gives them the same travel and transportation allowances as officers.

(c) Puts them in same status as officers insofar as quarters allowances are concerned as soon as they reach the grade of corporal with 7 years' service, or sergeant regardless of length of service.

(d) Retains foreign service and extra pay although it is taken away from officers.

This bill is in effect a Magna Carta for enlisted men. It takes them out of an insecure, charity type of pay based on dependents alone, and puts them in a self-respecting status of being paid what they earn.

Above all it does this out in the open. It lets you, the men responsible for appropriations, know what you are paying for. It does away with $425,000,000 of hidden pays and allowances.

The above story is the normal evolution that an intelligent, hard-working boy would go through. And if he were ambitious he would also be afforded the chance to develop his academic education so he could qualify for a commissioned officer.

In trying to arrive at a pattern that would be just and fair the Commission made extensive studies, and the pattern of payment for identical responsibilities runs along in the enlisted grades and also in the officer grades up to lieutenant colonel. From that time on it raises very rapidly in favor of private enterprise jobs and it levels off for the officer list, much below what the pay is in industry for jobs of comparable responsibility.

There has been some discussion here today that really worries me, and that is this tearing down and unmercifully criticizing of what is known as the "brass." I do not hold any brief for the men in those offices, but they have devoted a lifetime to military service. Without the Arnolds, the Kenneys, and the Spaatzes, the Giles, and others of their type, we would never have been ready to fight this last war in the air the way we did. In the Army and the Navy they also had these well-qualified men who prepared and executed the strategic concept that won the war. When they get $1,000 a month for the terrific responsibilities they have, they are not being overpaid, they are not getting more than they ought to get. You can talk all you want about these men hiding behind the Pentagon Building, but I sat here during the war and, frankly, every man I knew over there was eager to get to the combat lines and have a division or a regiment that he could command.

We cannot build America by tearing down the men who are the leaders in various activities. There has been talk that they were behind the barriers and were in safe spots. Do you realize that dozens of generals were killed in this war? It worries me when you begin tearing down the leaders in the military, just like it worries me when you tear down the leaders in our industrial life. America was not built that way. There is room for all and we need not unreasonably tear the top officers apart to help the enlisted men, which we all want to do.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. How many dozen generals were killed?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do know 39 generals of the Army were killed in action and 8 admirals. I do not have the number in the Air Forces. The proportion was almost as great as it was among the enlisted men.

Mr. GROSS. You said that dozens were killed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; it was over three dozen—39; not counting Air Force generals. The proportion of those killed to the total number of generals was almost as great as it was in the case of enlisted men.

Mr. GROSS. You said dozens were killed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; over three dozen were killed.

Mr. GROSS. I do not believe that is accurate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know it is accurate.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. My recollection is that some 25 brigadier generals were killed. A great many admirals were killed, as everyone knows.

Mr. GROSS. If the gentleman will yield, that is not a dozen.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is two dozen right there, and the gentleman from Georgia is only referring to brigadier generals; with the major generals, 12, and lieutenant generals, 2; it is over three dozen. That does not include the Marine Corps and the Air Forces, and so on. There were over 16,700 officers in the Air Force who were killed in combat. The point is that America was not built that way, in this negative way of tearing down men who are successful. These men are at the top because they are successful. They are the kind of men we are trying to get from the lower ranks, so that when trouble comes tomorrow, or 10 years from tomorrow, we will have capable men to plan the strategy which will safeguard and make America secure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested in some of the situations which would be brought about with reference to family men. I received some information just about the time the House was meeting from an Army gentleman, who said that now approximately 50 percent of those enlisted men in the Army are married or family people, and that during the war some 70 percent were married people. He pointed out that on an average each of these families probably has three children. Likewise, I was told, as I understood him, that they consider families of four or more children as what might be termed "extreme cases," insofar as dependents are concerned. I have been very much troubled about this question of family people being better taken care of. According to some figures which were given to me yesterday, a family man with 3 children, counting his dependent allowance, gets $173 a month. If he has 3 children, after 6 months, he gets $178 a month, and after 1 year, he gets about $188 per month. For a man with 3 children, under the terms of this bill, the $173 is reduced to a total of $75, the $178 to $82.50, and the $188 to $97.50. It is seen the dependent-allowance provision being cut out makes a lot of difference.

Let us carry him on over to some of the other enlisted classifications. If he is in 5 years, he gets $203, under the present law, if he has 3 children. If this new bill should pass, he would get $135 a month if he has 3 children. After 8 years, he would get $230 a month currently, whereas if this bill passes, counting the quarters allowance of $67.50, he would get $210 a month. Admittedly, after that, perchance, he does all right financially, but my question is, If he has three children, how is he ever going to get up to that point? I fear that this legislation is definitely going to have the effect of keeping experienced family people out of the enlisted ranks. As to whether or not that is a good thing, I am not capable of saying. I do fancy some family men with considerable service who have planned the Army as a career will be disappointed. These men should be given additional consideration; likewise, the single men, in my opinion, are not dealt with liberally enough. After all, they have many financial responsibilities in a day like this when prices are so very high. If a man has had 10 raises in less than a year and yet makes only $75, $80, or $90 per month, he still makes only $75, $80, or $90 per month. I received from the Secretary of the Navy this morning a letter which I desire to read. It follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, May 23, 1949.

The Honorable LINDLEY BECKWORTH,
Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BECKWORTH: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 21, 1949, in which you request certain information regarding the Career Compensation Act of 1949 (H. R. 4591) currently before the House. The information submitted herewith is applicable to the Navy and Marine Corps.

Approximately 27 percent of the enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps are married or family men today.

At the conclusion of World War II at the peak of the Navy's strength, 34 percent were married or family men.

Regarding the question of whether it is anticipated that more or fewer family men who have never been in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps will enlist or reenlist:

(a) It is anticipated that there will be fewer first enlistments by young men as it is currently the policy of the Navy and Marine Corps not to enlist for first enlistments men with dependents;

(b) For men with broken service, the policy is to accept men in pay grade 5 or above if they do not have more than three dependents;

(c) With regard to reenlistments there are no restrictions and it is anticipated that there will be more reenlistments as a result of the passage of this measure because the better and sounder pay scales and provisions of this bill will attract and hold career men in the service.

It is very desirable to have family men in the upper enlisted ranks as these are the career men who in many respects are the backbone of the regular service.

A man with 10 children who has not been in the service would under current directives not be accepted for first enlistment.

The average number of family dependents the average serviceman has had since the war is 1.8.

The number that have been extreme cases with reference to family allotments has been three-tenths of 1 percent.

Of the $48,000,000 that the Navy has under family allowances, only $48,000,000 may be considered as having gone to what might be termed extreme cases.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. SULLIVAN.

"For men with broken service the policy is to accept men in pay grade 5 or above if they do not have more than three dependents."

In other words, once you get to grade 5 you are all right, but what is the family man to do with his family until he gets to grade 5?

If it is very desirable to have family men in the upper enlisted ranks as career men, it behooves this Congress to properly take care of their needs not merely after they get to grade 5, but from the time they begin at grade 1 until they get to grade 5.

I desire to include some tables prepared for me here recently, also a memorandum handed me by the Army man to whom I talked with this morning:

Question. Under the terms of the bill which is being discussed on the floor of the House now, is it anticipated that more or fewer family men who have never been in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps will enlist or reenlist if once they have been in any branch of the service?

Answer. Currently, the Army is enlisting for original enlistment no men with dependents. It is anticipated that more men with prior service and with families will reenlist in view of the greater career opportunities offered under the provisions of this bill. For example, the pay and allowances of a corporal are increased nearly 100 percent over present emoluments.

Question. What is his opinion as to the desirability of having a considerable number of family men in the enlisted ranks?

Answer. As in any other walk of life, it is not considered desirable for a young man embarking on a career to be burdened with a family. During this period he is generally in his teens and is subject to frequent moves, is in no position to offer any stability to a family and in many cases the success of a marriage may well be jeopardized. Until after a young man has established a career, the Army does not encourage early marriages. After approximately 7 years of service when a young man about 24 or 25 has become a career soldier, the Army definitely favors family men in the enlisted ranks and adequate allowances are made for them in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that all of the other amendments and discussions have been on section 201 (a) and my amendment is an amendment to section 201 (b), I ask unanimous consent that the amendments on 201 (a) may be disposed of and that I may then be recognized to present my amendment to 201 (b).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman could not be recognized in the time remaining. According to the request of the chairman of the committee, the final 5 minutes of the time is reserved for the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I am not asking for any additional time. I am asking unanimous consent, in order to avoid confusion, and having amendments pending on two different subsections at the same time——

The CHAIRMAN. Is your amendment on a different subsection?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. It is on subsection 201 (b).

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will ask for recognition at that time instead of at the present time, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. But we have fixed the rule on the entire section.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement the gentleman would have to offer his amendment now to be considered on the entire section instead of section 201 (a). So let the gentleman offer his amendment now, and we will have the benefit of it as we vote on the other amendments.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I will make my unanimous-consent request, and if the gentleman wishes to object, he may do so.

Mr. VINSON. I am willing to give the gentleman my 5 minutes. Offer your amendment now and let us see what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON. It is under the unanimous-consent agreement, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, each speaker is recognized for 4 minutes. Five minutes was reserved by the chairman for the committee. Is the gentleman yielding his 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. VINSON. I am willing to yield my 5 minutes to him to offer his amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I have 4 minutes in my own right.

Mr. VINSON. Well, then, offer your amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes?

Mr. VINSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized on his own time for 4 minutes, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin: On page 9, line 4, after the word "assigned" strike out the balance of line 4, all of line 5, and insert in lieu thereof "except in time of emergency hereafter declared, in accordance with rank or grade of permanent appointment to."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Can this amendment be pending at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent it can.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But it will not be voted upon until the amendments to the first subparagraph are disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment would be adopted, subsection (b) would read:

For basic pay purposes, commissioned officers are hereby assigned, except in time of emergency hereafter declared, in accordance with rank or grade of permanent appointment.

The purpose of the amendment and the language is clear. The first clause, "except in time of emergency hereafter declared" is to permit the appointment of officers on a temporary basis and pay on a temporary basis in time of emergency. But the remainder of it would place commissioned officers in the pay scale on the basis of permanent appointment.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] said that the purpose of this bill was to put all officers on a career basis. I believe this amendment is entirely consistent, that it places them on that basis.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. In a moment or two, after I have had a chance to explain my amendment.

Last year this Congress passed an organization act setting up the various components of branches of the armed services and allotted a certain number of officers in the different ranks. The bill as now written without the amendment I have submitted permits a continuation of the evasion of those allotments. We know that there still exists a great many officers in temporary ranks as a hangover from the war. We know that officers continue to hold rank and are appointed to ranks of a temporary nature. It is overloaded on the top levels. Some will say that that is the fault of the Committee on Appropriations; actually, it is not, because it is impossible for them to go into the detail that would be necessary for them to ferret out the fat that exists in the temporary appointments. It seems to me that this amendment raises the issue. It is completely consistent, however, with the purpose of this bill as stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY]: "As a permanent peacetime proposition, shall the Congress legislate to fill the allotment of officers at various ranks or shall the armed services continue to do so, on a sometimes arbitrary basis, without requiring officers to pass before the boards that are necessary for permanent promotion within the service?"

I think it is important for the morale of the officers of the services in peacetime that the appointments shall be on a regular, recognized basis through boards of appointment and not by an arbitrary method that is permitted under the temporary system of appointment that has been in effect in wartime, and that is necessary in wartime. It seems to me such a system has no place in the peacetime organization of the armed services.

I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. One effect of the gentleman's amendment would be that a major given a temporary rank as colonel could only draw the pay of a major.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON. And the other effect would be to disrupt the entire armed services, because you would be flooded with thousands and thousands of resignations. We dealt with that question in the pay bill last year, and it will adjust itself in 1957.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is too long to wait for these armed services to fall in line with the mandate of this Congress. Are we making the allotment of officers to the armed services? Or are the armed services going to continue to do it themselves?

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. Would not one effect of the gentleman's amendment be that if you needed a colonel for a period of 3 months you could not promote him for 3 months as is now provided, but would have to make it a permanent appointment?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. That would be the effect in time of peace, but I cannot see any need for temporarily promoting people to higher rank and paying them at the higher rank under normal peacetime conditions. There is nothing to prevent his being given an appointment as colonel for a temporary period of time, but he could not receive the extra pay for the higher rank during that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for 4 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat reluctant to take issue with the committee on this bill, particularly in view of the fact that I know these gentlemen have put in many hours of hard work in bringing out this bill, which I believe to be generally good.

Mr. Chairman, I do not take issue with the provisions of this bill relating to retirement and some of the other matters covered, but I do reserve my right as a Member of Congress to disagree with the conclusions of the committee in regard to these increases in pay, particularly in the higher brackets.

It has been stated on the floor by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the subcommittee, that the purpose of raising the pay of officers in the higher brackets was to provide an additional incentive for men to make a career of the armed services. That purpose, in my opinion, fails when you take into consideration the fact that the Army has today some 200,000 applications for approximately 9,000 officer vacancies. That, then, could not be the purpose of this bill, because already you have 20 times as many applications for positions as you have vacancies. It stands to reason that you are going to find one man in 20 who will be capable of fulfilling the duties of his office if he receives a commission. Certainly 1 man in 20 of those applicants will make the service a good, capable, worthy career man.

It was stated here Friday that we needed good men for junior officers and that was the reason the officers' pay was increased in greater percentage than the pay of enlisted men under this bill—it was because we needed the officers to come into the Army and make a career out of it. It has been indicated on the floor here today, however, that the enlisted men are the ones who are being taken care of by this bill rather than the officers. I would like to know which we need; and if we need both, why not give both the same increase across the board?

As a matter of fact, we know that when a man goes into the Army to become a career soldier, he does not look at the pay that the generals receive as an incentive. He looks rather at the pay of the grade that he enlists in. If you are going to increase these salaries as a means of offering an incentive to men to go into service and to make a career out of it, then would it not be more reasonable to give the larger increases to the lower ranks where the enlistments occur?

The proposition has been raised that capable men are resigning from the Army to go into private industry. It has been a long-standing rule that the Government cannot compete in salaries with private industry. If we did, we would have to double taxes. Before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, which was recently considering a bill to raise salaries of the executive heads of Government agencies, the same question was raised, Should the Government attempt to compete with private industry in the matter of paying salaries? Not one member, not one witness, not one person who appeared before our committee at that time contended that the Government could possibly compete with private enterprise or with private industry in the payment of salaries. So, if it cannot compete, is there an added incentive for capable men to join lower ranks, by raising salaries in the upper brackets by 30 or 40 percent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will try the best I can to answer the gentleman who just preceded me in regard to who gets the money. First of all, we must recognize the fact that there is at the present time a tremendous shortage of officers in what we might call the lower ranks. We also know that there are hundreds, perhaps many thousands, of men who have had previous military experience and would like to get back into a commissioned status. We know also that the ratio of commissioned officers is geared to the number of enlisted men that we have in the service. If under that ratio or quota of majors or captains or colonels we are limited to say 2,000, and the 2,000 are there now, there is no opportunity for another man who holds the same rating to get into the service. If by chance he were taken in, then those in the lower rank, who ought to be going up, cannot go up because the fellow who has just come in has taken the position he logically is entitled to.

We must maintain a proper incentive for the men in the lower ranks, so that when a vacancy exists above they may have an opportunity to fill that vacancy. I can well understand how the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps or the Air Corps cannot take in all who apply, because we know, as the result of the war, when we trained a large number of officers in the various ranks, that there is just no place for them, and if we would take them all in we would just crowd out the boys trying to make the service a career.

Reference was made to the junior officers that the Army is now trying to get. As I said before, over 4,500 officers in the military forces resigned last year. Of the 1948 ROTC and military college graduates the Army selected 899, but only 110 accepted a commission. Out of the class of 1949, of 1,003 who had been designated by the Army as being eligible, only 7 have accepted a commission. Now, we know that the men in the so-called petty officer grades are getting the best of this bill. The pay allowance of the chief petty officer will be increased by this bill 30.16 percent; the pay of the second-grade petty officer will be increased nearly 33.77 percent; the pay of the third-grade petty officer will be increased 38.63 percent and the pay of the fourth-grade petty officer will be increased 28.57 percent. Those are the men we are trying to retain in the service, because an examination of the fourth-grade men discloses that during the first 6 months of fiscal year 1949 only 16 percent have indicated their desire to enlist. Eighty-four percent did not reenlist during this year. Seventy-six percent of the third pay grade did not reenlist and 56 percent of the second pay grade did not reenlist. We are trying to rectify that situation by giving them pay and allowances which will substantially increase what we might call the take-home pay that they will receive over 30 percent and above what they now receive. We are trying to do the job on a scientific basis because we know that that is the only way we are going to keep them in there. We should keep in mind the pay reduction that the men in the military are taking this year as the result of the expiration of the income-tax exemption. Those are the thoughts that we want to keep in mind in voting on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services to close debate.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, of course, under the parliamentary situation, as I understand it, we have three amendments pending now. I believe the vote will come first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, which is a substitute, of course, for the Case amendment.

The first vote, as I understand the situation, will come on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING]. It is in the form of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. Therefore, if the Bolling amendment should prevail, we will never have a chance to vote directly upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING] is most disruptive of all the work done by the Hook Commission and by the Committee on Armed Services. It disregards entirely the philosophy of the bill. It does away with the theory that men should be compensated on the basis of the service performed and responsibility undertaken. It substitutes for very carefully worked out pay scales, worked out after much effort and much comparison with industry, and full consideration of income-tax deductions and all matters of that kind, a series of figures and scales which I understand the gentleman has arrived at arbitrarily or in conversation with some of his fellows here in the House, and not upon any well-worked-out basis.

Should that prevail, we will continue the patchwork system we have had for years, under which there is no rhyme or reason to the pay scales, and there are no proper differentials between the various ranks and grades. It would mean that in the future, if there is a necessity either to increase or decrease the military pay, you will have to go through exactly what the Hook Commission and this committee have been through, because you could not percentagewise do anything toward increasing or decreasing service pay. It would put us back exactly where we are. It would destroy the most desirable feature of the bill.

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOLLING. In view of what the gentleman has said about the way I arrived at my figures, let me say that I attempted to take advantage of all the hard work of the Hook Commission and also of the hard work of the Committee on Armed Services, and add to that a realistic appraisal of those perquisites received by the higher ranking officers.

Mr. KILDAY. Just the same, the gentleman stated that he did not proceed percentagewise nor in a manner of that kind. He simply decided upon a total amount for each pay period and substituted that for what the Commission decided. As to the perquisites, I do not know. The gentleman and some other gentlemen here have referred to perquisites. I have had quite a long observance of the armed services, but I have not seen them. I have seen the boys working in the kitchens and I have also seen them paid for it. Those things do not constitute perquisites, although some gentlemen seem to think that they do. However, I must insist it is an arbitrary figure arrived at without any scientific investigation of the situation.

In that respect, the Case amendment is much better than the Bolling amendment, because it proceeds percentagewise on the basis of what has been worked out by the Commission. On the other hand, I still believe that the figures which we have in the bill are the proper figures, that they do constitute proper, adequate, and not excessive pay increases. I think what we have done with reference to the enlisted men proceeds along the same scientific basis and that now, once and for all, we ought to be able to establish a military pay system which in the future will be as available to us at the date we adopted it, and which could be increased or decreased percentagewise in a bill in a matter of a line or two.

While the so-called Case amendment is far preferable to the Bolling amendment, I sincerely trust that the work of the Hook Commission will be carried out, and that both amendments will be rejected. I do not think it is even necessary to refer to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, because it would leave all the Armed Services without any pay and therefore there is not much danger of its being adopted. I hope this amendment will be defeated and that the work of the committee, as recommended by the Hook Commission will be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired for debate on this section and amendments thereto.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOLLING], as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOLLING) there were—ayes 41, noes 98.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 65, noes 91.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. KILDAY and Mr. CASE of South Dakota to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 85, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO:

Page 9, in the chart, strike out the figure "75" opposite the pay grade heading E 1 under the headings "over 8", "over 10", "over 12", "over 14", "over 16", "over 18", "over 22", "over 26", "over 30."

Insert the following figures under the respective heading: "over 8", "77"; "over 10", "79"; "over 12", "81"; "over 14", "83"; "over 16", "85"; "over 18", "87"; "over 22", "89"; "over 26", "91"; "over 30", "93."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FURCOLO. May the Chair state that the amendment shows that after 8 years it provides $2 per month raise for the enlisted man?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded Mr. FURCOLO) there were—ayes 27, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the time that has elapsed and the number of Members who have come in since the amendment was explained, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 33, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 14, line 19, after the comma insert "except as provided in title IV of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BREHM: Page 15, line 15, strike out "doctors" and insert "physicians."

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. BREHM. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREHM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 13, strike out the words "ranks or grades" and insert the words "ranks, grades, or ratings."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: Page 19, after line 12, strike out the figures in the chart under the heading 'Monthly rate" and insert the figure "$30" in each place where any figure appears under the heading "Monthly rate."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment here, and I do not have any particular interest in the figure "$30." I am satisfied with whatever figure the Committee in its good judgment decides. But the purpose of this amendment, and another one I will offer down a little bit lower on page 19, is in connection with hazardous pay, so-called.

Now, you know in the service they start out by paying certain qualified men, officers, and so on, a little greater rate of pay, basing it on the perhaps logical fact that they are more qualified, more able, and have more brains, or whatever you may want to call it. Then they also have a system of setting up hazardous pay which has to do with some sort of perilous duty. That sort of duty has nothing whatever to do with whether or not a man has brains or is qualified or anything else; in other words, the same reasoning that applies to the system whereby you pay one man more than another does not apply to this hazardous-pay section.

If the bill is passed in its present form, what it means is this: If you send out a lieutenant commander and an enlisted man in a submarine and you say, "Well, now, you are going on a hazardous journey, there is some peril attached to this, so we are going to give you a bonus because you may lose your life," you say to the lieutenant commander, "We are going to give you $150 bonus," but to the enlisted man we say, "We are going to give you a $30 bonus." In other words, this Congress is putting its stamp of approval on the fact that in the eyes of Congress and the military, the life of an enlisted man is not worth as much as the life of an officer. I say, whether you put the hazardous bonus at $30 or $50 or $100, whatever it may be, it should be the same for all. Under the system as it is now, if a major and several enlisted men go up in an airplane, you do the same thing. You say to all those men when they start out, "You have a hazardous duty here. If you go, we are going to give you a bonus," and you give the major $150 and you give the enlisted man $30. I do not think that is a fair and just system. I do not think anything is worse for the morale of the service than that particular system. I think in Congress here we should say, if all of these men are going to risk their lives on hazardous duty which has nothing to do with qualifications or basic pay schedule, that "We are going to treat you all alike as far as hazardous, perilous duty is concerned, so that an enlisted man who takes that risk gets the very same thing as the officer does."

I might add, without any criticism of the officers, that it is probable that the enlisted man will be subjected to more risks than the officer. A little later on I have the same amendment with reference to subsection (c), changing that the same way.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the words, "hazardous-duty pay" are a misnomer. It happens to be that we have carried that language in the law for quite some period of time, and it is understood that it relates to this type of duty. The proper term is "incentive pay"; that it is for the purpose of attracting men to perform this type of duty. It might be that we should never have gone to a percentagewise basis for hazardous pay. But, it so happens that back at the beginning of the First World War, when few of us were here except our illustrious chairman, they did adopt the provision for 50 percent of base or longevity pay as the proper basis for incentive pay, and it has continued down through the years.

Many of us have wanted to do something about the readjustment of this for a long time. The Hook Commission finally gave us a formula which seems workable, one that we think can begin the revision and finally settle the matter entirely.

No longer will a major general get $4,400 a year for flight duty. He will get only $1,200 a year under this bill. We have reduced him that much. We permit the second lieutenant to get a little bit more flying pay than he got before. He goes from about $90 to $100 a month on his flight pay.

Of course every man's life is as dear to himself and his loved ones as any other man's life. I am surely not going to contend that any ratio should be justified on the basis of the hazard to his life that is assumed. But I also realize that to a man in the higher pay brackets the amount of money to constitute an incentive must vary because the matter is relative. It depends on the amount of money you are receiving, the equation which a little bit more would make as compared to what you are receiving. We submit it to you on the basis that it is incentive pay rather than hazardous-duty pay. We feel that the differential must exist in order to attract the men in the higher pay brackets.

It is also true that most of the casualties occur among the pilots of the planes, and most of those are the commissioned officers. A $30-a-month hazardous-duty pay in the case of a colonel would be very little incentive, in my opinion. It depends upon the ratio it bears to his other income. I trust that this amendment will be defeated and that we will be sustained in the first revision of this type of pay that has been undertaken since 1917, the first time we have found a formula under which we can do something about the present hazardous-duty pay.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FURCOLO. I should like to point out to the gentleman, if I may, first of all, that I said as far as I was concerned the figure of $30 was not governing with me. I am satisfied to take the gentleman's opinion on it. Secondly, on page 2224 of the hearings, with reference now to the morale of the armed services, may I point out that one of the very few enlisted men who testified said:

> Sir, I believe that whenever eight men are in an airplane each one of them holds his own life as dear to himself as any other man in that airplane.

That has a great deal to do with the morale of the services, and there is nothing that would help them more than that amendment.

Mr. KILDAY. We agree that the hazard is the same, but when you regard it in its proper light, as an incentive pay, then I do not believe you are justified in that position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot speak for the other branches, but as a former pilot in the Air Force I found that after flying for 6 or 8 months the novelty wears off, it begins to become monotonous, and it becomes routine. You do not exactly look forward to flying as you did when you first started. I dare say that if it were not for flying pay, for this added incentive, we would not have enough men in the Air Force to fly our airplanes.

Mr. KILDAY. I thank the gentleman. I think that is true. The larger your income, of course, the more the incentive must be.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the Furcolo amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. FORD as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: On page 19, after line 12, strike out of the chart the following:
> "O–8 ..... $100
> O–7 ..... 100"

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, this particular section of the bill pertains to hazardous-duty pay. The committee has made some excellent changes in the present law on this problem. Under the category of hazardous-duty pay the bill includes flying and submarine duty, glider duty, parachute duty, diving duty, submarine escape, deep-sea diving, and leprosy duty.

Under my amendment we would remove only the hazardous-duty pay or the incentive pay as far as the categories of O–8 and O–7 are concerned. Who does this affect? It affects the following members of the armed services: Generals, lieutenant generals, and major generals, and in the Navy, Coast Guard, and Coast and Geodetic Survey, admirals, vice admirals, and rear admirals in the upper half; and I might add, under O–7, brigadier generals and rear admirals in the lower half, and some people in the Public Health Service.

It appears that the committee in its judgment, and I think wisely so, has completely revised the hazardous-duty-pay system in their bill compared to the way it exists at the present time. If you will turn to page 50 of the committee report, you will find that men who are in the category of major general receive under the present law $366.66. Under the proposed bill they will receive simply $100. In other words, in effect, this $100 is a token payment for something that existed in the past. Under the category of brigadier general or the category of rear admiral in the lower half they presently get $275 a month. This bill would give them $100 a month. I say again it is merely a token payment to continue a system which the committee itself considers improper.

It seems to me the best illustration of the present situation is the case of General Eisenhower. I have figures which show that when he was in the service he received around $15,000 a year. Under the present law a general of comparable rank who was an Air Force officer receives $15,000 plus 50 percent of a part of that amount. There is no question that during the last war General Eisenhower probably flew as much as the Air Force general who was getting the 50 percent extra in the same rank.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman has his figures somewhat confused. It is 50 percent of the base pay, and the highest base pay in the Army is $8,800. Therefore, that is what the flight pay would amount to. What we are trying to do here is to get away from that 50 percent of the base pay. We are trying to cut it down and make provision here so that a major general and a brigadier general will get $100. The brigadier general in the Air Force is the man who leads the wing attack. The most important person to lead his squadron is the brigadier, and you are proposing in your amendment to eliminate him altogether.

Mr. FORD. I can say, from personal experience in the Navy, that the man with comparable rank in the Navy did not lead the attacks in the Navy Air Corps. They were aboard ship and that is where they should have been. But still they were getting their 50 percent extra as flight pay for combat flying, which I say is wrong.

Mr. VINSON. The skipper should always be able to do that which he orders someone else to do.

Mr. FORD. But they did not do it.

Mr. VINSON. Exactly. But he is qualified to do it, and under this bill under certain conditions he will do it and we compensate him for it.

Mr. FORD. I doubt if on any occasion in the last war did any admiral, vice admiral, or rear admiral ever lead any combat flight, and that is what we were paying them for in World War II. I think that is wrong. I am not familiar with the Air Force, but the rear admirals and other flag officers in the Navy put in their flight time by flying the requisite 4 hours per month in noncombat flying. I do not think they should be compensated an extra 50 percent or even an extra $100 per month because officers of comparable rank in other branches of the service were doing equally good jobs and were flying just as many hours.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. Speaking of generals who are combat aviators, can the gentleman tell me where General Tinker is at the present time?

Mr. FORD. As I said before, I am not fully informed as to the situation in the Air Force, but I can tell you that just as many people in the Ground Forces were flying from one place to another and probably being killed in an equal number of situations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one extra minute so I may read him a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. The statement is as follows:

During World War II over 90 general officers in the Air Forces personally led their forces in combat. Ten were killed.

Mr. FORD. How many generals in the Ground Forces were there, who were flying from one place to another and who were not getting flight pay, who were also killed in flight accidents? I think that is the only way you can compare the situation.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

Mr. POTTER. Can the gentleman tell the committee how much hazardous-duty pay the Infantry officers received during the war from the second lieutenants on up?

Mr. FORD. I am quite sure that everyone knows that the Infantry did not receive hazardous-duty pay for their valiant services. I say we ought to compensate the people who fly in combat, but we should not give extra hazardous-duty pay to those flag officers, rear admiral and above, who are simply doing routine flying.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. Of course, this bill contains a provision under which in the future all of this hazardous-duty pay can be suspended in time of war. It is discretionary with the President, but he would have the power hereafter to put all branches of the service on the same plane when it came to hazardous pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] has expired.

The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FORD) there were—ayes 28, noes 71.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

The question was taken; and the Chairman being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 40, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment which is on the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO: On page 19, line 17, after the word "of" strike out "$100" and insert "$50."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take time on this, because it is exactly the same amendment that has just been defeated. The reasoning is exactly the same, the only difference being that in this case it seeks to make it $50 a month for both officers and enlisted men. The reasoning is exactly the same with regard to both amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINSON) there were—ayes 48, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPECIAL PAY—DIVING DUTY

SEC. 205. (a) An enlisted person of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay and assigned to the duty of diving shall, in addition to basic pay, be entitled to receive special pay, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary concerned, at the rate of not less than $5 per month and not exceeding $30 per month.

(b) Members of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay and employed as divers in actual salvage or repair operations in depths of over 90 feet, or in depths of less than 90 feet, when the officer in charge of the salvage or repair operation shall find, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary concerned, that extraordinary hazardous conditions exist, shall, in addition to basic pay, be entitled to receive the sum of $5 per hour for each hour or fraction thereof while so employed. SPECIAL PAY—REENLISTMENT BONUS

SEC. 207. (a) Members of the uniformed services who enlist under the conditions set forth in subsection (b) of this section within 3 months from the date of their discharge or separation, or within such lesser period of time as the Secretary concerned may determine from time to time, shall be paid a lump sum reenlistment bonus of $40, $90, $160, $250, or $360 upon enlistment for a period of 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 years, respectively; and, upon enlistment for an unspecified period of time a lump sum reenlistment bonus of $360 shall be paid, and, upon the completion of 6 years' enlisted service in such enlistment, for each year thereafter a lump-sum payment of $60 shall be made, subject to the limitation that the total amount paid shall not exceed $1,440. No reenlistment bonus shall be paid for more than four enlistments entered into after the effective date of this section: Provided, That the bonus to be paid in the case of a person reenlisting for a period which would extend the length of his active Federal service beyond 30 years shall be computed as if said reenlistment were for the minimum number of years necessary to permit such person to complete 30 years' active Federal service.

(b) For the purpose of payment of the reenlistment bonus authorized by subsection (a) of this section, enlistment in one of the Regular services following (1) compulsory or voluntary active duty in such service, or (2) extended active duty of 1 year or more in a Reserve component of such service, shall be considered a reenlistment.

(c) Enlisted persons of the uniformed services, who, prior to expiration of the period for which they have reenlisted, extend their reenlistment to any one of the longer enlistment periods mentioned in subsection (a) of this section, shall be paid the sum of $20 for each year of such extension subject to the limitations contained in subsection (a) of this section.

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, a member of the uniformed services who reenlists within 3 months after being discharged from the enlistment entered into prior to the date of enactment of this act, or who reenlists within 3 months after being relieved from active service as a commissioned officer or warrant officer under appointment made prior to the date of enactment of this act if such commissioned or warrant service immediately followed enlisted service, shall be entitled to receive either (1) enlistment allowances in the amount and under the provisions of law in effect immediately prior to the date of enactment of this act, or (2) reenlistment bonus in the amount and under the provisions of this section, whichever is the greater amount: Provided, That the enlistment allowance payable under (1) hereunder shall in no event exceed $300.

(e) The Secretary concerned shall prescribe regulations for the administration of this section in his department.

TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO ALLOWANCES

BASIC ALLOWANCES FOR SUBSISTENCE

(b) The President may, semiannually, prescribe the amounts which shall constitute the basic allowance for subsistence for officers and enlisted persons. For enlisted persons such allowance shall be one of three types: (1) when rations in kind are not available; (2) when permission to mess separately is granted; or (3) when assigned to duty under emergency conditions where no Government messing facilities are available. Officers shall, at all times, be entitled to receive a subsistence allowance on a monthly basis. (e) No member of the uniformed services assigned to Government quarters or housing facilities under the jurisdiction of the uniformed services shall be denied his basic allowance for quarters if, by reason of orders of competent authority, his dependents are prevented from occupying such quarters.

(f) The President may prescribe regulations for the administration of this section, and such regulations shall include, but not be limited to, definitions of the terms "field duty" and "sea duty."

(g) Until such time as the President prescribes the amounts of the basic allowances for quarters pursuant to subsection (b) of this section and the regulations pursuant to subsections (a) and (f) of this section, members of the uniformed services otherwise entitled to such allowance pursuant to this section shall, subject to such regulations as the Secretary concerned may prescribe, be entitled to receive a basic allowance for quarters at the following monthly rates according to the pay grade to which assigned or in which distributed for basic pay purposes:

TRAVEL AND TRANSPORTATION ALLOWANCES

SEC. 303. (a) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretaries concerned, members of the uniformed services shall be entitled to receive travel and transportation allowances for travel performed or to be performed under competent orders (1) upon a change of permanent station, or otherwise, or when away from their designated posts of duty regardless of the length of time away from such designated posts of duty; (2) upon appointment, call to active duty, enlistment, or induction, from home or from the place from which ordered to active duty to first station; and (3) upon separation from the service, placement upon the temporary disability retired list, release from active duty, or retirement, from last duty station to home or to the place from which ordered to active duty, regardless of the fact that such member may not be a member of the uniformed services at the time his travel is performed or is to be performed. Allowances above authorized may be paid without regard to the comparative costs of the various modes of transportation. The respective Secretaries concerned may prescribe (1) the conditions under which travel and transportation allowances shall be authorized, including advance payments thereof, and (2) the allowances for types of travel not to exceed amounts herein authorized. The travel and transportation allowances which shall be authorized for each type of travel shall be limited to one of the following: (1) Transportation in kind, reimbursement therefor, or a monetary allowance in lieu of cost of transportation at a rate not in excess of 7 cents per mile based on distances established or to be established over the shortest usually traveled routes, in accordance with mileage tables prepared by the Chief of Finance of the Department of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of the Army; (2) transportation in kind, reimbursement therefor, or a monetary allowance as provided in (1) of this sentence, plus a per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $9 per day; or (3) for travel within the continental limits of the United States a mileage allowance of not exceeding 10 cents per mile based on distances established or to be established pursuant to existing law: Provided, That the travel and transportation allowances under conditions authorized herein for such members may be paid on separation from the service, or release from active duty, regardless of whether or not such member performs the travel involved.

(c) In addition to the allowances authorized above, under such conditions and limitations and for such grades or ratings and to and from such locations as may be prescribed by the Secretaries concerned, members of the uniformed services when ordered to make a change of permanent station shall be entitled to transportation in kind for dependents or to reimbursement therefor, or to a monetary allowance in lieu of such transportation in kind at a rate to be prescribed not in excess of the rate authorized in subsection (a) of this section, and in connection with a change of station (whether temporary or permanent), to transportation (including packing, crating, drayage, temporary storage, and unpacking) of baggage and household effects, or reimbursement therefor, to and from such locations and within such weight allowances as may be prescribed by the Secretaries, without regard to the comparative costs of the various modes of transportation. When orders directing a change of permanent station for the member concerned have not been issued, or when such orders have been issued but are of such a nature that they cannot be used as authority for transportation of dependents and baggage and household effects, the Secretaries concerned may, nevertheless, authorize the movement of the dependents and baggage and household effects and prescribe transportation in kind, reimbursement therefor, or a monetary allowance in lieu thereof as authorized in this subsection, as the case may be, only under unusual or emergency circumstances, including but not limited to (1) circumstances when duty is being performed by such member at places designated by the Secretary concerned as within zones from which dependents should be evacuated, (2) circumstances when orders which direct temporary duty travel of such member do not provide for return to the permanent station or do not specify or imply any limit to the period of absence from the permanent station, or (3) circumstances when such members are serving on permanent duty at stations outside the continental United States or in Alaska, or on sea duty. The Secretary concerned shall define the term "permanent station," which definition shall include, but not be limited to, a shore station or the home yard or home port of the vessel to which a member of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay may be ordered; and a duly authorized change in home yard or home port of such vessel shall be deemed a change of permanent station. Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary concerned, transportation for dependents and baggage and household effects are authorized upon the death of a member of the uniformed services while entitled to receive basic pay pursuant to section 201 (e) of this act.

(d) A member of the uniformed services on duty with or under training for the Military Air Transport Service, Marine Corps Transport Squadrons, or Fleet Logistics Support Unit and away from his permanent station may be paid a per diem in lieu of subsistence in an amount not to exceed the amount to which he would be entitled if performing temporary duty travel, without in either case the issuance of orders for specific travel.

(e) Cadets of the United States Military Academy, midshipmen of the United States Naval Academy, cadets of the United States Coast Guard Academy, applicants for enlistment, rejected applicants, general prisoners, discharged prisoners, insane patients transferred from military hospitals to other hospitals or their home, and persons discharged from St. Elizabeths Hospital after transfer from one of the uniformed services, shall be entitled to receive such travel and transportation allowances as are provided in subsection (a) of this section, as may be prescribed by the Secretaries concerned, due consideration being given to the rights of the Government as well as those of the individual in the promulgation of regulations prescribing said allowances.

(f) The Secretaries concerned in establishing the rates and types of allowances authorized by this section shall consider in prescribing (1) monetary allowance in lieu of transportation—average cost of first-class transportation including sleeping accommodations, (2) per diem rates—the current economic data on cost of subsistence (including lodging and other necessary incidental expenses related thereto), and (3) mileage rates—average cost of first-class transportation including sleeping accommodations and current economic data on cost of subsistence (including lodging and other necessary incidental expenses related thereto).

(g) The Secretaries concerned shall determine what shall constitute a travel status.

(h) Regulations shall be promulgated by the Secretaries of the uniformed services, as provided herein, and such regulations shall be uniform for all services insofar as practicable: Provided, That no provisions of this section shall become effective until such regulations have been issued: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall preclude the payment of travel and transportation allowances under provisions of law in effect on the day prior to the effective date of this act, until such regulations are issued pursuant to this subsection.

PERSONAL MONEY ALLOWANCE

SEC. 304. (a) Officers entitled to receive basic pay shall, while serving in the grade of lieutenant general, vice admiral, or in an equivalent grade or rank, in addition to any other pay or allowance authorized by this act, be entitled to receive a personal money allowance of $500 per annum.

(b) Officers entitled to receive basic pay shall, while serving in the grade of general, admiral, or in an equivalent grade or rank, in addition to any other pay or allowance authorized by this act, be entitled to receive a personal money allowance of $2,200 per annum.

(c) Officers entitled to receive basic pay shall, while serving as the Chief of Staff of the Army, as the Chief of Naval Operations, as the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, as the Commandant of the Marine Corps, or as the Commandant of the Coast Guard, in lieu of any other personal money allowance authorized by this section, but in addition to any other pay or allowance authorized by this act, be entitled to receive a personal money allowance of $4,000 per annum.

TITLE IV.—PROVISIONS RELATING TO RETIREMENT, RETIREMENT PAY, SEPARATION, AND SEVERANCE PAY FOR PHYSICAL DISABILITY

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TEMPORARY DISABILITY RETIRED LIST

SEC. 401. (a) Any member of the uniformed services found to be unfit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating by reason of physical disability and who otherwise qualifies as hereinafter provided may be retired or separated subject to the provisions of this title.

(b) The Secretary concerned shall establish for his uniformed service a temporary disability retired list, upon which shall be placed the names of all members of his service entitled to such placement pursuant to the provisions of this title. Such list shall be published annually in the official register or other official publication of the service concerned.

TEMPORARY DISABILITY RETIREMENT, PHYSICAL DISABILITY RETIREMENT, AND DISABILITY RETIREMENT PAY

SEC. 402. (a) Upon a determination by the Secretary concerned (1) that a member of a Regular component of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay, or a member of a Reserve component of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay who has been called or ordered to extended active duty for a period in excess of 30 days, is unfit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating, by reason of physical disability incurred while entitled to receive basic pay; (2) that such disability is not due to the misconduct or willful neglect of such member and that such disability was not incurred during a period of unauthorized absence of such member; (3) that such disability is 30 percent or more in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration; (4) that such disability was the proximate result of the direct performance of active duty; and (5) that accepted medical principles indicate that such disability may be of a permanent nature, the name of such member shall be placed upon the temporary disability retired list of his service by the Secretary concerned and such member shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided, That if condition (5) above is met by a finding that such disability is of a permanent nature, such member may be retired by the Secretary concerned and, upon retirement, shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided further, That if condition (3) above is not met because the disability is determined to be less than 30 percent, the member concerned shall not be eligible for any disability retirement provided in this section. In lieu of any such retirement, such member may be separated for physical disability from the service concerned and upon separation shall be entitled to receive disability severance pay as prescribed in section 403 of this title.

(b) Upon a determination by the Secretary concerned (1) that member of a Regular component of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay, or a member of a Reserve component of the uniformed services entitled to receive basic pay who has been called or ordered to extended active duty for a period in excess of 30 days, is unfit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating, by reason of physical disability incurred while entitled to receive basic pay; (2) that such disability is not due to the misconduct or willful neglect of such member and that such disability was not incurred during a period of unauthorized absence of such member; (3) that such disability is 30 percent or more in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration; (4) that such member has completed at least 8 years of active service as defined in section 412 of this title; and (5) that accepted medical principles indicate that such disability may be of a permanent nature, the name of such member shall be placed upon the temporary disability retired list of his service by the Secretary concerned and such member shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided, That if condition (5) above is met by a finding that such disability is of a permanent nature, such member may be retired by the Secretary concerned and, upon retirement, shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided further, That if condition (3) above is not met because the disability is determined to be less than 30 percent, the member concerned shall not be eligible for any disability retirement provided in this section. In lieu of any such retirement, such member may be separated for physical disability from the service concerned and upon separation shall be entitled to receive disability severance pay as prescribed in section 403 of this title: And provided further, That regardless of the percentage of disability determined to have been incurred, if condition (4) above is not met because the member concerned has completed less than 8 years of active service as defined in section 412 of this title at the time he would otherwise have been retired pursuant to this subsection, the member concerned shall not be eligible for any disability retirement provided in this section. In lieu of any such retirement, such member may be separated for physical disability from the service concerned and upon separation shall be entitled to receive disability severance pay as prescribed in section 403 of this title.

or inactive duty training, as the case may be; and (5) that accepted medical principles indicate that such disability may be of a permanent nature, the name of such member shall be placed upon the temporary disability retired list of his service by the Secretary concerned and such member shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided, That if condition (5) above is met by a finding that such disability is of a permanent nature, such member may be retired by the Secretary concerned and, upon retirement, shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided further, That if condition (3) above is not met because the disability is determined to be less than 30 percent, the member concerned shall not be eligible for any disability retirement provided in this section. In lieu of any such retirement, such member may be separated for physical disability from the service concerned and upon separation shall be entitled to receive disability severance pay as prescribed in section 403 of this title.

(d) A member of the uniformed services whose name is placed upon the temporary disability retired list of his service pursuant to subsections (a), (b), or (c) of this section, for the period during which his name is carried on such temporary disability retired list, but in no event to exceed a period of 5 years, or a member of the uniformed services who is retired pursuant to the provisions of this title, shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay computed, at his election, by multiplying an amount equal to the monthly basic pay of the rank, grade, or rating held by him at the time of the placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of his retirement, whichever is earlier, by (1) a number equal to the number of years of active service to which such member is entitled under the provisions of section 412 of this title, multiplied by 2½ percent, or (2) the percentage of his physical disability as of the time his name was placed on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of retirement, whichever is earlier: Provided, That for the purpose of the computation of (1) above, fractions of one-half year or more of active service shall be counted as a whole year: Provided further, That the disability retirement pay of any such member who shall have held a temporary rank, grade, or rating higher than the rank, grade, or rating held by him at the time of placement of his name upon the temporary disability retired list or at the time of his retirement, whichever is earlier, and who shall have served satisfactorily in such higher rank, grade, or rating as determined by the Secretary concerned, shall be computed on the basis of the monthly basic pay of such higher rank, grade, or rating to which he would have been entitled had he been serving on active duty in such higher rank, grade, or rating at the time of placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of retirement, whichever is earlier: Provided further, That in no case shall such disability retirement pay exceed 75 percent of the basic pay upon which the computation is based: Provided further, That if the physical disability entitling such member to disability retirement pay is found to exist as a result of a physical examination given in connection with effecting a permanent promotion or a temporary promotion where eligibility for such temporary promotion was required to have been based upon cumulative years of service or years of service in rank, grade, or rating, the disability retirement pay of such members shall be based upon the basic pay of the rank, grade, or rating to which such member would have been promoted but for such disability, if such rank, grade, or rating is higher than any other rank, grade, or rating upon which such pay is herein authorized to be computed and which such member would have been entitled to receive if serving on active duty in such rank, grade, or rating: And provided further, That for any member who, for any reason, has been or hereafter may be retired or whose name is carried on a temporary disability retired list and who, while in such status, serves on active duty, and while so serving, incurs a physical disability of 30 percent or more in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration or incurs a physical disability in addition to or an aggravation of the physical disability for which he was retired or for which his name was placed on the temporary disability retired list, shall, if qualified therefor pursuant to this title, be entitled, on his return to a retired status or to the temporary disability retired list, to receive either (1) disability retirement pay as provided in this section, using as factors the highest percentages or basic pay which he attained while serving on such active duty, or (2) retirement pay or retired pay, as the case may be, as provided by any law in effect at the time of his retirement; and, in addition thereto, if such member is, during such period of active duty, promoted to a rank, grade, or rating higher than that rank, grade, or rating on which his retired pay, retirement pay, or disability retirement pay was based, and has served satisfactorily in such higher rank, grade, or rating as determined by the Secretary concerned, be entitled, on his return to a retired status or to the temporary disability retired list, to receive such retirement pay, disability retirement pay, or retired pay computed on the basis of the higher rank, grade, or rating and which such member would be entitled to receive if serving on active duty in such higher rank, grade, or rating.

(e) A member of the uniformed services whose name has been placed upon the temporary disability retired list of his service shall be given periodic physical examinations, not less frequent than every 18 months, to determine whether the disability for which such member was temporarily retired has changed. If as a result of any such examinations, or upon the termination of a period of 5 years from the date of temporary disability retirement, it is determined (1) that the physical disability of such member is of permanent character and such disability is 30 percent or more in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration, the name of such member shall be removed from the temporary disability retired list of his service and such member shall be permanently retired for physical disability and he shall be entitled to receive disability retirement pay as prescribed in subsection (d) of this section: Provided, That for the purpose of computing such pay the percentage of his physical disability shall be determined as of the time of his permanent retirement; (2) that the physical disability of such member is less than 30 percent in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration, the name of such member shall be removed from the temporary disability retired list of the service concerned, and such member may be separated from the service concerned for physical disability and may receive disability severance pay as prescribed in section 403 of this title: Provided further, That at the end of a 5-year period during which the name of a member is carried on a temporary disability retired list, the Secretary concerned shall make a final determination of such member's case and shall cause such member to be retired, separated, or treated as provided in section 405 of this title.

S. C. 1036a, 1036e), and who is otherwise qualified to be retired for physical disability except that his disability is less than 30 percent in accordance with the standard schedule of rating disabilities in current use by the Veterans' Administration may elect, in lieu of being separated and receiving disability severance pay pursuant to title IV of this act, to be transferred to the inactive status list of the uniformed service concerned pursuant to section 308 of the act of June 29, 1948 (62 Stat. 1090; 10 U. S. C. 1036g), and be granted retired pay upon attaining the age of 60 years if eligible in all other respects to be granted retired pay as provided in title III of that act.

(h) Disability retirement pay computed on the basis of years of active service shall not be deemed to be a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country within the meaning of section 22 (b) (5) of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEPARATION AND SEVERANCE PAY FOR PHYSICAL DISABILITY

SEC. 403. A member of the uniformed services separated for physical disability pursuant to the provisions of section 402 of this title shall be entitled to receive disability severance pay computed as follows: An amount equal to 2 months' basic pay of the rank, grade, or rating held by such member at the time of the placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of his separation, whichever is earlier, and which such member would be entitled to receive at the time of separation if serving on active duty in such rank, grade, or rating, multiplied by a number equal to the number of years of active service to which such member is entitled under the provisions of section 412 of this title but not to exceed a total of 2 years' basic pay: Provided, That for the purpose of this computation, fractions of one-half year or more of active service shall be counted as a whole year: Provided further, That the disability severance pay of any such member who shall have held a temporary rank, grade, or rating higher than the rank, grade, or rating held by him at the time of the placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of his separation, whichever is earlier, and who shall have served satisfactorily in such higher rank, grade, or rating as determined by the Secretary concerned, shall be computed on the basis of the monthly basic pay of such higher rank, grade, or rating to which he would have been entitled had he been serving on active duty in such higher rank, grade, or rating at the time of placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of separation, whichever is earlier: Provided further, That if the physical disability entitling such member to disability severance pay is found to exist as a result of a physical examination given in connection with effecting a permanent promotion or a temporary promotion where eligibility for such temporary promotion was required to have been based upon cumulative years of service or years of service in rank, grade, or rating, the disability severance pay of such member shall be based upon the rank, grade, or rating to which such member would have been promoted but for such disability, if such rank, grade, or rating is higher than any other rank, grade, or rating upon which such severance pay is herein authorized to be computed and which such member would be entitled to receive at the time of placement of his name on the temporary disability retired list or at the time of separation, whichever is earlier, if serving on active duty in the higher grade: And provided further, That in the case of a former member of the uniformed services who has received disability severance pay as provided in this section, the amount of such disability severance pay shall be deducted from any compensation for himself or his dependents to which he or they becomes entitled thereafter under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration for the same disability but no such deductions shall be made from any death compensation to which his dependents may become entitled subsequent to his death.

PERIODIC PHYSICAL EXAMINATIONS

SEC. 404. (a) A member of the uniformed services whose name is hereafter placed upon the temporary disability retired list may be required to submit to periodic physical examinations during the period in which his name is carried on such list.

(b) A member of the uniformed services whose name is placed upon the temporary disability retired list and who is required to submit to a periodic physical examination shall, for travel performed, be entitled to receive the travel and transportation allowance authorized for the rank, grade, or rating in which retired for temporary duty travel performed while on active duty. Failure of any such member to report for any periodic physical examination after receipt of proper notification may be considered cause for terminating his disability retirement pay, except that such payments shall be reinstated at a later date if just cause existed for such failure to report, in which case payments may be retroactive for a period of not to exceed 1 year.

RECOVERY FROM PHYSICAL DISABILITY

SEC. 405. (a) If, as a result of a periodic physical examination, a member of a Regular component of the uniformed services whose name has been placed on the temporary disability retired list is found to be physically fit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating, he shall, subject to his consent, if an officer, be called to active duty and, as soon thereafter as practicable, be reappointed, subject to the provisions of section 407 of this title, to the active list of his Regular component, or, if an enlisted person, be reenlisted in his Regular component.

(b) If, as a result of a periodic physical examination, a member of a Reserve component of the uniformed services whose name has been placed on the temporary disability retired list is found to be physically fit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating, he shall, subject to his consent, be reappointed or reenlisted, as the case may be, in his Reserve component: Provided, That if the name of such member was placed on the temporary disability retired list for physical disability incurred while serving in the National Guard of the United States, or in the Air National Guard of the United States, he shall, subject to his consent, if not reappointed or reenlisted, as the case may be, in the component from which removed, be appointed, reappointed, enlisted, or reenlisted, as the case may be, in the Organized Reserve Corps or the Air Force Reserve.

(c) Any appointment, reappointment, enlistment, or reenlistment authorized pursuant to subsection (a) or subsection (b) of this section shall be in a rank, grade, or rating not lower than the rank, grade, or rating permanently held at the time of placement of the name of the member concerned upon the temporary disability retired list, and may be in the rank, grade, or rating immediately above the rank, grade, or rating permanently held at the time of placement of the name of the member concerned upon the temporary disability retired list. When seniority in rank, grade, or rating or years of service is an applicable factor in qualifying a member of the uniformed services for future promotion, such member who is being reappointed or reenlisted pursuant to this section shall, for the purpose of placement on a lineal list, promotion list, or other similar list, be given such seniority in rank, grade, or rating or be credited with such years of service as may be authorized by the Secretary concerned. Action under this subsection shall be taken on a fair and equitable basis, and regard shall be given to the probable opportunities for advancement and promotion to which such member might reasonably have become entitled but for placement of his name upon the temporary disability retired list.

TERMINATION OF DISABILITY RETIREMENT PAY

SEC. 406. (a) If, as a result of a periodic physical examination, a member of the uniformed services whose name appears on the temporary disability retired list is found to be physically fit to perform the duties of his office, rank, grade, or rating, he shall—

Mr. VINSON (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining portion of the bill that has not been read be considered as read, be printed in the RECORD and be open to amendment at any point.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services has generally agreed not to move to close debate on us. If he follows that course and gives us ample time to debate the provisions of the bill I will not object.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, may I say that I would not deny any Member full opportunity, or the committee full opportunity, to discuss any amendment. We have ample time to discuss every amendment. All we are doing is saving the reading of about 106 pages. We will gain a little time, but the Members will have ample opportunity to offer amendments and have them considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read, to be printed in the RECORD at this point and open to amendment.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments, which are all technical and clarifying, be considered en bloc and agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I assume these are the committee amendments which are listed on pages 1, 2, and 3 of the report.

Mr. VINSON. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments be considered en bloc.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARROLL: On page 69, line 2, after the word "enacted", strike out the balance of line 2 and everything down to and including line 20 and insert in lieu thereof: "Provided, That notwithstanding the foregoing, the provisions of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, as amended, shall remain in effect for the dependent or dependents of an enlisted man until the expiration of the enlistment or reenlistment period for which he has contracted prior to the date of the enactment of this act, or of an enlisted person inducted into any of the uniformed services prior to the date of the enactment of this act until the expiration of his compulsory period of active service."

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is one that I have discussed generally several times during the debate. I think it is a very important amendment, and I wish to ask a few questions of the committee in order that we can explain the purport of the amendment as we go along.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. Yes; I yield briefly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment provides for the carrying out of the Government's obligation under the contract during the enlistment for which a soldier is enlisted?

Mr. CARROLL. That is exactly right. I am going to explain that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not affect the case of reenlistment after this enlistment runs out.

Mr. CARROLL. That is exactly right.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Also those who happen to be serving by reason of the draft.

Mr. CARROLL. That is correct.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a very simple one and I think most equitable. When this measure was presented before the Armed Services Committee, it will be found by reference to page 1384 of the hearings, under section 615, this very provision was in the bill. What has happened? Evidently as committee members went along they found that they could get rid of some of the people whom the recruiting officers had permitted to come into the service. The gentleman from Texas has said some of these men have families of 13 and 14 children. Whose fault is it that they got into the Army in the first place? It is the fault of the recruiting officers that they permitted those people to come into the Army. As I stated, the purpose of my amendment is a very equitable one.

What right do we have to accept the enlistment of men into the armed services, then after we have induced them to come in, after we have given them a family allowance and other inducements to enter the service, we pass a bill which abrogates a contract and we say to them: "You can be discharged."

What type of civilian economy are these people going to enter? Unemployment is growing steadily. What about these men who have 5 or 6 children? Where are they going to get a job? I do not think that it is fair to change the rules in the middle of the game.

I want to put at this point a few questions. Let us assume, for example, that in enlisted grade 7 a recruit living on the post has a wife. Under present law his base pay is $75; is that right?

Mr. KILDAY. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. You deduct $22 from that pay which makes it $53, but under the present law you have an allowance to the wife of $50, so that makes his total pay $103.

Mr. KILDAY. That is correct.

Mr. CARROLL. Under this bill the base pay for that recruit is $75. There is a $28 loss under the bill we have under consideration at this time.

Let us take the situation of an enlisted man, grade 7, living on a post and having a wife and child. Under present law his salary is $133. When we pass this bill, what is his base pay? $75.

It is well for you to keep that in mind. You are cutting that particular individual some $53 or $54.

Let us consider the case of an enlisted man who has two children. You reduce his pay from $153 to $75 under the bill now being considered.

Let us continue with grade 7. We are still dealing with the lowest man, the recruit. Under present law, with a dependency allowance for a wife, plus subsistence, the pay is $134.50. Under the present bill it is $106.50.

I think all of these matters should be properly considered. I am much impressed with the argument that you are giving all of the increases to the brass. I think we better consider what we are doing to those down below.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, let us go to grade 6. Under grade 6, as I understand it, the man is no longer a recruit. His base pay under present law is $80 a month. This is for a man living on an Army post and who has a wife but no children. He gets $108 a month under present law. What does he get under the present bill? He gets $82.50. That is a substantial cut to a low group in the Army and it is to be considered in light of the substantial increase that you are giving to a high group in the Army. I wonder how we are going to justify these things when we pass this bill, when the real cut becomes readily discernible as affecting only those in the enlisted ranks.

Let us talk about a man in grade 6, living on a post and married, with 10 years of service. Under existing law he gets $120 a month. Under the present bill he also gets $120 a month.

Is that not right, may I ask the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KILDAY. I am going to have to discuss it in detail later, because there are certain things that the gentleman is confused about.

Mr. CARROLL. I want the gentleman to stop me. Have I confused the issue anywhere with reference to the enlisted men in grade 7?

Mr. KILDAY. The thing where the gentleman is confused is that the tables which appear in the report indicate that persons under the first three grades draw subsistence and quarters allowance on the basis of dependents. That is not correct. Only the first three grades at this time draw subsistence and quarters allowance. If the recruit is not provided with barracks and a mess, he gets an allowance for himself, but that is not on the basis of dependents. Only a master sergeant, the technical sergeant, and another one are now drawing subsistence and quarters, but it is not proper to figure in those allowances now, because you do not have recruits with wives and children living on the post. There have not been any taken in since last September. If they did have wives and children they could not live on the post.

Mr. CARROLL. That is the point. You do not bring these grades in unless they are on special duty and have the consent of the commanding officer.

Mr. KILDAY. That is right.

Mr. CARROLL. Actually, while I have been directing my remarks to the effect of the proposed bill upon enlisted men with dependents, the real gist of this amendment is simple. We are now saying, if we adopt this amendment, that whenever the Government enters into a contract with an enlisted man, whenever the Government of the United States offers an inducement to the enlisted man, then the Government must fulfill that contract. We should not dump these men out into a declining economy. The only effect of this amendment would be to protect them during the remaining portion of their present enlistment. As a matter of fact, the committee itself recognized the equity of this situation, since the bill provides that those who enlisted prior to 1946 shall be entitled to dependency allowances. It is only those men who have come in after 1946 that the committee would penalize. I say this treatment is unfair; it is inequitable and should not be permitted.

As a matter of fact, this amendment is not original with me. I have taken this amendment from the original bill which came before the Committee on Armed Services, and I sincerely hope that as a matter of fairness, of fair dealing with these family groups, that we ought to give them this sort of continued protection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman has covered the situation that I was going to emphasize. But, I wonder if the gentleman from Texas will admit that this bill would reduce the pay of family men after they have entered the Army under a contract with the Government.

Mr. KILDAY. I am going to have to answer the gentleman in my own time, because he referred to contracts and things of that kind. I am going to have to answer him in my own time rather than answer some individual question.

Mr. EBERHARTER. When a man enlists for a certain pay in the Army, does the gentleman not think that is a contract between him and the Government?

Mr. CARROLL. Unquestionably—as a matter of fact the Committee on Armed Services recognizes that such a contractual relationship exists for in this bill there is frequent reference to contract of enlistment.

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. TOWE. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman, can an enlisted man get the pay increases or the pay schedules provided in this legislation plus the family allowances?

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand, under this amendment as it was drawn, the increases apply to those men who are now serving out their present term of enlistment. If we change the provision of the pending bill we merely put all enlisted personnel in the same category.

Mr. TOWE. Under the gentleman's amendment you also retain the family allowances plus the pay schedules in the bill?

Mr. CARROLL. My amendment would place the man who enlisted since 1946 in the same category as all other people who came in prior to 1946. If they are entitled to family allowances, so ought the men who have entered the Army since 1946.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two additional minutes to answer these questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWE. My question is this: The gentleman has offered an amendment which retains family allowance in some respects. I should like to know whether or not if the amendment is agreed to all family allowances which come under the terms of the gentleman's amendment would be retained, and would the men still get the pay schedule set forth in this proposed legislation?

Mr. CARROLL. I thought I had answered that question, but I will answer it again by asking the gentleman from Massachusetts, who asked for an extension of time for me, what is the category of the enlisted men who enlisted prior to 1946? What position are they in under this bill?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. They may stay in the service until the time their enlistment expires, or ask for release.

Mr. CARROLL. Under the provisions of the act of 1942——

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. 1946.

Mr. CARROLL. I am talking about the act of 1942, which gave certain allowances.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is the family allowance.

Mr. CARROLL. Exactly. The men that came in prior to 1946 are entitled to those allowances.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The question the gentleman from New Jersey asked is whether or not the gentleman's amendment permitting the continuation of family allowances will also permit a man to draw the 30-percent increase in pay provided in this bill. The gentleman has not answered that question.

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand the provisions of the act of 1942, that act provided for certain family allowances. Is that not so?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Correct.

Mr. CARROLL. Those men who enlisted prior to 1946, as provided by the terms of the pending bill, are covered by the terms of the 1942 act. Is that not so?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. CARROLL. All I am saying, to answer this question, is that I want the men who enlisted after 1946 and entered their contract of enlistment then to be covered by the terms of the same law as those men who enlisted prior to 1946.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Then the question also is whether or not the gentleman wants those same men to continue receiving family allowances and also the 30-percent pay increase provided in this bill. The gentleman has not answered that question.

Mr. CARROLL. My answer is, if the men who entered the service before 1946 receive it, these men ought to receive it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We are trying to adjust this whole pay schedule so they will all be taken care of.

Mr. CARROLL. I think I have answered the question.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this seems to me to be a very fair, a very important, and a very necessary amendment to this bill. The bill appears to me to be, generally speaking, a good bill, and we ought to pass it, I think.

I served as a private and a corporal and a sergeant in World War I, but I certainly have no prejudice whatsoever against the so-called brass. We need those leaders and we need them badly in the armed forces the same as we need leadership in civilian life, and I shall vote to increase their pay in this bill. I have no prejudice against them. I want to be fair with all our leaders. Most certainly if we are fair with them we ought to also be fair with the humble people, we ought to be fair with those in the very lowest ranks, we ought to be fair with everybody.

This idea of being prejudiced against some class is not right. We ought to get that out of our minds and our hearts, if we have any such prejudices. Let us not be prejudiced. Let us treat all our classes with fairness.

How can we treat these in the lower echelons, the lower income brackets, with fairness if we violate a contract we have with them? As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] suggested in his question a while ago, there was actually a contract, at least an implied contract, with these people who went into the Army that they would receive those family allowances during their enlistment and during the time for which they were called into the service.

I just believe that Uncle Sam ought to be the last entity in this world to violate a contract either actual or implied, or even to violate a moral obligation.

I do not think that we, as individuals, have the right to violate moral obligations. I think our Nation least of all entities in all of this world ought to ever violate a moral obligation. Without this amendment I rather think we are going a long way here, my friends, toward what I would term the violation, at least, of an implied contract and certainly of a moral agreement with these people who have gone into the service. I have voted against every amendment so far except the one which sought to raise the pay of the low-pay $75 men. I voted for that and I voted against these others. I do believe that this is a good amendment and that we ought to support it.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER. Mr. Chairman, colleagues, ladies and gentlemen, for the greater portion of 3 days I have been in this House listening to gentlemen stand in the well of the House and beat their breasts and tear their hair because men who were receiving $600, $700, $800, $900, of $1,000 a month were being mistreated and were not getting enough money. Well, perhaps they are not getting enough money. I do not care if we give them more money as far as that is concerned, but I have come to the well of the House today to talk about the man who is receiving $100 or $120 or even $80 a month. If my colleagues have not already guessed it, I am going to let them in on a little secret today. Just rather frankly, sympathies are with the underdog. They go about 100 percent to the little fellow who always seems some way or another to get lost in the shuffle, and who does not seem to have but few friends.

You know a little way north of St. Louis the Missouri River comes into the Mississippi, and it extends northwest clear into the top of the Rocky Mountains. That river valley constitutes an agricultural empire. I got a book the other day from the Department of Agriculture. That book says that that great valley, with all the lands and all the buildings and all the cattle and all the hogs and all the sheep and all the poultry is worth 9.1 billion dollars. I remained on the floor of the House hour after hour after hour to vote against every amendment that would cut the appropriation for the military. I voted for the appropriation in the final roll call. That appropriation was for almost 16 billion dollars, yet the whole Missouri River Valley is only 9.1 billion dollars. Now they come here and tell me that the Army is so poor, and Uncle Sam is so poor, that we can no longer afford to help an enlisted man feed his children.

If that is the God Almighty's truth, there are a lot of bills here that need cutting. There is no question about that. This House seems to be trying to fulfill prophecy. I do not know whether it is our prerogative to do that or not. I do not know whether we could avoid doing it or not if we tried. The Book says, "Unto him that hath it shall be given, that he may have in abundance; and from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath." That is exactly what this bill seeks to do.

Now, I am not objecting to giving to the man that has, but I do not want to take away from the man that has not in order to do it, because we are not yet poor enough to have to do that. Uncle Sam, even with all this Democratic depression we have had for the last 16 years, has not sunk to the place where we have to violate a contract that Uncle Sam made with his enlisted men. I would rather be stripped, tarred, feathered, and hauled out of this town on a rail than to stand up here on the floor of this House and vote to take away the allowance of the family man in the Army. I know that science has proven that a healthy man and woman can live together and not produce a family. I know that. But the fact remains that there is just one place in this United States where the Army can find a soldier; there is just one place where the Navy can find a sailor; there is just one place where the Air Force can find a pilot; there is just one place where the Marines can go to get a "leatherneck." That is by dipping into the family of men and women who are willing to shoulder the responsibility and deny themselves of the pleasures of life that are necessary to produce a family in the United States. I would say about that man who had 10 or 11 children that I have heard so much about on this floor 5 or 6 times, it is not going to be very long until there are going to be some soldiers in that family. This United States is going to be owned, it is going to be populated, this House is going to be filled in 10 years, 20 years, 40 years, and 60 years from now by the sons and daughters of men and women who are willing to observe the law of God; who refuse to sidestep the laws of nature, and who are willing to raise a family. If we destroy this family allowance, I turn to my colleagues on the right, and say to you, "If you do it, shame." I turn to the left and I say to you, "If you do it, shame." I turn to the chairman of the Armed Services Committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, and I say again, "Shame."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] has expired.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURCOLO as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CARROLL: On page 69, strike out lines 6 to 20 and insert: "Contracted by any enlisted person who is a member of the uniformed services prior to June 1, 1949, unless such person waives the provisions of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, as amended, within 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, the form and place of filing of such waiver to be substantially in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary concerned."

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the one that I mentioned last week that I intended to offer at this time. In substance it is much the same as the one offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL] and a great part of the argument will be the same as the argument for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado and also the argument which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] has just made.

I wish to explain what I have tried to do in this substitute. I realize that the Armed Services Committee is going to say that in many cases the men in the armed forces, even if they have children, are going to get more money under this new bill than they did under the family allowance system. That is why in this substitute I have included a provision which leaves it to the enlisted man or officer himself to choose which system he wishes to come under. If he decides he can get more money by coming under the provisions of this bill, he is allowed to file a waiver and come under it. On the other hand, if he wants to stay under the family allowance plan, he has that privilege. He makes a choice between the two.

The other day I told about the scandal of some high-ranking officers who had been retired for physical disability making a great deal of money in commercial life. I asked this question: Why cannot the committee do something about those officers who are making sometimes $10,000 or $15,000 a year while still drawing disability pay? The answer was that you could not do that because there was a legal contract with the officers. That may or may not be true; I am not prepared to argue that at this moment; but I do say, in line with what other Members have said, that there is just as much a contract of moral force with the men in the service who stayed in that service under the assumption that they were going to receive certain benefits. I know that many, many men shipped over or enlisted again because of what they were told; and they were told that they would have these benefits. Now this Congress says we do not have to pay too much attention to that. I am not going to try to add to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER] said, because I think he hit the nail right on the head in certain respects; but I do say that, assuming we cannot do anything about the scandalous injustice of retired officers drawing disability pay and going out and making ten or fifteen thousand a year, if we cannot do anything about that because of a legal contract, I say we can protect the moral contract this Government has with those enlisted men and officers still serving. As I pointed out the other day, when you get into the courts of law you have to pay attention to these legal things, but here in this body we have some obligation that is of a moral nature that should cause us to sustain the morally binding effect of the contracts—I call them contracts—that were made with the men in the service. Those contracts should be allowed to continue; we should not simply say to them that we are going to change the rules right in the middle of the game; that is neither fair nor just. If we accepted their enlistment under the family-allowance plan and they want to continue it, they should be allowed to continue it. We have a moral responsibility to those men, and we should fulfill it, because we gave them to understand that that was one of the conditions of their enlistment.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. CARROLL. So we may understand the gentleman's substitute, will the gentleman explain it very briefly? I do not understand what its effect will be.

Mr. FURCOLO. The substitute attempts to say that as far as those men are concerned who are in the service at the present time who came in under the Family Allowance Act, that if they want to stay under that act they may, or if they want to come under the provisions of this bill, they may. It gives them a choice to take that which they feel is most beneficial, but principally it carries out our obligation to them under the Family Allowance Act if they want to continue under it. If they do not want the family-allowance provisions but prefer to come under the terms of the bill, they file a waiver and say they want to come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CARROLL. In other words, the gentleman's substitute is designed to give the greatest benefit under either the act of 1942 or the provision of this bill.

Mr. FURCOLO. The very same thing, in effect, as the gentleman from Colorado wants to do, plus the fact that they may waive the provisions of the Family Allowance Act if they want to come under the terms of this bill, which your amendment does not cover.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURCOLO. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What does the gentleman's amendment do as far as reenlistments are concerned?

Mr. FURCOLO. My amendment is simply designed to take care of those men who presently find themselves in the service at the time this bill goes into effect.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I recognize the full force of this argument about fulfilling a contract and in my remarks the other day I called attention to that matter. At the same time, I have been consistently trying to present to the Committee in its consideration of this bill the dollars which are involved.

I have before me a chart which was prepared by the Office of the Budget, Secretary of Defense, on the 29th of April 1949 which gives the estimated cost of dependents' allowances. This gives the figures for the 1950 budget, the effect of the proposed bill for the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, and all. I will just give the total figure because that is enough for the present.

At the present time the 1950 budget calls for $314,000,000 for dependents' allowances. Under the proposed bill it would drop to $123,000,000. In other words, to maintain the dependency allowances on the scale that they are in the 1950 budget and keep in the pay-increases and quarters benefits for the same people would require an additional $191,000,000 on an annual basis.

As I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO], his amendment would not maintain dependency allowances after June 1, 1949, for new recruits, but what I point out would be the situation if an amendment were adopted that would maintain the dependency allowances in peacetime on the scale that was established in wartime when we were drafting boys and men and saying: "You have got to come into the service." We knew it was not fair at that time to say, "You have got to come into the Army and leave your family behind." So we provided for families and that was the justification for the wartime dependency allowance.

If we should adopt the amendment which would establish that for all peacetime recruitment, and keep the quarters allowances and pay increases it would cost $191,000,000 more than is proposed by this committee bill. Let us be careful and know just what we are doing. The committee bill itself is going to cost $406,000,000 more each year if the armed services are maintained as at present at the existing size. If you maintain the dependency allowances on that same scale you will add to the bill another $191,000,000, which will bring the cost of the bill up to $600,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. When we passed the family allowance or dependency allowance bill it was expressly provided that it would terminate 6 months after the war was over. The Congress contemplated that only as a temporary war measure and this is a good chance to change it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is true. I do not want to break a contract with any of the boys now in the service, but I hope as we pick between the amendments we will keep clearly in mind that we do not want to establish dependency allowances on a peacetime basis for new enlistments plus the other benefits in this bill unless we are prepared to add about $200,000,000 more to the cost of this bill every year.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. I agree with the gentleman and I agree with the policy set by the committee that we should terminate this family and dependency allowance as soon as possible. The point of my amendment is that these men have enlisted or reenlisted and, therefore, they have had a certain inducement to come in, and out of equity we ought to permit them to conclude their enlistment term.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I hope that when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] takes the floor he will make clear what the bill does in that regard. I have never considered it was a proper thing for the Congress to take money from the dependency allowances and use that to pay for an increase to the officers. That is a position I have consistently taken throughout this debate. I do not think we are in the position of doing that now, but I want the committee to know and be sure just what it is doing.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I was more than glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from South Dakota who preceded me, because it seems as though it has become a habit whenever I am working on a bill in the House that I follow some gentleman from Missouri. Heretofore it has been the gentleman from Missouri on my left [Mr. SHORT]; now we have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CHRISTOPHER], and both generally leave the House in roars of laughter when I come up to follow them. So, I was glad to get as much space between us as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot permit the debate to terminate on this issue with statements that there is any attempt to violate a contract, either express or implied. There is no one in a position to contend or to believe that family allowance constituted any contract with him. As a matter of fact, the serviceman himself need not even apply for family allowances. Anyone can apply, the wife, or members of the family. So, it is not a part of his compensation. It is not paid to him. It is paid directly to the members of the family or to the dependent who has been recognized as such. The law is perfectly clear, as was read here today by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT], that those who enlisted prior to July 1, 1946, would receive it for the term of the enlistment; that those who thereafter enlisted could look forward to it for such period as might be 6 months after the war was declared to be at an end. It is an appealing argument, I grant you, that there is the intention to violate a contract. However, I do not believe that the membership believes that the 28 members of the Committee on the Armed Services who voted for this provision were in any way contemplating the violation of a contract, either express or implied.

But, I do want you to understand what will happen if either of these amendments is adopted. Of course, the one offered by the gentleman from Colorado would produce a staggering impact on the economy and the expenditures under the bill, because not only would it continue these large payments now being made on the basis of the number of mothers-in-law and fathers-in-law, and brothers and sisters, and all those collateral relatives, but it would grant in addition the pay increases contemplated under this bill.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. I recognize that it would have some impact and I recognize that the members of the Committee on the Armed Services worked very hard on this bill. But, the fact remains that the committee itself has set the standard, and the standard it set in this bill is that any enlistment contract prior to July 1, 1946, shall not be applicable under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KILDAY. We did not put that in this bill. We copied that from Public Law 625 of the Seventy-seventh Congress in which the man had the absolute contract by his enlistment that the family allowances would be continued for the period of that enlistment, provided he enlisted before July 1, 1946. We realize that was a contract, and we recognized it as such. In the provision now in the bill the only contract that any man could have is recognized, and all of the talk that we have heard here and the implication that officers have contracts and enlisted men do not, stands on poor ground. I was a little surprised that the gentleman made that argument. I thought it was unworthy of him.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman admits in this bill that there is a contract of enlistment.

Mr. KILDAY. No, we do not.

Mr. CARROLL. I say that you had a contract after 1946, and you ought to give credit to that contract.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman and I have argued about this ever since the beginning of this debate, and we cannot convince one another. This other amendment is better than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, because under his amendment, you see, a man cannot at the present time, nor under his amendment, draw both quarters allowances and family allowances. There would be the choice to be made. But over and above everything else, it is a bill set up on a career basis, with compensation for service and responsibility within the framework of the economy in which we can sustain it. That is the important thing.

The analysis the gentleman from Colorado gave about certain pay categories, suffering those losses, is not the correct result of this bill, because only your first three grades draw quarters allowances at this time, and under this bill, the fourth grade is going to get it. You just cannot put the figures together that you find in that report and bring out an exact result. What I have told you from the beginning is correct, the man with four or less dependents gets more money under this bill than he does with a family allowance, unless he is one of the three bottom grades.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to follow all the debate in the 3 days this bill has been under consideration. I am frank to say that one of the things which troubles me very deeply is the very situation we have before us. I have extreme affection for practically every member of the Committee on Armed Services, but one of the things which compels me to be against this bill is the mental operations we seem to go through in connection with the consideration and treatment we are according enlisted men.

I am not one of those who criticize the brass. I know there are good and there are bad officers. Many generals are underpaid and some of them are overpaid. But unless we are going to have a "Mexican army," and by that I mean one composed entirely of generals and colonels, we had better approach the problem of our enlisted men on a fair basis.

You are giving the enlisted man a pittance and removing the family allowance. I confess that we cannot proceed in the matter of family allowances for enlisted men as we did on the war basis, when we were drafting men, but I say that you are saying in effect what is immoral, you are saying to the enlisted man who has a wife and a family, "Get out of the Army." You are saying to the other enlisted men, "Do not get married and do not have children, because they are not going to get humane or decent consideration from the Congress of the United States."

I say that is wrong. I am just as concerned about the enlisted men having decent pay and decent living conditions as I am about the officers having decent pay and living conditions. From my own experience, which goes back a long time, to World War I, I know that the men who are commissioned but who get the least consideration yet are the most valuable are the junior officers. However, I am not more concerned about them than I am about the enlisted men. But I say to you, if this bill passes in the form it is in now, and the word gets down very quickly to the enlisted men that the bill the committee has reported out represents the consideration we are giving to our fine enlisted men who are married and who have children, and who are not living under very happy circumstances in the quarters that are provided for them, we will be doing an injustice to the solidarity of the armed services of the United States and doing a serious injustice by saying to them, I repeat, "If you are married and have children, get out. If you expect to stay in the Army, either do not get married or do not have children." In my judgment, that is exactly what is said in this bill, and I think it is unfair. I think it is immoral of us to take that viewpoint, and as one Member of Congress I do not intend to go along with it.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. In reply to your observations on marriage and children, I refer you to the testimony given by Father Cavanaugh, president of the University of Notre Dame, in which he stated that such was definitely not the result of the bill, but that the bill was designed to and would promote not only marriages, but good marriages.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. May I say, as the only alumnus in the House of Representatives from the University of Notre Dame that if that is Father Cavanaugh's observation, I should like to take him out and show him some of the places where enlisted men live and where their families live and have him, after that, say to me that that is his observation, if you are correct.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I congratulate my colleague upon the splendid address that he has made to the House. I agree with him 100 percent.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FURCOLO) there were—ayes 51, noes 53.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 90, noes 69.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON. Are there any further amendments at the Clerk's desk?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTTON: On page 34, line 11, strike out section 304.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to point out to this Committee another reason why this bill should be recommitted.

Section 304 is a personal money allowance on top of salaries, on top of special privileges. It offers to an officer of the grade of lieutenant-general a personal money allowance of $500 per year. It offers to an officer with the grade of general, admiral, or equivalent grade or rank, a personal money allowance of $2,200 a year on top of his salary. It offers to an officer with the rank of Chief of Staff of the Army, Chief of Staff, naval operations, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, commandant of the Marine Corps, and commandant of the Coast Guard a personal money allowance of $4,000 on top of his salary.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman forgot to state that the personal money allowance to a five-star general is $5,000, just to keep the record straight.

Mr. SUTTON. That is fine. I appreciate the chairman helping me. But this is just to point out what I have been saying since last Friday, that it is not an equitable pay bill. I am for a pay bill. I have said that ever since last Friday. I am for a raise for the armed services, but I am for a raise where it should be. Your enlisted men and your junior officers are the boys who need it most. In addition to that, a pay raise for the others, commensurate with what they need. However, I still maintain that the generals and admirals, with due respect to them, are not just getting $8,800. In addition to what I pointed out, a private chauffeur and an automobile and servants—I used to be chauffeur for a captain in the Navy, so I know they have them, too. On top of the PX and on top of the private plane that they have at their disposal to go on trips; on top of all those things that I have enumerated there is another thing that they cover up and hide. Maybe I should not mention it on the floor because somebody will want it investigated. Sometimes I think it should be investigated. That is what we call the contingency fund. I have specific examples where officers of the Army—and I can call names—have sent flowers to girl friends, charged to the contingency fund of the Army. That is on top of this $500 for a lieutenant general and $2,000 for generals and admirals and $4,000 for the chiefs of staff and $5,000 for the five-star generals, as the chairman of the Armed Services Committee pointed out.

I maintain that this bill should go back to the committee so that the committee can work out an equitable pay raise, where we can give the enlisted men and junior officers what they need, and cut down what we have in this bill for the top officers.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. If the Committee adopted the gentleman's views and recommitted this bill, section 304 would still be the same, because it is the law today.

Mr. SUTTON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON. It has been on the statute books for about 12 years.

Mr. SUTTON. I agree with the gentleman there, but I am just pointing out to the gentleman that it is erroneous to say that the generals get only $8,800 and do not get extra allowances or anything; I am just pointing out some of the fallacies of the bill in an effort to make a contribution.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. Let me state for the benefit of the gentleman and for the information of the House that in hearings now going on before the Committee on the Civil Service it has been shown that there are 3,157 civilian employees who draw $10,000.

Mr. SUTTON. I am glad the gentleman brought up the Committee on the Civil Service.

Mr. VINSON. There is not an Army officer or a Navy officer whose base salary is over $8,800.

Mr. SUTTON. I am glad the gentleman brought that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUTTON. When the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the subcommittee, who has done a wonderful job, was talking some time ago about the pay raises I pointed out on page 6110 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 12 a little article from the Bureau of the Budget that was inserted by Senator FLANDERS, of Vermont. In every instance the comparison between the military pay and the pay of the classified civilian Government employee, in every instance with the exception of three—one of them being the major general who gets $70 less than the classified civilian of the same status, another the corporal, who gets $34 less than the civilian classified in the same category, and another, the private, who gets $14 less than the civilian in the same category—other than those three, according to the Bureau of the Budget, the military personnel gets in excess of the civilian personnel.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTTON. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. That statement shows, I believe, that the CAF–15 is rated with a major general.

Mr. SUTTON. Less $70.

Mr. KILDAY. But they contend that they were of comparable rank.

Mr. SUTTON. That I believe is correct; no; it is GS–18.

Mr. VINSON. And Major General Hughes, the Chief of Ordnance, has 16 of that classification working under him.

Mr. SUTTON. Another reason why I say we are top-heavy in the upper brackets.

Mr. Chairman, in all fairness to the officers of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Corps, in all fairness to the enlisted men, in all fairness to the Members of this Congress, I think we should recommit this bill and let the Committee on the Armed Services, a committee in which I have great interest even though I am not on it, a committee that has the respect of the country, the respect of Members of Congress, let them report a bill that will provide a pay raise equitable to all branches of the armed services from the recruit up to the five-star general and the five-star admiral. When you do that the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services will not have to make a personal appeal to get it out unanimously; he will get it out unanimously without making a personal issue of it.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we will recommit this bill and bring out a pay-raise measure that is fair and equitable to all members of the armed services.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill is not voted on today and comes up for final action on Thursday, I will unfortunately be unable to be present for the vote.

Mr. Chairman, an enlisted man came to me yesterday, stating that he represented many enlisted men from my district. He said: "Mrs. ROGERS, will you please vote for the bill now before the Congress? It is not perfect for the enlisted men, but we feel it is much better than the present conditions that exist so far as the enlisted men are concerned. We believe if the bill is recommitted we will get no increase and no better conditions under which to work."

Then he went on to say that they did not begrudge the generals more pay. He felt that General Patton was perhaps one of the greatest generals in the world and there may be a general like him among the officers of today. There was General Eisenhower, and there was Gen. Mark Clark, and General Bradley.

He said, "We enlisted men realize the enormous responsibility of the generals and the colonels. We are unable to take over the responsibility of leadership. This must be performed by the officers. We feel they should have an increase in pay."

In addition to our great generals, we are all aware of the accomplishments of our fine admirals. The names of such great men as Halsey, Spruance, Nimitz, and others, will always be fresh in our memory. Certainly the officers as well as the enlisted men throughout our military services are deserving of adequate pay. Personally, I am very sorry that more is not done for the colonels, the majors, the captains, lieutenants, and enlisted men, but we can probably do no more at this time.

I think it would be pleasing to Mr. Forrestal, if he were alive, if the House today, under the able leadership of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], and other members of the Armed Services Committee passed legislation providing adequate increases in pay for both officers and enlisted men. The officers and men of our armed services should have sufficient pay to permit them to live comfortably and in keeping with their responsibilities. Although I do not consider this bill before the House adequate from many points of view, nevertheless I believe it is an effort in the right direction and represents an improvement over the present pay situation. I shall therefore support this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUTTON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIKES: On page 76, line 6, strike out "three" and insert "one."

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, please observe the language appearing on page 76 of the bill wherein it is stated that—

No member serving on active duty on the effective date of title II of this act shall, prior to the expiration of a period of 3 years from such effective date and while serving on continuous active duty, including for the purpose of such continuous active duty service in a reenlistment entered into within 3 months from the date of last discharge, suffer any reduction by reason of this act in the total compensation which he is entitled to receive under any provision of law in effect on the day immediately preceding such effective date.

Mr. Chairman, we have in this bill set up a new base pay schedule according to the responsibilities of the officer and enlisted man.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. The committee has no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEMKE: On page 24, line 14, strike out the period after the word "section" add a colon and the following: "Provided, That enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard heretofore or hereafter retired from active service with credit for 30 years' service shall, in addition to retired pay, be entitled to allowances of $30 per month in lieu of allowances in kind heretofore authorized under provisions of the act of 1885 establishing military retirement."

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I appear in behalf of the retired enlisted men. I offered a similar amendment last year, and we came within a few votes of adopting it, so I hope there has been a sufficient change of heart that this time we will do justice and accept it. I want to say that these men are the truly forgotten men. They were promised certain allowances and subsistence, and so forth, under the laws when they enlisted, and in 1942 were forgotten.

The only argument which the committee has ever advanced in opposition to granting allowances is an untenable argument.

They claim that when the Government broke its solemn unilateral contract with enlisted men and took from them their allowances, that in lieu of this, the Congress granted them increases in pay to counterbalance the repealed allowances.

This argument is true for Army retired enlisted men, but absolutely not in accordance with facts, for enlisted men retired from the Navy and Marine Corps.

In the act of 1942, which took away from retired enlisted men their allowances, 7,000 retired men of the Navy and Marine Corps received no increase in pay whatsoever; 20,000 or more similar Navy men, with 20 or more years' service received an increased only of $1.21 per month.

From the foregoing it is proof convincing that when Congress repealed the allowances which had been in effect since 1885, then did not compensate for this by giving these thousands of men increases in pay equivalent to the allowances arbitrarily then taken from them.

HISTORICAL FACTS

Following the Civil War it was difficult for the Army to obtain the necessary enlisted men to serve in the Indian campaigns of the West, primarily because of the hard service and the low pay received at that time.

Accordingly, in order to prevail upon enlisted men to remain in the service, and as an inducement to entice men to enlist, the Congress in the act of February 14, 1885 (25 Stat. 305), provided that enlisted men of the Army, after 30 years' service, would be entitled to retirement, and that upon retirement, they would be entitled to three-fourths of the pay of their active service rank, plus allowances for rations, clothing, quarters, fuel, and light.

In the act of 1916 establishing the Fleet and Marine Corps Reserve, Congress provided that where an enlisted man had a total active (and inactive) service in the Reserve of 30 years, he was to be entitled to allowances on parity with allowances paid to enlisted men of the armed services who had 30 years of active service.

Enlisted men who retired after 1885 after 30 years' service were given three-fourths of the pay of their rank, plus allowances in kind, to wit, food, clothing, and so forth. These allowances in kind continued until about 1894, when the allowances in kind were changed to cash allowances instead of in kind.

As the retired list increased, it was found inconvenient to grant allowances in kind and as a consequence the payment of cash allowances to retired enlisted men continued from 1894 to July 1, 1942, when they were arbitrarily repealed in the Pay Readjustment Act of June 16, 1942.

Up to July 1, 1942, every department of the armed services, in soliciting men to enlist and reenlist, furnished them with official publications promising them if they served to retirement that they would receive three-fourths of the pay of their rank on retirement, plus allowances. The armed services thus pledged themselves in a unilateral contract to pay three-fourths of the pay of the rank, plus allowances to all who retired after stipulated service.

We repeat: Allowances were first established in kind, then were changed to $6.25 per month. They were later changed to $9.25 per month, and in the act of March 2, 1907, the allowances were increased from $9.25 per month to $15.75 per month, which was the amount of the allowances received by retired enlisted men when the allowances were repealed in the act of June 16, 1942.

These increases in allowances through the years were predicated upon the increased cost of living and it is on this basis that it is provided in H. R. 1150 to now pay $30 per month allowances instead of the amount of $15.75 which was authorized in the act of March 2, 1907.

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN ARE MEMBERS OF THE ARMED SERVICES

The United States Code shows that retired enlisted men, even though they occupy an inactive status, are in fact members of the armed services and are subject to the same laws and regulations as are enlisted men in active service. If physically fit they are subject to recall for active duty.

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS

Enlisted men of the first three grades in active service are by law entitled to allowances for quarters, subsistence, clothing, and so forth. All other enlisted men are entitled to allowances of clothing, subsistence, and quarters, but in lesser amount than that paid to those of the first three grades. Retired enlisted men of all grades were promised and received allowances on the same basis as the allowances paid to the active service but these allowances were commuted at $15.75 per month under the act of March 2, 1907, for all grades on the retired list.

From the date of the enactment of the Retirement Act of February 14, 1885, all enlisted men were granted allowances as we here show. Those in active service, some received allowances in kind and some in cash, and those on the retired list all received allowances in cash.

As this unilateral contract continued for 55 years, and as allowances were promised and pledged to those who remained to retirement, the breach of the Government's unilateral contract with all enlisted men who enlisted prior to July 1, 1942, is decidedly discriminatory against the retired enlisted men who were promised and pledged these allowances if they would serve to retirement.

OFFICERS' ALLOWANCES INCREASED, RETIRED ENLISTED MEN'S ALLOWANCES REPEALED

In the Pay Readjustment Act of June 16, 1942, on the urge of the War Department, subsistence and quarters allowances to officers in the active service were increased, while the same act took from retired enlisted men entirely the allowances of $15.75 per month which they had been receiving for 55 years under a unilateral contract which the Government consummated with them at their enlistment and reenlistment. In other words, it appeared that the officers provided for themselves in this increase in allowances for their group at the expense of the aged and disabled retired enlisted men of long service.

WHAT H. R. 1150 PROVIDES

This bill provides restoration of cash allowances to retired enlisted men to the amount of $30 per month in all instances where they are credited with 30 years of honorable service.

The first paragraph of this bill provides that no enlisted man shall receive retired pay in excess of the retired pay received by warrant officers, junior grade, of equal length of service.

The second paragraph of this bill provides that enlisted men of the armed services transferred to the Reserve after stipulated active service shall be entitled to these allowances of $30 per month when their total active and inactive service totals 30 years. This provision is in accordance with the act of Congress of 1916 establishing the Fleet and Marine Corps Reserve.

COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS ON CERTAIN ALLOWANCES

Under the proposed pay increase as recommended by the Hook Commission, the first three grades enlisted men will receive allowances for subsistence and quarters of $99 per month, with a maximum pay of $300 per month, thus giving to such individual a total cash income of $399 per month, plus allowances for clothing, free medical attention, and so forth. Comparatively the retired enlisted man of the first three grades on the retired list will receive as low as $174.34 per month retired pay without any allowances for subsistence, quarters or clothing. In addition, if he requires medical attention, Army men must pay when such treatment is accorded them in Army hospitals.

From this comparison it can readily be seen that a man in active service has a cash advantage of $174 per month over the retired enlisted man of equal grade and length of service.

HOW ENLISTED MEN SUFFER

In the last report of the Navy Department there were approximately 7,000 enlisted men on the retired list of the Navy who have either not received a single cent of increase in pay since 1922, or who, if they received an increase, received less than $7 per month increase.

In other words, approximately 7,000 retired enlisted men of the Navy receive less than $96.25 per month, and some as low as $50 to $60 per month retired pay.

RECOMMENDATION OF HOOK COMMISSION

If the recommendation of the Hook Commission pertaining to changes in pay of the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps is adopted, thousands of those men will receive little or no increase in pay under the proposed pay increase. Inasmuch as the increase which the Hook Commission proposes will be taken from them under the same Hook report which advocates taking from these men the extra pay they now receive because of good conduct or extraordinary heroism.

Finally, the unilateral contract under which enlisted men were induced into enlisting, and reenlisting, to serve to retirement, and which covers every man who retired from the service prior to July 1, 1942, clearly provided three-fourths of the pay and allowances of their respective grades after 30 years' service.

No one can deny that Congress has the right to increase, or decrease, the pay of the armed services; no one can deny that Congress has the right to increase, or decrease, the allowances to enlisted men of the armed services.

However, it is clearly discriminatory and unfair that Congress should single out only the retired enlisted men to take from them their allowances, while at the same time allowances were increased for enlisted men of the active service and while they were munificently increased at the same time for officers of the active service. Not only did Congress break a unilateral contract when it took from retired enlisted men their allowances, but it discriminated against one group—the aged and disabled group—who had earned their retirement, who had consummated their contract with the Government, only to find the Congress repudiating the official pledge of the armed services as it appealed to them to enlist in the yesterdays.

It is on the basis of restoring the unilateral contract rights to retired enlisted men, and to remove the discrimination on the receipt of allowances against only this group of the armed services, that the above facts are submitted to your Committee for your consideration and adjustment.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that the Committee will accept this amendment.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been considered by the committee on several occasions. As the gentleman from North Dakota announced, it was considered last year by the House and rejected. In 1942, when the pay bill was written, instead of granting allowances as such we lumped it all into pay. It is a matter that has been advocated through the intervening years by one individual in the United States, as far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to make an inquiry of the committee. On page 76, in line 6, the phrase "three years" appears. The "three" has been changed to "one" but the "years" remains unchanged.

Mr. KILDAY. We intended it to read "one year," Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that the word "years" be stricken out and the word "year" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RABAUT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4591) to provide pay, allowances, and physical disability retirement for members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Public Health Service, the Reserve components thereof, the National Guard, and the Air National Guard, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 223, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am, Mr. Speaker, in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Does any Member desire to offer a motion to recommit without reservation? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Dakota is the only Member that qualifies under the circumstances.

The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CASE of South Dakota moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Armed Services for further study.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 163, answered "present" 1, not voting 40, as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments Nos. 1–18, 22–34, 40–121, 123–125, 134–137: These are technical amendments changing the title and section numbers of the House bill. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 19, 20, 21: The House bill defined "semipublic institution" (sales to which are exempted under the bill) to mean any corporation, and any community chest, fund, or foundation organized exclusively on a nonprofit basis for religious, charitable, or educational purposes, including hospitals. Senate amendments Nos. 19 and 21 strike out the phrase "on a nonprofit basis" and substitute the phrase "no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual" as one of the elements of the definition. Senate amendment No. 20 adds scientific institutions to the classes of institutions included within the definition. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 35: The Senate amendment exempts from the imposition of the sales tax sales of any food sold for human consumption in hotels, restaurants, cafes, bars, and other establishments where the sales price of the food furnished each individual patron (including any cover, minimum, entertainment, or other charge) is $1.50 or less. If the sales price is more than $1.50 the entire sales price is subject to the tax. The House recedes with an amendment which makes such exemption applicable only to such sales of food the price of which is $1.25 or less.

Amendment No. 36: The Senate amendment exempts publications of semipublic institutions from the imposition of the sales tax. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 37: The House bill exempted from the tax sales of medicines, pharmaceuticals, and drugs made on prescriptions of duly licensed physicians and surgeons and general and special practitioners of the healing arts. The Senate amendment provides that the sales of medicines, pharmaceuticals, and drugs shall be exempt whether or not made on prescription. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 38: This is a technical amendment to correct a typographical error. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 39: The Senate amendment exempts from the sales tax sales of cigarettes, which are subjected to a special tax under title VI of the bill (added by Senate amendments Nos. 132 and 133). The House recedes.

Amendment No. 122: The Senate amendment amends section 11 (k) of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act relating to alcoholic beverage solicitors' licenses. Under the present law a solicitor may represent more than one vendor under such a license. The Senate amendment would require that a solicitor have a separate license for each vendor he represents. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 126 and 131: The Senate amendment No. 126 strikes out the language of the House bill fixing the effective date of title V of the bill. Senate amendment No. 131 restores the identical language at the end of the amendments added by the Senate to title V. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 127: The House bill contained no provisions for raising existing gallonage taxes on alcoholic beverages. The Senate amendment provides for substantial increases in all such taxes. The House recedes with an amendment. The following table shows the tax per gallon under existing law, under the Senate amendment, and under the conference substitute:

	Existing law	Senate amendment	Conference substitute
Alcohol	$1.10	$2.20	$1.25
Whisky, gin, rum, and other spirits	.50	1.00	.75
Champagne and wine artificially carbonated	.15	.30	.22½
Other sparkling wine containing more than 14 percent of alcohol	.10	.30	.22½
Other sparkling wine containing 14 percent or less of alcohol	None	.30	.22½
Still wine containing more than 14 percent of alcohol	.10	.20	.15

Amendments Nos. 128 and 129: The Senate amendments contain provisions relating to the transition from the existing rates for the gallonage taxes on alcoholic beverages to the new rates. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 130: The Senate amendment increases the existing tax on each barrel of beer from 50 cents to $1. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 132 and 133. Under the provisions of the House bill the 2 per centum tax imposed on the gross receipts of vendors was applicable with respect to cigarettes. Senate amendment numbered 39 exempts the sale of cigarettes from such tax. Senate amendments numbered 132 and 133 add a new title VI to the bill, to be known as the "District of Columbia Cigarette Tax Act." Under the provisions of such Senate amendments a tax is imposed on the sale of cigarettes to consumers at the rate of one cent on each twenty cigarettes or fractional part thereof. The Senate amendments also provide that no person shall manufacture for sale, keep for sale, sell, or offer to sell cigarettes, or display cigarettes for sale in vending machines without having first obtained a license or licenses. The licenses are to be of three kinds: retailer's, vending machine operator's, and wholesaler's. The Commissioners shall fix the fees for such licenses, but the rate shall not exceed $5 for each retail establishment in the case of a retailer's license, $5 for each vending machine in the case of a vending machine operator's license, and $50 in the case of a wholesaler's license. The Senate amendments also provide criminal penalties for violations of the provisions of the new title VI, as added by the Senate amendments. The House recedes.

THE LATE JAMES V. FORRESTAL

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning, amidst the beautiful blooming green of a Washington spring, a great American goes to his rest in peaceful Arlington. Deeply, very deeply, do we feel his passing from our associations and his great work here to his eternal peace. James Forrestal, the late Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Defense, was a humble, courageous, and brilliant man. It was indeed an honor to know him well and many of us here in the Congress knew him well and experienced the high honor of his association and friendship. This friendship and work together we know has enriched our lives and we will cherish it as long as we live.

Having the trust of public office throughout the war and during these hard days of peace is a heavy responsibility. All of you will agree with me that only those who have borne the responsibility know its weight and strain. It is an easy act to stand on the sidelines and hold forth with criticism. Fairness of discussion regarding the great issues of our time is constructive. Honest differences of opinion is an oasis in which strength and power for our free way of life is born. Decisions—right decisions—evolve from this respected American process. If our Nation is to live, truth must be the basis of our decisions and the foundation upon which we build and progress. Personal criticism just for the sake of criticism; vindictiveness for the purpose of ruination; maliciousness for the purpose of character destruction is unjust and is of no value in the American system of life and enterprise. It has no place in our respected system of justice. Anyone who resorts to this method of viciousness illustrates beyond a doubt that they have no knowledge of the complexity, seriousness, and pressure of public responsibility during these difficult years. Those of us honored with the trust of serving the people of America today, shoulder the burden of the knowledge that all of our acts and decisions over this period in the history of our country affects the lives of generations upon generations yet to come. Together with Secretary Forrestal all of us here know the significance and meaning of this great responsibility.

Character is the backbone of American life. The character of an individual is not born overnight. Character is that powerful force born in our hearts and souls. It rises and develops as we move forward through life. Character born and molded on the anvil of truth, duty, responsibility, and service is stronger than steel, stronger than Gibraltar, stronger than any earthly conception, because character is inspired by God and exists in the hearts and souls of mankind. Anyone who deliberately and intentionally attempts to injure and destroy another person's character commits a crime to the import of a felony. Too much—far too much—of this shameless vilification is permitted today. Character cannot be assassinated. Character cannot be destroyed. Character lives beyond life itself. This great man who is leaving us now possessed character, and we all bow our heads in recognition and respect to its nobility and fineness.

The illustrious pages of American history will record the great contributions Secretary Forrestal has so generously given to his country. Completely unselfish, possessing the highest concept of duty, this distinguished American gave all of his energy and strength to the service of his country. As the first chief administrator of all of our military services, his job was tremendous, and perhaps too great in labor and responsibility for one man to have. He saw it through; he did the job. He has molded our military services into a cooperative unit. He has tried to set the pattern. In doing this he gave his strength, his energy, his life to his country. Can anyone do more with only one life to give? To James Forrestal, the distinguished first Secretary of Defense, whose intense loyalty, devotion to duty, unselfish service, and love of country—all reflected in the accomplishments of his hard labor—a grateful country gives thanks. In the name of God, the Father of us all, we wish him eternal peace.

(Legislative day of Monday, May 23, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Ralph Candler John, assistant minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou hope of the ends of the earth, source of all strength, font of all love, we bring our purposes, our deeds, our all, at the beginning of this day, for the refining influence of Thy divine grace. We beseech Thee to remove from our hearts and minds the dross of impure thoughts and unkind motives, and that Thou wilt place in their stead a quality of life, expressed in that which we both intend and do, which is worthy of those who claim Thy name.

Thou hast given us a land full of promise for ourselves and for the whole world. Thou hast vested in the Members of this body a special place in the unfolding of the destiny of mankind. Stand Thou among us, in Thy redeeming power. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the vice chairman and acting executive officer of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of June 6, 1924, as amended, relating to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Memorial 643

Resolution to memorialize the Congress of the United States to restore the former tariff of 21 percent on imported sponges

Whereas the State of Florida has for many years enjoyed a very substantial and prosperous industry, and provided a world market with the finest quality of sponges; and

Whereas thousands of our good citizens are engaged in the sponge production and market industry, and their families have been well supported and the income of those so engaged has been far above the average income for our State; and

Whereas following the close of the recent war, citizens of foreign countries, and especially in the Mediterranean Sea, have engaged in an abundant and enormous production of sponges; and

Whereas the wages paid to and received by persons engaged in the production of sponges in these foreign countries on the Mediterranean Sea are approximately $1 daily, as compared with wages paid to American workmen engaged in our sponge industry, who receive from $1 to $3 per hour; and

Whereas our sponge industry enjoyed a 21-percent protective tariff imposed by our Federal Government, and during said time the sponge industry was extremely healthy and prosperous and so continued until the tariff for foreign sponges was reduced from 21 to 8 percent, all to the injury and detriment of our entire sponge industry of Florida; and

Whereas since the reduction of said tariff, foreign sponges have glutted our markets to the extent that the American-produced sponge is now selling at about 20 cents on the dollar thereby putting hundreds of men out of work, depriving their families of a livelihood and, in some instances in the State, mortgage foreclosures have been instituted upon the homes and other property of these persons whose income has been so drastically reduced by favored foreign competition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Florida strongly urges and implores the President of the United States and the Congress to take such action within their power to restore the former tariff on sponges brought into the United States by foreign countries, and do all in their power to protect and promote Florida's great sponge industry; and, further, that a copy of this resolution be immediately forwarded to the President and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States and to the clerk of the United States Senate.

Approved by the Governor May 20, 1949.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS—RESOLUTION OF ALABAMA LEGISLATURE

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama in support of the measure recently introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] providing for a national foundation for the study of the disease known as multiple sclerosis.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

House Joint Resolution 21

Whereas an estimated 250,000 Americans are suffering from the disease called multiple sclerosis, the cause of which is unknown and for which there is no known treatment; and

Whereas a bill is now before the National Congress, introduced by Senator TOBEY, providing for the setting up of a national foundation for the study of said disease; and

Whereas it is the sense of this body that such a foundation is advisable: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives in the National Congress from Alabama be and they hereby are respectfully requested to actively support the purposes of the Tobey bill; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house and the secretary of the senate send copies of this resolution to each of Alabama's Senators and Representatives in the National Congress, and to Mrs. Lou Gehrig.

Unanimously adopted May 20, 1949.

AMENDMENT OF VETERANS' PREFERENCE ACT OF 1944

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend section 12 of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, as amended (58 Stat. 390), in order to provide greater security to certain disabled veterans who are permanent classified civil-service employees of the United States.

Because of the reductions in Veterans' Administration appropriations, hundreds of amputees are threatened with being separated from the Government service. All affected are regularly employed veterans with a civil-service status and with exceptionally good efficiency ratings. To be retained when lay-offs occur, their efficiency rating must exceed those of nonveterans who are also regularly employed.

The bill would give preference employees whose efficiency ratings are good or better, and who either have service-connected disabilities rated not less than 60 percent by the Veterans' Administration or are in receipt of a special award by reason of service-connected disabilities pursuant to public laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, retention rights in preference to all other competing employees.

The bill (S. 1937) to amend the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

JAMES FORRESTAL

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, at the request of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], I ask unanimous consent to read into the body of the RECORD a statement which he has prepared with regard to the passing of his personal friend, Secretary Forrestal. Because of illness the senior Senator from New Jersey is unable to be present in the Senate and therefore has asked me to present this statement in his behalf.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. In his statement the senior Senator from New Jersey says:

MAY 25, 1949.

Because I am recuperating from a recent operation, I am not able to be on the floor of the Senate myself, but in light of the tragic death of my personal friend, Secretary Forrestal, I desire to make the following statement for the RECORD, and have requested my colleague, Senator HENDRICKSON, to present this statement for me:

"We who have known Jim Forrestal through the years, and this means long before he entered the public service, have recognized his wonderful loyalty to principle, and his sincere approach to life's responsibilities. When I was executive secretary of Princeton University during President Hibben's administration, I saw a great deal of Jim in connection with Princeton affairs, when he was then a leading member of the Dillon, Read firm.

"When he was chosen by Secretary Knox as an aide in the Navy Department, I rejoiced because I felt that here was a man on whose integrity and ability we could rely with full confidence. When he became Under Secretary of the Navy, I rejoiced again, because I felt the administration had recognized his brilliance and his capacity for constructive thinking. His subsequent appointment as Secretary of the Navy, and then finally as our first Secretary of National Defense, gave me a further feeling of confidence in this recognition by the administration of a man of his outstanding character and vision.

"As President Truman rightly said, Jim Forrestal was a real casualty of the war, as much so as though he had been killed in action. My sorrow is that he could not have realized the high esteem and affection everybody held for him, and the appreciation of the people of America for his wonderful unselfish service to his country. I shall miss him as a great American and also as a warm personal friend.

"I wish to extend my deepest sympathy to members of his family."

Mr. President, I join in those sentiments, and in that worthy tribute to a great American.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on amendment No. 1, offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. [Putting the question.]

Mr. MORSE. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The "noes" have it. The Senator from Oregon asks for a division.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No business has been transacted since the previous quorum call.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.]

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no business transacted as yet. The Chair has not even announced the result of the vote on the appeal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. An appeal from the decision of the Chair is business, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appeal from the decision of the Chair is the pending question.

Mr. MORSE. I shall await the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, according to those who voted, apparently is sustained, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Hunt	Murray
Brewster	Ives	Myers
Bricker	Johnson, Colo.	Neely
Bridges	Johnson, Tex.	O'Conor
Butler	Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney
Cain	Kefauver	Reed
Cordon	Kem	Robertson
Donnell	Knowland	Russell
Eastland	Langer	Saltonstall
Ecton	Lodge	Smith, Maine
Ellender	Long	Sparkman
Ferguson	Lucas	Stennis
Flanders	McCarran	Taylor
Frear	McFarland	Thomas, Okla.
Gillette	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Graham	Magnuson	Thye
Gurney	Malone	Tydings
Hayden	Martin	Wiley
Hendrickson	Millikin	Williams
Hill	Morse	Withers
Holland	Mundt

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Mr. MARTIN asked and obtained consent to be absent from the Senate during the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to explain the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves, and then yield to the Senator from Maryland.

The Chair put, quite properly, the first amendment for a voice vote, prior to the time when a good many of the proponents of the amendment had been able to return from a ceremony, in order to be able to present their views on the floor of the Senate. I was of the opinion that there would be considerable discussion of the amendment; but as the voice vote was being taken, I recognized that the action of the Senate could not possibly be fair to the proponents of the amendment in their absence. Then I called for a division. I understand that the Chair and the Parliamentarian are of the opinion that the Chair announced the vote before the division was called for. All I can say, subject to the testimony of witnesses around me, is that I called for a division prior to any announcement on the part of the Chair, because I recognized what was happening.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I now yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, although, in the main, those of us on the committee are opposing this amendment, yet we have no disposition to foreclose the consideration of any amendment or the vote on it or its discussion in the fullest degree.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the action which was taken on the amendment be reconsidered, so as to bring the amendment of the Senator from Oregon again before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland requests unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Oregon was rejected be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is again before the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me say that I shall not debate the amendment, because I think we covered it rather fully the other day. There is a great deal of merit behind the amendment; but a majority of the members of the committee, after the committee had considered the amendment, took the position that we should not remove at one time all the restraints upon the power of the Secretary of Defense.

We give him rather broad express power in the forepart of this section of the bill. The committee favored retaining this restraint, believing it wise to take one or two steps forward at a time, until the merit of the proposition is abundantly proved. For that reason, although with a great deal of sympathy for the motivation which causes the amendment to be offered, I shall have to oppose the amendment.

I make this brief statement so that those who are desirous of knowing the committee's position on the amendment may understand why the committee did not adopt the amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, having just entered the Chamber, I assume from what has been said that amendment No. 1 proposed by the Senator from Oregon is under discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is correct.

Mr. FLANDERS. I wish to speak briefly to the amendment. I shall begin by reading article 16 of the Constitution of Vermont, which reads as follows:

That the people have a right to bear arms for the defence of themselves and the State—and as standing armies in time of peace are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be kept up; and that the military should be kept under strict subordination to and governed by the civil power.

Mr. President, as can be understood from a reading of that provision of the Vermont Constitution, my ancestors were a rather stern and rock-bound lot of civilian individualists. I regret to say that I have softened somewhat in the period since that constitution was written, and am willing to admit the necessity for us to have, in these times, a standing army in time of peace.

That being the case, I should like to read that part of the article of the Vermont Constitution to which I would still adhere. As I would still adhere to it, it would read as follows:

That the people have a right to bear arms for the defence of themselves and the State; and that the military should be kept under strict subordination to and governed by the civil power.

Mr. President, I have had a great deal of interest in the point of view which has been expressed, particularly by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in regard to the proposal to strike out the specific instructions after the word "proper", on page 4, in line 19. There is much that seems desirable in the presentation which has been made. I still believe, however, with all my heart and soul that the military must be definitely under the direction of the civil authorities. That does not mean, of course, that the civil authorities should have anything to do with the technical details of the operation of the various branches of the armed services, but it does go to the point of not approaching within any conceivable distance the unparalleled efficiency of military staff which was represented in the German military organization.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or would he rather finish?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLANDERS. I prefer to yield.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the Senator has misunderstood the amendment, because the language in the bill would weaken civilian control. It facilitates the military empire builder who wants to set up a show of his own without being interfered with by civilian authority. What we seek to do here is to enable the civilian authority to make consolidations and transfers, to save some of the taxpayers' money in time of peace and get some efficiency in time of war.

Mr. FLANDERS. That, I may say to the junior Senator from Massachusetts, is a very good argument, but personally I cannot consider even the civilian head of the defense power as a sufficient defense against the consolidation of military power. In speaking unfavorably of the consolidation of military power, I am not speaking in any sense of there being anything immoral or subversive, or to any degree reprehensible, in the natural, and I would say even the proper, tendency of the trained and professional members of the armed services to consolidate their control to the furthest possible limit. That is the way they have been trained. That is the way we have trained them. That is the natural direction for them to take. But I still believe, in spite of that fact, that the procedure of checks and balances applies here.

Yesterday, if I understood the argument, there was a suggestion that the proposed act should permit the Secretary of Defense to consolidate services, to transfer them, so that one might be built up and another diminished. It is at that point that I believe the authority of the legislative branch of the Government, expressed through legislative action, should retain the ability to control, or at least to oversee, to place a restraining hand upon, any procedure of that sort. I believe the history of the past few months has indicated the danger of one branch or another of the service going too far, and it is the function of the Congress, in my belief, to determine the larger policies affecting military organization.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator regret the fact that without any legislation the Air Force was built up in 1942 by taking men from the Army, or that in 1945 men who were destined for the Air Force were diverted into the Infantry? Does he think that was too bad?

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say to the junior Senator from Massachusetts that I raised a somewhat similar question with the Senator from Maryland day before yesterday when I asked him whether the operations on Guadalcanal would have been possible if the definition of the duties of the Marine Corps in the pending bill had then been in existence and had been obeyed. The Senator from Maryland indicated what, of course, is the truth—that when we get into war we do what is necessary.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Vermont is saying that it is a great pity for the friends of the Marine Corps to seek to restrict them to amphibious warfare, and that they are doing the Marine Corps a very bad turn when they attempt to do that, then I should be the first to agree with him. As I tried to point out yesterday, the technique is not ideal. We now have amphibious, airborne, and glider units, parachutists, and so forth, and we cannot tell what changes the future developments of science will bring about. All we know is that human bravery is always going to be an asset in war, and it seems to me fantastic for the friends of the Marine Corps, of whom I am one, to try to tie the Marine Corps to some narrow, limited, technical specialty, when we all know that the thing which gives them their greatness and their hold on the admiration and the affection of the American people is the fact that they are brave, together with the fact that they are shock troops. So, if the Senator from Vermont is saying it is a mistake to tie the Marine Corps down to some passing technical military technique, then I heartily agree with him.

Mr. FLANDERS. In reply, Mr. President, I should like to say that I am concerned not merely for the Marine Corps—and I am concerned for the Marine Corps—but I am likewise concerned with certain other aspects of the subject, and I am proposing certain amendments covering them; which, if it is in order, I shall offer at the end of this brief discourse.

There is within the major subdivisions of the armed forces an ample field for reorganization, for the development of new and special ideas, and special assignments to special groups, and the Congress once a year can review the matter to see whether anything more is needed than that freedom within the major subdivisions of the armed forces. We are here most of the time, and we are always available.

I wish now to touch on one other point. It is expected by the proponents of the amendment that increased efficiency will be obtained by perfect freedom in the reorganization, reassignment, and reallocation of the duties, powers, and personnel of the major branches of the services. I wish to challenge that idea. Again, and for the first time in what I have been saying, referring directly to the Marine Corps, I should look at the high morale, the remarkable record, the well known bravery of those shock troops, as something that inheres in them as an organization. More than once in my business life I have seen endeavors to promote efficiency by bringing together various groups, who separately were extremely enthusiastic and possessed of high morale and high effectiveness, but who, when brought together, lost their morale and their effectiveness, and became submerged in a pool in which individuality and a somewhat localized pride were lost. That has happened so many times that I am inclined to look dubiously on the possibility of developing the over-all enthusiasm, the over-all morale of which the Senator from Massachusetts was speaking, in anything like the degree of strength that can be obtained from adding together the enthusiasms and the morales of separate organizations and institutions, and coordinating them into a morale of the whole.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator permit me to say that certainly we shall never achieve complete enthusiasm or loyalty within the armed services as a whole if we do not begin to try to achieve them? We have not even begun to try. I know that since the unification bill has become law the natural tendencies of all the realistic young officers I have seen at exercises which I have attended have been to become enthusiastically in favor of it, because they recognize that it represents the only hope for the future. But does the Senator from Vermont know of any responsible man in any of the armed services or in any position in the Government who does not believe in the Marine Corps and who does not want to retain the Marine Corps?

Mr. FLANDERS. I know of no one who does not want to retain the Marine Corps. I have heard, as one hears in Washington, whispers and rumors, but I am not contemplating them as sources of worry.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator is not. I understand the Senator to speak of merging the Marine Corps. We can hear in Washington every kind of rumor and gossip we want to hear. There was an Assistant Secretary of the Navy who once said, "Why not leave the whole thing to the Navy? We have ships on the sea, we have the Marine Corps; why not abolish all the rest of it?" But that was a fantastic statement to which no one paid any attention. We have to have all the services. I am sure the Senator from Vermont will agree with me that, to be specific General Eisenhower does not want to abolish the Marine Corps; General Devers does not want to abolish it. There may be some one in a little cubby-hole in the Pentagon Building who may have stated to the contrary in some barroom. I do not know about that.

Mr. FLANDERS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I got out from under the old wives' tales, and I am not basing my policy on that sort of thing. I should like to say, however, and to say it as effectively as it is possible for me to say it, that the morale of the whole will be built up by the coordination of the morale of the separate parts. I am speaking not from the standpoint of the military, but I have had a great deal of experience in organizing men, and have made mistakes in trying to get too pretty organization diagrams instead of following the laws of human nature. It is important that the separate morales shall be retained and built up; and the way to get the best morale finally is through coordinating the individual morales until they become the morale of the whole.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. It has been stated several times that the pending amendment seeks only to strike out language which is in the basic law. Does the Senator agree with that presumed fact?

Mr. FLANDERS. That being the case, first, why was it put in? Second, why strike it out?

Mr. CAIN. The question why the language has been included in the bill when identical language is continued in the basic law has been raised, may I respond to the Senator from Vermont, by others, for whom the Senator from Washington has considerable respect as to their knowledge of military affairs?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I caught the purport of the question of the Senator from Washington. The original language defining the roles and missions, to the extent that those roles and missions are defined in the bill, was placed in the original act largely at the request of General Vandegrift, who was then the Commandant of the Marine Corps. When the subject was up during consideration of the pending bill, General Cates, the present Commandant of the Marine Corps, appeared before the committee and took the same position which had been taken by General Vandegrift. I think I am quoting General Cates pretty accurately when I say that not only did he support it, but he left the inference with the committee that unless these safeguards, as he would call them, were left in the bill, he would rather have no bill at all.

I can say to the Senator from Washington, in support of what the Senator from Vermont is saying, that if those safeguards are removed, eminent and high men in some of the branches of the service fear that at some moment in the future someone clothed with civilian authority might try to rearrange the purely military role. I am not saying that is sound; I am only giving the Senator the facts. There is such a fear, and in pursuit of trying to allay it and to get everything we could in the way of unification, to the extent we could save money and consolidate the functions insofar as practicable, we put this language into the bill. The identical part sought by the Senator from Oregon to be stricken was suggested by the new Secretary of Defense himself, because he had been charged with seeking to do the very thing which we have been discussing; namely, consolidating the Marine Corps with the Army.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Maryland direct me to the page in the record at which the Secretary of Defense asked that that language be put into the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. A great many of our hearings were held in executive session and were not made a part of the printed record of the hearings. The committee specifically instructed the chairman that none of the executive session hearings were to be printed in the RECORD. The chairman said he would like to have them all printed, but the chairman was not sustained in that respect.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield further?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. The statement has been made that the Secretary of Defense had not asked that the language be put in; that he had said that if it were put in, in order to pick up a few votes here and there, he would not object to it. That is a very different thing.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think that is quite accurate. I do not mean that the relator of the story thought he was telling it inaccurately, but I think Mr. Johnson was anxious to have the language put in because he had been attacked in the press, and, I believe, over the air, after the incident of the cancellation of the construction of the supercarrier. It was stated that he would go further and wipe out the Marine Corps. He told me personally, both in my office and before the committee, that he had nothing of that kind in mind, and would certainly like some of us to bail him out, because he did not want the services to think he was hostile to any of them.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I should like to express my appreciation for the information which has been provided by the Senator from Maryland, and to ask one question. If the so-called protective features in the pending bill should be stricken from the bill because of the adoption of the amendment which is now before the Senate, is it not a fact that the protective features will remain in the basic law and no one could actually change the services, willy-nilly, as some persons think might be the case?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am inclined to think that the estimation of the situation made by the Senator from Washington is accurate, with one qualification, that in this particular bill we do permit the Secretary to make transfers, and so forth. That might be construed in some quarters as weakening the old saving clauses, so to speak; and for that reason we have reemphasized it so that there would be no question about it. If we remove those saving clauses it is perfectly possible that some attorney might interpret the fact of having given express authority to the Secretary of Defense to make transfers, as meaning that he could take a man from the Navy and place him in the Army. So, in order that he would not come in, like a camel trying to get his nose under the tent, we wanted to be frank, open, aboveboard, and completely fair, and, therefore, we wanted to show the intent of the Congress.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Maryland and his associates do not think those fears are going to be realized. They still endeavor to placate and satisfy them, so far as they can?

Mr. TYDINGS. May I answer the question?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the proponents of the amendment, and also those who may not be in favor of it, that I believe while this transition is taking place from two separate executive departments, the Army and the Navy, to one executive department based on the three branches, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, we are going to carry with us enthusiasm for the movement, we are going to carry with us the highest degree of morale, as the Senator from Vermont has been pointing out, and we are going to carry with us a desire to make unification work, if, so far as we can do so within the scope of the purpose of unification, we let everyone know that we are out to build the best armed service we can build, rather than to hurt any one of the services.

I think the day may well come when, having laid that broad foundation of confidence, we may consider something tantamount to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. But I would say that there is a human-nature problem. After all, spirit is of great importance, whether it is in a political campaign, an army, a business, or what not, and from that angle I would say that I believe wisdom lies on the side of proceeding a little more slowly for the moment, and eventually no doubt it may be considered wise to incorporate in the law something in the nature of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, in considering the functions and reorganization of the armed services, there is another example which I conceive to come within the area with which the legislative branch of the Government may concern itself. It relates to the question of the extent of the responsibility of the Air Force.

The bomber, and all the various forms in which the airplane has been developed, the radar equipment which goes with the locating of planes, the wonderful mass of scientific developments which have gone into the building up of the functions, the purposes, the equipment of the Air Corps, have made it, I feel right in saying, a preeminent arm of the Government. I believe, however, that as we look at the history of the past year or two we will see that there is some danger that the functions of that arm of the armed services might be somewhat exaggerated. In particular it would seem to me that it is within the proper area of decision by the legislative branch to say that each of the armed forces shall be supplied with the tactical air-service requirements for its own field of action, that it shall not depend for any of its tactical operations on getting into contact with a completely separate branch of the service.

I am very much interested in seeing to it, and I shall offer one or two amendments for the purpose, that we make sure, for instance, to use an extreme example, that the Army does not have to call upon the Air Force for planes for spotting artillery. That is, I admit, an extreme example. I would not want to see the Navy inhibited from complete support, in its equipment and organization, of all the air force it needs for its task of keeping the seas clear and protecting itself from raids by bombers. I would not want to see the Navy inhibited in the slightest degree in that particular. I would not want to see the Marine Corps without the complement of tactical air equipment which is necessary for its operations.

To my mind the Air Force itself is primarily a strategic force, and should be built up as a strategic force, coordinated in time of war with the major operations of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, concerned particularly and charged particularly with the strategic operations of aerial warfare. These areas of which I have been speaking, it seems to me, are at the present time within the proper sphere of the legislative branch.

I had a most interesting experience about 1942, I think it was, while I was en route from Washington to New York. I met Secretary Knox on the train. I had in my hand the latest edition of an afternoon newspaper which carried the news that British bombers had sunk Italian warships in the harbor of Otranto. I asked Secretary Knox if he had seen the news. He said he had not. I showed him the article, and he said, "My admirals tell me that that cannot be done." Yet it was done. We remember also that in the Malay Sea Japanese aircraft sank two British battleships which had tried vainly to get protection from the Royal Air Force.

Those lessons, of course, are learned, but it seems to me there still remains possibly some danger, with which we can concern ourselves, that the tactical air requirements of each of the branches of the service may be somewhat neglected, may become an area of perhaps heated discussion, at least during the period when the services are shaking themselves together. That is one of the points to which I am addressing certain amendments.

I should now like to inquire of the Presiding Officer whether it is in order for me to offer these amendments at this time, or shall I wait until the amendment at present before the Senate has been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MALONE in the chair). An amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. FLANDERS. Then I yield the floor.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall take 3 or 4 minutes to explain my amendment, and I should particularly like to have the attention of the Senator from Maryland to these comments, because I do not want the RECORD to show any error as to the position of the junior Senator from Oregon in regard to the views of the Secretary of Defense.

If the Senator from Maryland will scan my remarks of yesterday, he will find that I was very careful not to seek to give the impression that the Secretary of Defense was opposed to the language of the bill which my amendment seeks to have stricken from the bill. In fact, the RECORD will show that the bill containing the language which the junior Senator from Oregon seeks to strike was recommended by the Secretary of Defense.

I did express as my personal hunch and judgment that the language inserted in the bill on page 4, line 19, after the word "proper," and several lines following, which I seek to have stricken from the bill, was one of the compromises which the Secretary of Defense accepted in order to have what he considered to be an improved unification bill. I think the language of the Senator from Maryland, expressed on the floor this morning, bears me out on that point.

I do not know what the Secretary of Defense would say if we said to him, "Now, you can have your choice, this bill with the language in it, or a bill with the language out." I can only express my own belief that he would say, "I will take it with the language out," because the Secretary of Defense has no such fear as some of the military leaders seem to have as to what would happen to roles and missions if the language did not remain in the bill. It is that point to which I wish to address myself because it is that point which I think my good friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] has completely overlooked in his discussion. In fact I think he has made a good argument for my amendment, but I believe that after making his argument he reaches the wrong conclusion.

I stress this point, because it is a myth that my amendment would endanger in any way the Marine Corps or any other branch of the Military Establishment. It is a myth, Mr. President, that my proposal would interfere in any way with the power of the Congress over roles and missions. The amendment I have offered does not take away, or attempt to take away, that power from the Congress. It would be absurd for me to attempt to do it, because it cannot be done. Through all the discussion by the opponents of my amendment has run the fallacy that under my amendment the Secretary of Defense could transfer men in the marines into the Army or into the Air Force or into any other segment of the service. That is absurd. In the interest of efficiency and economy, he should be allowed to detail men to special missions and assignments. The difference is between the word "transfer" and the word "detail," but it is a vital difference. He ought to be allowed to detail men.

Let me reduce it to a hypothetical, factual situation, because unless Senators can see this in terms of fact situations, they cannot realize the mistake the Senator from Vermont is making in his judgment on this point. Let me take as an example the great marine training center at San Diego. It is a wonderful plant. I do not think there is a better plant for the training of ground troops anywhere in the Military Establishment. But under roles and missions, a limit is set on the personnel of the Marine Corps. It can train only so many men. It trains new recruits in the marines at its San Diego plant. I ask Senators, if they are interested in economy, should that plant operate—and I take the percentages hypothetically—at 10, 20, or 30 percent of its capacity because of the limitations that Congress itself puts upon the roles and missions of the Marine Corps, including its personnel? When the Army—and this is no hypothetical situation—gets into such a situation that it wants to train a large number of men in ground training, must it set up, some few miles from San Diego, its own expensive camp for the training of those men? Under my amendment, the Secretary of Defense would be allowed to issue an order that, because the San Diego marine plant is not being used to its maximum capacity, soldiers in the Army of the United States should be trained at the San Diego plant in the numbers that can be accommodated. They certainly could not get better ground training than at that marine center. If it is economy and efficiency the Senate wants, that is a good example of how to get it.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I shall yield in a moment. Such an order would not interfere at all with the roles and missions of the Marine Corps.

I wish to make one other point before I yield to the Senator from Vermont, because I want him to hear my whole argument on this point in answer to what he has said. I urged Senators to keep in mind the fact that an officer in the Marine Corps, or the Army, or the Navy, or the Air Force, is commissioned by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. There is not the slightest language in my amendment that interferes with that prerogative and power. Officers will continue to be commissioned by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States, and we cannot possibly transfer that power to the Secretary of Defense. I fear the Senator from Vermont is laboring under the mistaken notion that my amendment would make it possible for the Secretary of Defense to modify roles and missions.

Let me say that there has been a very interesting reaction in the Senate to my amendment. I believe I have two types of support for my amendment. A considerable number of Senators are going to vote for my amendment today. There is considerable support for my amendment among Senators—and I think the chairman of the committee expressed it very clearly earlier today—who feel that "Morse's amendment has a lot of merit to it, and probably should be adopted in the next few years but not now." The Senators who agree with the merits of my amendment but think it should not be adopted today are yielding to the fears in the minds of present-day military leaders. These military leaders have told these Senators that unless the so-called safeguards on page 4, beginning in line 19, after the word "proper," are continued in the new bill there might be some interference by the Secretary of Defense with their present activities.

Mr. President, are we going to let the fears and the vested interests of existing Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force personnel cause us to pass a piece of legislation which I respectfully say places on the Secretary of Defense a type of limitation which makes effective unification impossible? Or are we going to disregard these myths and recognize that under the organic law the power of Congress over roles and missions is not affected at all by my amendment. Under my amendment the Secretary of Defense cannot change the functions of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Marine Corps. However, he should be allowed to assign special details so far as personnel is concerned, and he certainly should be allowed, in the interest of economy and efficiency, to transfer certain activities which are now being exercised by one branch of the service—and I used as my example yesterday waterborne transportation—to another branch of the service. My amendment would make that possible. My amendment does not give him the right to decrease by one man the existing officers of the branches of the service who have been commissioned and confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

I say, Mr. President, that some Senators are basing their action on fears existing in the minds of the Military Establishment. We acted on the basis of those fears in 1947, and we did not unify the armed services. We are not going to unify the armed services today if we permit the fears of these military leaders again to dictate to us and cause us to accept unwise compromises in the bill. Even the very able chairman of the Armed Services Committee admits that these fears of the military leaders exist, and he also admits that they have no basis in fact so far as my amendment is concerned.

I have only one desire, and that is that the Senate pass a bill which will help to unify the armed services, and I say that the Senate is not going to do it if it throws out this basic amendment. This is the amendment which determines which way we go. This is the amendment which determines whether or not we are going to keep these three departments of the armed services in a position where we cannot touch any of their so-called vested interests in that we cannot eliminate the duplication and the waste which is admitted by almost everyone exists in the Military Establishment. If my amendment is defeated the Senate will encourage rather than discourage duplication, waste, and inefficiency in the armed services.

I think it is a great mistake if the Senate turns down my amendment. I wish the Senate would give it very careful consideration and come forward with proof that the allegations which are being made about my amendment having any such effect on the Marine Corps as I read in this morning's newspapers, are true. I deny such allegations. I deny them completely.

I make one other point. What do Senators think Congress would be doing, what do they think the President of the United States would be doing, what do they think the Armed Services Committees of the two branches of the Congress would be doing if any Secretary of Defense sought to usurp the type of power upon which these fear arguments are predicated? The Congress would move in immediately. The danger simply does not exist; but the opportunity to unify the armed services and make the necessary savings is available to us today. If we turn down this amendment, I am convinced that we are turning our backs on what I think is a great obligation to save the tremendous sums of money which need be saved. We will be failing to give to the Secretary of Defense the administrative—and I underline "administrative"—authority which he needs if he is to carry out the objectives of unification.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I see nothing in the words proposed to be omitted by the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon which would prevent the use of the plant at San Diego for the training of other branches of the service. The words proposed to be omitted from line 19 on, as I read them, have nothing in them which would prevent any transfer of property for purposes of training or anything else. It speaks of functions, personnel, and assignments of military personnel, but it says nothing whatever about transfers of property.

Mr. MORSE. My reply to the Senator from Vermont is that he is not taking into account—and I use this language advisedly—the type of jurisdictional claim which will be made in protest of any such decision of the Secretary of Defense if he attempts to use the San Diego base, for example, for the ground training of Army troops. If the language I seek to eliminate is left in the bill the claim will be made in the Pentagon Building that such an order by the Secretary of Defense would interfere with the functions of the Marine Corps. We shall have a repetition of one of the things which for the past 2 years have been so detrimental and such an impediment to unification. If we leave this language in, the Pentagon Building will be turned into a debating society, on the question as to whether or not the Secretary of Defense is exceeding his power by any such order as I suggest in regard to using the San Diego Marine center. For 2 years that is exactly the type of stymieing to which the Secretary of Defense has been subjected. The representatives of the various branches of the armed services have had their lines into the Congress, and have been able to protest any decision of real importance which the Secretary of Defense has issued in an attempt to bring about true unification.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to say to the Senator from Oregon that he is used to looking at the English language from the standpoint of its legal interpretation. I am not. As a plain, ordinary layman in the use of the English language, I see not the slightest loophole in the language which it is proposed to omit, which would in the slightest degree affect in the example given, the use of the base at San Diego.

Mr. MORSE. The answer to the Senator from Vermont is that during the past 2 years the Secretary of Defense has not seen fit to make use of the San Diego base, but he has gone along with an insistence upon training Army men at a nearby camp, for the very reason that he knew that if he sought to use the Marine base the question would be raised by the Pentagon curbstone lawyers within the Military Establishment as to whether or not he was interfering with the functions of the Marines. Either we must give the Secretary of Defense the power to exercise the type of authority for which I am asking, in order to avoid duplications, or we shall have to go along with the present waste of which the Military Establishment is guilty.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. At the time the Secretary was hesitant to make that change, this language did not exist.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Vermont is mistaken on that particular point, because for the past 2 years the Secretary of Defense has been handicapped by just this type of restriction upon him.

Mr. FLANDERS. Would those restrictions be removed if this new wording were removed from the bill?

Mr. MORSE. I think so; definitely. The debate itself would show a clear expression of legislative intent.

Mr. FLANDERS. As an expression of legislative intent, as indicated by the debate, I can see some strength to the position the Senator from Oregon is taking; but if it all lies in the question of the intent of Congress as indicated by the debates, let me state for myself that I believe the Secretary of Defense has a perfect right and the duty to use the establishment at San Diego for the training of any troops which he thinks is desirable. So far as eliminating this particular wording is concerned, it neither adds to nor subtracts from the legality or the possibility of such action.

Let me make one further inquiry——

Mr. MORSE. May I answer the first point first?

Mr. FLANDERS. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to make two points in answer to the Senator from Vermont.

My first point is that former Secretary of War Judge Patterson pointed out befor our committee—I do not quote him verbatim, but I quote the effect of his testimony—that the lawyers in the Pentagon Building within the Military Establishment always run to their lawbooks whenever the Secretary of Defense hands down a decision which they think interferes with one of their vested interests. They endeavor to see if they cannot find a basis for successful protest against his decision. I assure the Senator from Vermont that the type of language which I am seeking to strike if left in the bill will make a field day for the Pentagon military lawyers.

The second point is that, contrary to what the Senator from Vermont says, the deletion of the language would leave us with a statute which, so far as the power of the Secretary of Defense is concerned, would specifically authorize him to proceed to eliminate duplications. Listen to the language which would be left:

> Taking of appropriate steps, including such coordination, transfers, and consolidations as may be necessary, to eliminate unnecessary duplication or overlapping in the fields of procurement, supply, transportation, storage, health, research, and personnel, and in such other fields, as he may deem proper.

With my amendment adopted, what, then, is his limitation? His limitation then is only the existing organic law. As I pointed out in the debate yesterday, my amendment is subject to the existing powers of the President and the Congress over roles and missions. When the Senator from Vermont tells me—if I correctly understand him—that there is nothing in the language which clarifies the position of the Secretary of Defense, I tell him that by the deletion of the language which my amendment seeks to strike we would clearly give to the Secretary of Defense the power to accomplish savings, eliminate duplication, detail personnel to special missions, and bring about a unification of the armed services in accordance with our professed objectives and intentions.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to close this most interesting and informative colloquy, so far as I am concerned, by a simple restatement of my position on this particular question.

Principle No. 1 is that the deletion of the words sought to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon would make possible certain actions which I think the Congress should not authorize.

Principle No. 2 is that it seems to me the record of this debate gives the Secretary ample authority for doing such things as those which the Senator from Oregon feels he should have the power to do.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as to the last point the Senator from Vermont has made, I wish to say that he is completely mistaken. It is my position, and I believe it can be clearly demonstrated, that if the language which I seek to have deleted is permitted to remain in the bill, it will further restrict the authority of the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. FLANDERS. If the Senator will permit, I would interrupt for a moment to ask whether the Senator from Oregon feels that the bill as it stands goes very far beyond meeting the purpose which Mr. Patterson said ought to be met.

Mr. MORSE. If I thought so, I would have signed the majority report. But because I am convinced, for the reasons I stated at length during the debate yesterday on the floor of the Senate, that the bill will defeat effective unification, I am opposed to the bill as it is now drawn.

I think the Senator from Vermont is taking a position, in regard to the amendment, which will do more than anything else to defeat effective unification, because the language which the Senator from Vermont says should be retained in the bill is, I say, the very type of language which will produce the kind of result Judge Patterson suggested before our committee, when he said—and I quote now from his testimony, as appearing at page 151 of the printed hearings:

> There are three main shortcomings in the present law. In the first place, the Secretary of Defense does not have enough in the way of authority. He is not at the head of an executive department, in the sense that the Secretary of State is at the head of the State Department, and the Secretary of the Treasury is at the head of the Treasury Department. The authority of the Secretary is also weakened by the excessive powers reserved to the Secretaries of the three Departments—Army, Navy, and Air Force—and I know of cases where, if the Secretary of Defense issues an order, people down the line run to look at the lawbooks and run to lawyers to see if he had the power to issue that order.

On the basis of my study of this bill, I am satisfied that I am now offering the most important amendment which can be offered, to carry out the objectives which Judge Patterson so ably stated before our committee.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I am very glad to yield; but in fairness to the Senator from Vermont, I should yield first to him.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, let me state that I do not wish the Secretary of Defense to have the power to make transfers of military personnel from one service to another or to make details or assignments of military personnel in a manner designed to effect or make such assignments or to change the assignments of military personnel in the proper performance of their functions.

Since I do not wish to have the Secretary of Defense have such power, I shall be compelled—although most regretfully, I wish to state—to vote against the amendment. Of course, it is always a regret to me to have to vote against a position taken by my good friend the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont what he means by the word "transfer." It seems to me that at that point the Senator from Vermont begins to engage in fallacious reasoning.

Let me put this hypothetical question: Does the Senator from Vermont think the Secretary of Defense should not have the authority to transfer—I would say "detail," but let us use the word the Senator from Vermont has used—transfer 500 naval aviators to the Air Force, for training on B–36 bombers?

Mr. FLANDERS. Not so long as they are still a part of the Navy, and are transferred for training only.

Mr. MORSE. Of course they would be Navy aviators.

Mr. FLANDERS. And they would be transferred for training only?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; they would be transferred for training only. After all, that is all the Secretary of Defense could do, under the language used in this case. I respectfully submit to the Senator from Vermont that he is making a great mistake in his interpretation of the meaning of the word "transfer." He is assuming that "transfer" means that the Secretary of Defense could take 500 Navy aviators, remove their Navy uniforms, clothe them in Air Force uniforms, and make them Air Force aviators. Of course, the Secretary of Defense could not possibly do that; the organic law would prohibit it. There is nothing in the amendment which would give the Secretary of Defense such authority; and if he attempted to do such a thing, the organic law would stop him.

Let me propound another hypothetical question—because, after all, it is in terms of such hypothetical questions that we must consider the meaning the Senator from Vermont gives to the word "transfer." I respectfully submit that the Senator from Vermont gives the impression from what he says that he means that the Secretary of Defense would have authority to change Navy personnel into Army personnel or Army personnel into Air Force personnel or into Navy personnel if my amendment is adopted. But under the organic law the Secretary of Defense could not do that.

Mr. FLANDERS. Does the Senator from Oregon assume that the word "transfer" means the assignment, for training only, to another branch of the service?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; to be detailed for special missions, for training, in another branch of the service. But the Secretary of Defense could not possibly take a marine and make him a sailor, or take a sailor and make him a soldier, or take a soldier and make him an Air Force aviator. The Secretary of Defense could not interfere with the roles and missions of the various branches.

That is why I think the Senator from Vermont and I are not talking about the same thing. I submit that the Senator from Vermont has been presenting his interpretation of the amendment based upon one meaning of the word "transfer," whereas the organic act itself prevents that meaning from being applied to the word.

Mr. FLANDERS. From the standpoint of common sense, I can conceive of no other meaning than the one I have assigned to the word "transfer." Within the jargon of the armed services, there may be some technical meaning of which I am not aware; but I am simply addressing my remarks to the plain meaning of the word as used in the measure now before the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. The only way by which a "transfer"—in the sense the Senator from Vermont uses the term—could be made would be by changing the commissions or enlistments of the personnel involved. However, the organic law would prevent that; so the Senator from Vermont does not need to worry that such action would be taken by the Secretary of Defense acting under my amendment.

However, as I understand the position of the Senator from Vermont, he would estop the Secretary of Defense—just wait and see, Mr. President—from transferring 500 Navy aviators for training on B–36's, to use my example. Such a situation would not eliminate duplication. In that event, two systems for training on B–36's or two systems for ground training might be set up, although there is a very valuable and available Marine station for that purpose at San Diego.

I say my amendment would produce greater economy and efficiency in the armed services; and the Senator from Vermont will not cause me to cease my advocacy of my amendment simply because he insists upon giving to the word "transfer" a meaning which it could not possibly have under the organic law.

Mr. President, I am about to yield the floor. I have made my explanation of the amendment. I am desirous of obtaining an early vote on the amendment. I think the discussion is practically completed. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum, after which I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to speak very briefly on the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Oregon to section 202 of the pending bill.

The effect of his amendment, as we all know, would be to permit the Secretary of Defense to reassign the combatant functions assigned to the various departments and to make transfers of military personnel from one military department to another, these powers now being forbidden by the text of the measure at present before the Senate.

I should like to point out that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon would specifically permit the Secretary of Defense and the General Staff to do at least three things. It would permit them to transfer marine aviation to the Air Force, it would permit them to transfer naval aviation to the Air Force, and it would permit them to eliminate the Marine Corps. They could eliminate the Marine Corps either by transferring the combatant functions of the Marine Corps to the Army, or by so diluting the personnel of the Marine Corps by moving Army personnel in or moving marine personnel out that the Marine Corps would in effect be eliminated. I think it is a very serious question as to whether Congress wants to turn over such powers as these to the Secretary of Defense and to the General Staff.

I wish to pay tribute to the patriotism of the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Massachusetts, who spoke yesterday in behalf of the pending measure. I am sure they are moved by the best of motives and that they are acting for what they believe to be the good of the general service.

There is one contention advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts with which I should like to deal very specifically. It is that we should not aim at continuing loyalties to particular services, but that we should try to develop an over-all loyalty to the armed services of the Nation as a whole. This is a very laudable purpose, but I wonder if it as effective as building upon loyalty to specific services, and yet having these services join together in a general defense of the Nation.

The average youngster who comes into the armed forces of the United States will range in age between 18 and 24. It is very hard for him to feel a burning and a passionate loyalty to a general armed service, but he can feel a specific and intense loyalty to his service, to his corps, to his division, to his regiment, and to his unit. We can develop an intensity of pride, an intensity of loyalty, which can transform men who, in the beginning, are somewhat indifferent, into strong, vigorous, passionate fighters.

It is not necessary for me to praise the Marine Corps. The record of the Marine Corps is on the books. The record of the Marine Corps has been established in the wars of the past. It is unnecessary for anyone to attempt to add to that record by words. I can only say that I believe the people of the country feel that the tradition of the Marine Corps is a very precious one, and that it should not be endangered; that if the Marine Corps were to be eliminated something very virile would go out of American life and that the effectiveness of the armed forces of this country would be diminished.

I know that it will be said that there is no intention to abolish the Marine Corps. I should like to point out that in the concluding days of the administration of President Herbert Hoover an executive order was, I believe, drawn up, though never issued, which would have directly eliminated the Marine Corps.

I should also like to call to the attention of the Senate the testimony of General Vandegrift in the hearings of the Senate committee in 1947 on the national defense establishment, page 434, where the general referred to papers of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. As he states, these papers appeared over the signature of the Chief of Staff of the Army and the Commanding General of the Army Air Forces, expressing the War Department's intention with respect to the Marine Corps in clear and unmistakable language.

Those papers, I believe, are classified and have never been published, but it is common belief, at least, that in these papers certain high officials of the Army declared that the Marine Corps should not be given combatant functions in any war which might come, but that it should be confined to guard duty at naval stations, and that it should be assigned the role of working parties on beaches when the Army was in action.

I am greatly afraid that there are strong elements amongst the Army who would like to eliminate the Marine Corps on just such grounds as these, and I should like to say that, in my judgment, if that is done it will diminish the armed effectiveness of the United States.

Mr. President, these loyalties to specific corps do not conflict with general loyalty to the country. They reinforce and intensify loyalty to the country, just as a passion and loyalty to one's State intensifies, if it is interpreted properly, one's loyalty to the Nation as a whole.

So, Mr. President, I hope that we will not give a blank check to do what I am sure the people of the country do not want to have done, and which would never be done by legislation, but which, if we put into effect the Morse amendment, might be done surreptitiously and quietly by a series of orders which would gradually but surely move forward the elimination of naval and marine aviation and of the Marine Corps itself.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have already answered the argument of the Senator from Illinois twice in the RECORD. I again enter a general denial. There is not the slightest possibility, under my amendment, of any of the fears of the Senator from Illinois becoming realities. The Secretary of Defense, acting under my amendment, could not possibly do what the Senator from Illinois has expressed by way of fear, without a change in the organic law by the Congress of the United States. My amendment does not give to the Secretary of Defense any such power as the Senator from Illinois fears.

I will always join with the Senator from Illinois against any proposal which seeks in any way to abolish the Marine Corps or diminish its functions. But I wish the Senator from Illinois would join with the junior Senator from Oregon in giving the Secretary of Defense the powers he needs in order to have a true unification. The Secretary of Defense cannot have such powers if we leave in the bill the language beginning on page 4, line 19, after the word "proper" and to the end of the section.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the issue has been well covered by both sides, and I do not see any point in adding anything further by way of debate. I hope we can have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] on page 4, line 19, beginning with the second comma, to strike out all down to including the word "functions" on page 5, line 3. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called.

ATTACK UPON VICTOR REUTHER

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I rise to speak for a few minutes about a matter which has occurred in the State of Michigan, namely, an attempt to assassinate Victor Reuther, the educational director of the United Automobile Workers Union, CIO.

A few months ago his brother, Walter Reuther, who is president of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, was attacked, in an attempt upon his life by assassination, in the city of Detroit. Both Walter Reuther and Victor Reuther have lived in Detroit, Mich., for many years. They have taken a very active part in union activities and in labor activities. They are respected in Michigan, and they are fighting for a cause in which they firmly believe.

I wish to state here that those who committed the assault upon Walter Reuther have never been brought to trial. So far as can be learned, the police have been unable to solve that particular crime.

Now a similar calamity has occurred, in that Victor Reuther, who is the educational director of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, has been attacked under very similar circumstances and has been severely wounded, and there is grave doubt whether he will recover.

These are very serious things to happen in the United States of America. Not only should every effort be made by every law-enforcement agency in the State of Michigan to solve the crimes and to bring the guilty persons to trial, in order that they may receive the fullest penalties of the law, but I call the matter specifically to the attention of the Department of Justice of the United States in the hope that the Department's entire facilities may be made available in this particular case, as they should have been made available in the previous case, which I called to the attention of the Department of Justice at the time.

There is always the element of uncertainty as to whether a Federal criminal statute has been violated. Therefore, without going into the niceties of the law, the Department of Justice and the FBI of the United States of America should exert every effort to apprehend the guilty person or persons. They should not allow the trail to become cold. They should exert every effort to detect the perpetrators of these atrocious crimes. It is a terrible thing when citizens in America cannot occupy their homes without the danger of a murderous assault and when the perpetrators of such crimes go unscathed of justice.

I request the Department of Justice to take every possible step toward the solution of the crimes, to proceed immediately before the trail gets cold, and to extend to the local authorities every possible assistance and the use of every facility to apprehend and bring to trial those responsible for the dastardly crime of murderous assault not only upon Victor Reuther, last evening, but upon his brother, Walter Reuther.

Those who would commit crimes of that kind must be taught the lesson that in America such things cannot be allowed to happen and that the perpetrators will be apprehended, no matter at what cost and no matter by what law-enforcement agency. Let it be known that we are going to stamp out such crimes so that men carrying on the work of labor organizations, similar to the work done by Victor Reuther and Walter Reuther, may have no fear of assault or of being killed in the performance of their duties in the United States.

The labor union is an American institution, fully recognized by law, and is entitled to the absolute protection of law.

There are many things the Federal agencies may be able to do in this case. They have scientific facilities for analysis and detection, and other devices which certain departments of our great State of Michigan may not possess. I ask that they exert every effort to cooperate with the State of Michigan in the solution of these crimes, and of this particular crime.

COMPENSATION TO THE SWISS GOVERNMENT FOR WAR DAMAGES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4392) to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. PEPPER, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That section 2 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act (Public Law Numbered 806, Eightieth Congress) is amended by deleting the words 'direction and control of its Board of Directors' at the end of the said section and substituting therefor the words 'supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary")'."

SEC. 2. Section 4 (h) of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by deleting the second sentence thereof and inserting in its place the following: "The Corporation shall have power to acquire personal property necessary to the conduct of its business but shall not have power to acquire real property or any interest therein except that it may (a) rent or lease office space necessary for the conduct of its business and (b) acquire real property or any interest therein for the purpose of providing storage adequate to carry out effectively and efficiently any of the Corporation's programs, or of securing or discharging obligations owing to the Corporation, or of otherwise protecting the financial interests of the Corporation: Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection (h) shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property, or any interest therein, in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodity in the area concerned are not adequate: Provided further, That no refrigerated cold-storage facilities shall be constructed or purchased except with funds specifically provided by Congress for that purpose: And provided further, That nothing contained in this subsection (h) shall limit the duty of the Corporation, to the maximum extent practicable consistent with the fulfillment of the Corporation's purposes and the effective and efficient conduct of its business, to utilize the usual and customary channels, facilities, and arrangements of trade and commerce in the warehousing of commodities: And provided further, That to encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized, upon terms and conditions prescribed or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, to accept strategic and critical materials produced abroad in exchange for agricultural commodities acquired by the Corporation. Insofar as practicable, in effecting such exchange of goods, normal commercial trade channels shall be utilized and priority shall be given to commodities easily storable and those which serve as prime incentive goods to stimulate production of critical and strategic materials. The determination of the quantities and qualities of such materials which are desirable for stock piling and the determination of which materials are strategic and critical shall be made in the manner prescribed by section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (60 Stat. 596). Strategic and critical materials acquired by Commodity Credit Corporation in exchange for agricultural commodities shall, to the extent approved by the Munitions Board of the National Military Establishment, be transferred to the stock pile provided for by the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act; and when transferred to the stock pile the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be reimbursed for the strategic and critical materials so transferred to the stock pile from the funds made available for the purpose of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, in an amount equal to the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, of the material transferred to the stock pile. Nothing contained herein shall limit the authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to acquire, hold, or dispose of such quantity of strategic and critical materials as it deems advisable in carrying out its functions and protecting its assets."

SEC. 3. Section 9 of said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. Directors, Advisory Board: (a) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the 'Board'), subject to the general supervision and direction of the Secretary. The Secretary shall be an ex officio director and shall serve as Chairman of the Board. The Board shall consist of six members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In addition to their duties as members of the Board, such appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary, except that any such member who holds another office or position under the Federal Government the compensation for which exceeds such rate may elect to receive compensation at the rate provided for such other office or position in lieu of the compensation provided by this section. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present.

"(b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Not more than three of such members shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each ninety days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings."

SEC. 4. Section 10 of the said Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Personnel of Corporation: The Secretary shall appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary for the conduct of the business of the Corporation, define their authority and duties, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as he may determine, require that such of them as he may designate be bonded and fix the penalties therefor. The Corporation may pay the premium of any bond or bonds. With the exception of experts, appointments shall be made pursuant to the civil service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (5 U. S. C., 1946 edition, 661)."

SEC. 5. Section 4 (c) of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended—

(a) by inserting in the second sentence thereof after the word "jurisdiction" a comma and the following: "without regard to the amount in controversy,";

(b) by striking out the fourth sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "No suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless (1) it shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, or (2) in the event that the person bringing such suit shall have been under legal disability or beyond the seas at the time the right accrued, the suit shall have been brought within three years after the disability shall have ceased or within six years after the right accrued on which suit is brought, whichever period is longer. The defendant in any suit by or against the Corporation may plead by way of set-off or counterclaim, any cause of action, whether arising out of the same transaction or not, which would otherwise be barred by such limitation if the claim upon which the defendant's cause of action is based had not been barred prior to the date that the plaintiff's cause of action arose: Provided, That the defendant shall not be awarded a judgment on any such set-off or counterclaim for any amount in excess of the amount of the plaintiff's claim established in the suit."; and

(c) by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "except that (1) any such suit against the United States based upon any claim of the type enumerated in title 28, section 1491, of the United States Code, may be brought in the United States Court of Claims, and (2) no such suit against the United States may be brought in a district court unless such suit might, without regard to the provisions of this Act, be brought in such court".

SEC. 6. Section 15 of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection as follows:

"USE OF WORDS 'COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION'

"(f) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'Commodity Credit Corporation' or any combination of the same, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do or purport to do business. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this prohibition shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

ELBERT THOMAS,
ALLEN J. ELLENDER,

GEORGE D. AIKEN,
MILTON R. YOUNG,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

BRENT SPENCE,

MIKE MONRONEY,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation from the chairman of the committee as to what changes the conference report makes?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill as agreed to in conference does not vary materially in most respects from the bill passed by the Senate.

The bill provides for a board of directors, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, the board to consist of six members. It also provides for an advisory board, to be appointed by the President, the members to be confirmed by the Senate.

The Senate bill provided that the Commodity Credit Corporation should have no authority to construct either cotton, tobacco, or refrigerated cold-storage facilities. The House adopted what is known as the Brown amendment, which provides that before any kind of storage facilities can be constructed there must be an investigation, and the Commodity Credit Corporation must determine that there is a necessity for such storage facilities. That covers everything, including tobacco and cotton.

A modification was made in the Senate cold-storage provision, in that the Commodity Credit Corporation cannot now either purchase or construct cold-storage facilities. It can lease them or acquire them otherwise for temporary use, but it cannot construct or purchase cold-storage facilities.

Those are the main changes in the Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator explain on what basis the conferees rejected the Senate provision for confirmation of members of the board of directors?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Members of the board of directors appointed by the Secretary are not to be confirmed by the Senate; but the members of the advisory board, appointed by the President, must be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I correctly understand that the advisory board has no power whatever other than to give advice to the board of directors, who in turn have no power other than to carry out the suggestions of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, the Congress is the policy-making branch of the Government; and the Secretary is charged with responsibility for carrying out the policies of Congress. For that reason he is given wide authority to select his own advisers. I presume that the persons to be appointed on the advisory board will be recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to add that, although the advisory board does not have executive powers, it does have the duty of keeping informed at all times as to what is going on, and to have knowledge of the policies of the Commodity Credit Corporation. It is true that it has no executive power, but it certainly has a duty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I correctly understand that the members of the advisory board are not even on a straight salary?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Members of the advisory board are on a per diem. I think the per diem is uniform on similar boards. The per diem is $50.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that the conference report is unanimously submitted by all the conferees?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On the Senate side, that is correct. I cannot say with respect to the House side.

Mr. LUCAS. I am speaking now only of the Senate conferees appointed by the Vice President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Each member of the Senate conferees was present; each member took an active part in the consideration; and each member was fairly well satisfied with the result. Each member signed the report.

Mr. LUCAS. That is, both Republicans and Democrats, of the Senate conferees, have signed the report?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that no facilities can be built, until, in the opinion of the Secretary, there is a scarcity of facilities in a particular area; and secondly, that no refrigeration plants shall be built under any circumstances, but only existing plants can be leased? I am particularly interested in the latter provision.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If cold-storage plants should be built hereafter, they could be leased; but the provision is that the Commodity Credit Corporation shall have no authority to construct or purchase additional cold-storage facilities.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. They cannot even be leased unless there is a shortage. The provision, so far as the shortage of plants is concerned, would not necessarily apply to refrigeration plants.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I think they are on a separate basis.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to read to the Senator from Massachusetts the wording which the conferees adopted in regard to cold-storage facilities:

Provided further, That no refrigerated cold-storage facilities shall be constructed or purchased except with funds specifically provided by Congress for that purpose.

That means that, if it were found absolutely necessary to have more facilities, the Commodity Credit Corporation would have to come to Congress to get a specific appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. I further believe that the so-called Brown amendment adopted in the House covers the entire situation anyway; but the wording adopted by the conferees makes it doubly sure that no cold-storage facilities will be constructed, except with the express consent of the Congress.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator why, in the judgment of the conferees, it was advisable to depart from the usual and customary principle of confirmation by the Senate of members of an important executive board.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The main reason is that the House would not consent to confirmation by the Senate. We were forced to accept that provision. We spent four sessions in trying to arrive at an agreement on two or three points. This is one point upon which I am sure the House of Representatives would not have yielded.

Mr. KEM. Without going into detail, will the Senator from Oklahoma outline the reasons advanced by the conferees on the part of the House for taking that position?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand the situation, it is this: The Congress passes laws directing the Secretary of Agriculture to do certain things, and we hold him responsible for carrying out the duties thus imposed upon him by the laws passed by Congress.

The position taken by the House of Representatives, as I understand it, is that the Congress must give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to carry out the functions imposed upon him by the laws passed by Congress, and that in order to be able to do so, he must have a board upon which he can rely.

Mr. KEM. Could not the same argument apply with equal force to the Members of the President's Cabinet?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. And could not the same argument apply similarly to the members of various commissions and boards, whose names are almost constantly before the Senate for confirmation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask a further question. Does not the Senator from Oklahoma agree that the constitutional provision for a check and balance by way of confirmation by the Senate, is a wise one and should be adhered to generally in governmental operations?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In response to that inquiry, I should like to suggest that if a board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation were appointed and confirmed by the Senate, and thereafter the members of the Board refused to go along with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the policies as he interpreted them, there would be a stalemate or a block. The Secretary of Agriculture would be responsible, but in such circumstances he would have no power to act.

The House has taken the position, as I understand, that inasmuch as the Secretary of Agriculture is responsible and inasmuch as the Congress looks to him entirely in that connection, he should have the power to appoint a Board to assist him in carrying out the duties imposed upon him by law.

Mr. KEM. Is it not true that in the Humphreys case, where it was stated that the persons involved were confirmed by the Senate, it was held that the President could not remove them in case of a stalemate such as the Senator from Oklahoma suggests; and has it ever been considered that the possibility of a stalemate which might result from a difference of opinion between the President and a member of his Cabinet was any reason for not requiring that the members of the President's Cabinet be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I agree with all the Senator from Missouri says.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Oklahoma agree that there is very doubtful wisdom in asking the Senate to accede to the position taken by the House of Representatives in this case?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I say I do not think so. That is my point of view.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to say that apparently it was the position of the House of Representatives that in view of the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture is held responsible for carrying out the price-support programs, and that the Commodity Credit Corporation is an instrument given to the Secretary of Agriculture to use in carrying out those programs, it therefore is in a little different position from other Government corporations.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. KEM. The President is Commander in Chief of all the armed forces of the United States; but to my knowledge it has never been suggested that it is an unwise thing for the Secretary of Defense and the Under Secretaries of Defense and all the commissioned officers of the United States armed forces to have to be confirmed by the Senate.

To me, the doctrine advocated by the Senator is a most astounding one, and, for my part, before it is accepted by the Senate, I think it should receive very careful consideration.

Mr. AIKEN. It has been considered that greater flexibility of control would be possible through the use of the Commodity Credit Corporation by the Secretary of Agriculture rather than for him to undertake to handle the entire matter personally.

Furthermore, besides being more flexible and providing for quicker action in various cases, it is the belief that it would be better to keep the work done by the Corporation under the control of the General Accounting Office than it would be to have the work mixed in with the other work of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. I have no doubt that under those circumstances the Corporation would be much more flexible and much more susceptible of control. It never occurred to me that the situation would be otherwise.

But whether the removal of the check and balance provided by the Constitution in cases of this kind would be a wise thing, I think, is an entirely different question. It seems to me that in our quest for flexibility and our quest for control we may be overlooking a very essential check and balance which has long stood the American people in good stead.

Mr. AIKEN. I may add that the check and balance by means of congressional control rests on the Secretary of Agriculture himself, who is responsible for carrying out the program.

Mr. KEM. The same argument would apply in the case of the President of the United States, who, as Commander in Chief, is responsible for the armed forces of the United States. Yet the Senate confirms all his Cabinet officers and every commissioned officer in the armed forces.

It has never been understood that such a provision did not give the President sufficient flexibility and the armed forces under his control sufficient freedom of movement to defend the United States.

Mr. AIKEN. However, in this case the point might be made that it is not necessary to have a Commodity Credit Corporation at all. We could put the entire responsibility upon the Secretary of Agriculture, but I doubt whether he would do as good a job as he would if he had a board of directors and a commodity credit corporation through which he could act.

Mr. KEM. I grant that the Congress could elect to make such a provision; it could simply turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture these billions of dollars, and could say to him, "Use them as you see fit." But the Congress has not done so.

Mr. AIKEN. Finally, let me add that the conferees on the part of the House of Representatives were insistent upon this procedure. Of course, Mr. President, time is of the essence. There is a feeling that this bill should be passed quickly. The House agreed to have the advisory board members confirmed by the Senate, in return for permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to have the power to appoint the executive board of the Commodity Credit Corporation, for whose actions he is held responsible.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I simply wish to ask whether it is true that the advisory board is merely a debating society, without any actual function or duty.

Mr. AIKEN. No; I would not think so.

Mr. KEM. Will the Senator from Vermont point out any power the advisory board has in carrying out the responsibilities of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. AIKEN. The wording of the conference report in that respect is as follows:

> (b) In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an advisory board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Not more than three of such members shall belong to the same political party. The advisory board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto. Members of the advisory board shall receive for their services as members compensation of not to exceed $50 per diem when actually engaged in the performance of their duties as such, together with their necessary traveling expenses while going to and coming from meetings.

It was felt that by putting them on a per diem basis men of higher grade could be obtained, men who would have had broader experience in agriculture and business than it would be possible to obtain if those officials were put on a flat salary basis, because men of the type who should comprise this Board would not be available at any price or salary which the Congress would be likely to provide for them.

I say to the Senator from Missouri that probably this provision, like any other provision of the laws the Congress passes, can be abused by the executive department concerned, if there is a deliberate attempt to abuse it.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I seem to have failed, as I often do, to make myself clear. The question I put to the Senator from Vermont was, What authority does the advisory board have?

Mr. AIKEN. I may say it has the duty of advising the Secretary of Agriculture in about the same respect that the Tariff Commission has the duty of advising the President on trade agreements.

Mr. KEM. I realize the Senator from Vermont is not on the stand, and I do not want to press him unduly; but if the advisory board has any authority, I wish the Senator from Vermont would advise us what it is.

Mr. AIKEN. It has no authority.

Mr. KEM. Very well.

Mr. AIKEN. As I have stated, it has duties which I consider comparable to the duties of the Federal Tariff Commission in advising the President on trade agreements.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont one further question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; if so, to whom?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Why is it that the conferees took such an elaborate care to give the Senate the right to confirm the advisory council, but denied the Senate the right to confirm the officials who have the actual authority to run the Board?

Mr. AIKEN. For the simple reason that no conference report would have been back here yet had we not reached an agreement, after negotiating on a give-and-take basis with the House managers, in accordance with the usual practice in conferences.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Vermont feel that as Members of the Senate we should give up the constitutional responsibilities and duties we usually exercise in cases of this kind, at the mere whim of the House managers?

Mr. AIKEN. I would not say it was a mere whim. I thought it was a determination. I felt that it was important to reach an agreement as soon as possible, in order to protect the support-price program, with additional storage for our surplus crops this year.

Mr. KEM. Should we not in a case involving the constitutional duties and responsibilities of the Senate be just as determined as our friends at the other side of the Capitol?

Mr. AIKEN. I think the friends at the other side of the Capitol had to yield certain things they had put in their bill, also.

Mr. KEM. Just what did they yield?

Mr. AIKEN. They had to yield on the section providing for loans to farmers for the purpose of constructing grain bins on their farms. They had to yield in two or three other cases. On the matter of cold-storage construction, they had to yield, and they were also very determined about that.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator feel that those provisions were in any respect as far reaching and important as the constitutional considerations involved in the right of the Senate to confirm an important official?

Mr. AIKEN. I would not say they were as far reaching as the provisions of the bill which was ultimately passed by the Senate, but they are as far reaching as the bill which was reported to the Senate by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AIKEN. I will yield the floor if I get a chance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has the right to yield the floor at this time, if he cares to exercise it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am addressing my question to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Delaware want me to yield to him before I yield the floor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if I may yield to the Senator from Delaware before I yield the floor, I shall do so. I do not know how I acquired the floor in the first place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that time was of the essence. I have heard that statement so often in the Senate Chamber that I should like to have him explain just what the rush is about the pending bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Time is always of the essence. While it is true that certain types of storage can be provided by the Commodity Credit Corporation under the law as it now exists, yet it is entirely possible that certain types of necessary storage will not be available in time to take care of this year's grain crop, and whatever is decided upon should be decided upon right away, so that plans may be made and carried out adequately to meet the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Assuming that to be correct—and I have heard that statement made so often I am beginning to believe it—why was there incorporated in the bill the controversial provision about the appointment of directors? Why was that provision included in the Senate bill and put before the Senate when the Senator knew full well that it was a controversial matter, and that, had it been omitted we should have had the remainder of the bill enacted and in force 3 months ago? Why was a provision conferring this great power upon the Secretary of Agriculture put in a bill which the Senator knew the Senate was going to approve? In my opinion it was done, for just one purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture thought he could make the Senate swallow it, in order to get the other portions of the bill which the Senate approved; is not that correct?

Mr. AIKEN. No, I did not have any idea of making the Senate swallow anything the Senate did not want to swallow. This provision is not by any means my sole responsibility; the matter was considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and it was reported by that committee in about the same shape, relative to the appointment of the directors, as it is now included in the conference committee report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will agree with me, will he not, that the bill would have been passed 3 months ago if he had omitted that controversial feature?

Mr. AIKEN. I agree it would have been passed months ago, if everybody could have agreed on the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And yet this controversial provision, which has absolutely nothing to do with the storage program, representing merely an effort on the part of a cabinet officer to grab some extra power, is incorporated in a bill which the committee felt it could run through the Senate. Is that not correct?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not feel that the provisions of last year's bill relating to the appointment of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation were effective, as the Senator from Delaware intended they should be. I think the President named as directors those who were recommended to him by the Secretary of Agriculture; and so far as that goes, the Senate has not confirmed them yet, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not the reason we have not confirmed them due to the fact that the President, being so sure he is going to get this bill pushed through Congress, has failed thus far even to submit the nominations to the Senate?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know what the President was sure of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have not been submitted, though. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. AIKEN. I would not interpret what is in the mind of the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is a fact the nominations have not been submitted as yet, even today. Is that not correct?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not recall whether they have been submitted. I believe that the ones who are acting as directors were recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Commodity Credit Corporation has operated for nearly a year under a system wherein the board of directors would be appointed by the President, and supposedly be confirmed by the Senate. Can the Senator from Vermont point out to me how in any way that restriction which we placed in last year's bill has affected the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. AIKEN. I may say to the Senator from Delaware that I am not completely satisfied with the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation during the past few months. I hope, if we can get the Advisory Board once appointed and confirmed by the Senate, that their advice may be found very helpful to the Secretary in carrying out the price-support programs. I cannot conceive of the Secretary going contrary to the advice of the Board which will be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I think any Secretary of Agriculture would be very foolhardy indeed to do that, and I expect that the Senate would use particular care to see that the members of the advisory board met the qualifications set forth in this provision of the conference report, that these men should reflect broad agricultural and business experience. It is entirely true that the Secretary is not obligated to take their advice, but I think it would be unfortunate and very unwise on his part if he failed to give consideration to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator from Vermont was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hoover Commission's report which was adopted in the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, how does the Senator from Vermont reconcile that action with the action taken here? Is not the taking away from the Senate of the power to confirm the directors a direct contradiction of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not recall that the Hoover Commission made any recommendations as to the handling of price-support programs of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Commission wrote an entire volume on that subject.

Mr. AIKEN. That was not a recommendation of the Commission, as I recall; it was a recommendation of one of the task forces. I would say that some of the recommendations of the task forces were given very little credence by the Commission itself. I do not know whether the one to which the Senator refers was given serious consideration. Frequently, the Hoover Commission members disagreed strongly with the recommendations of the task force.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to read this statement which is contained in the Task-Force Report, Appendix F, in which there is pointed out the deplorable state of affairs found in the RFC, Federal Public Housing Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, and other corporations. They also point out how the situation should be corrected.

Mr. AIKEN. May I inquire who wrote that report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know who wrote it. It was signed by Herbert Hoover, chairman, and submitted to the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. That is a task-force report; is it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is.

Mr. AIKEN. There was considerable dissent in the Commission with reference to task-force reports relating to business enterprises in the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is signed by T. Coleman Andrews, chairman; Harry E. Howell, Edward A. Kracke; Maurice E. Peloubet; Weston Rankin; J. S. Seidman; and Donald F. Stewart.

There was no minority report.

Mr. AIKEN. With respect to task-force recommendations, there would not be a minority report. In regard to that task-force report, I think I dissented, although I am not sure to which report the Senator has reference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is another question I should like to ask, preferably of the chairman of the committee, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to refer to page 2 of the conference report as submitted, in which it is stated that the Corporation shall make loans to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply for financing the construction or purchase of storage, and the loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements between the Corporation and the growers.

I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether it is planned to confine the local power to make loans exclusively to the farmers or whether the power is unlimited.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not the policy of Senate committees to make reports giving interpretations of the law. The House has such a practice. As a rule, the House conferees submit a report to the House giving their interpretation of what the legislation will mean if enacted and signed by the President. The feature with respect to loans was considered, but I think no one is very enthusiastic with reference to the policy of making loans with Federal funds to farmers for the building of storage facilities. That is my interpretation of the situation. I doubt if the Department, if the bill should be enacted, would go to any great extent in spending public funds in providing storage on farms. It is not a policy which has been approved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to read to him a statement from a recent bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture. It has not yet been released, but it has passed through the top personnel:

> It is hoped that the Production and Marketing Administration can get enough local cooperatives and others interested in the grain-storage problem to file requests for loans.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is not the purpose of the bill to authorize or to encourage the construction of warehouses through Federal funds. It is the purpose to secure storage through private enterprise. It is the purpose to point out locations in which storage is necessary and to try to enlist private capital to build the storage. If that cannot be done, then the second step will be to make loans, if necessary, to cooperatives. If that cannot be done, the only alternative is for the Government to build the facilities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Oklahoma feels that the Department of Agriculture, if the bill is enacted into law, has no intention to move in and establish Government-owned and Government-operated storage facilities on a large scale?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Only as a last resort. It is to encourage private capital to construct storage. If that cannot be done, and the storage cannot be provided, the second step will be to encourage cooperatives to build the storage either with private capital or through Federal loans. If that cannot be done, the Government must build the facilities with Federal funds. That is my interpretation of the program.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, because I am very much concerned with the future of this program, what the Secretary of Agriculture plans to do with this power, assuming the bill is passed. Has the Senator conferred with the Secretary of Agriculture regarding his proposed plan of operation, and is it as the Senator has just stated it? Is that the Senator's understanding of the plan?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I happen to have on my desk the bulletin to which I referred a few minutes ago, which the Secretary of Agriculture has issued to the top administrative personnel in the Department. I might say it is a bulletin which the Department apparently did not intend Congress to see, because at the top it is stated that "the report is sent to you for your personal information only and is not for publication."

It goes on to say that if the administrators wish to discuss it "you must refrain from giving any information as to where you secured it, or you must not refer to this bulletin as an official document."

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator advise us to whom that pamphlet is directed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a bulletin which was published by the United States Department of Agriculture, and the title is "Proposed Program To Provide Government Storage Facilities for Stock-piling Grain."

Mr. AIKEN. Is it dated?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it is dated in February 1949. It has not been released to the public. I suppose it is ready for release at any time. I am very much interested in it, because it indicates the great interest the Secretary has in getting this bill through the Congress. I want to read a summary of his instructions to his top personnel:

> The need to expand these facilities to a recommended capacity of at least 500,000,000 bushels is more fundamental than the problem of our making the existing legislation work.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. May I ask who signed that bulletin?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would ask the same question myself. I assume it was the Secretary of Agriculture who put it out. It is an official bulletin of the Department. The answer I received in reply to my request for information was:

How did you get the bulletin yourself?

Mr. AIKEN. I shall not ask the Senator from Delaware how he got it, because I realize that if we divulge the sources of our information, the sources would soon dry up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think there is any secret about it. I would not want to say at this time where I received it. I assumed the Secretary of Agriculture, knowing of my interest in the program, sent it to me. That is an assumption. I would not say that to be a fact. At least I have it.

Mr. AIKEN. It is possible that the Senator from Delaware might be laboring under an erroneous assumption in thinking that the Secretary of Agriculture sent that to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is possible.

Mr. AIKEN. Is the tenor of the bulletin such as to direct PMA committeemen to seek out those who might be interested in getting loans for grain storage?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I am going to read a little of this bulletin, because I think Members of the Senate would be very much interested in it. I think the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from Vermont, and the Senator from New Mexico were sincere when they told us that it was not their intention to set up a duplication of the storage facilities in his country, Government-owned and operated. Yet that is a part of the program of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I wish to read what the Secretary of Agriculture in this bulletin has told his key personnel, in reply to the suggestion of the Congress urging them to the fullest extent possible to utilize existing storage facilities.

I wish to read from page 7 of the bulletin as to the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to Governmen storage facilities:

The suggestion that in the carrying out of price-support operations on grains existing commercial-storage facilities be more extensively utilized, would not be practicable.

In other words, he has no intention of carrying out the intent of Congress. I read further, showing where he has outlined his over-all and long-range storage program. We find this statement:

A grain-storage program of a magnitude and an expedient nature such as the proposed program should be carried out and operated as a Government project under the jurisdiction of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Did the Senator say that was sent out by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. ANDERSON. I believe the Senator said it was February when that was circulated. I believe there were people in the Department of Agriculture who felt that there should be a large wholesale program of constructing these facilities. Subsequent to the sending out of documents like that, which was done by people unauthorized, actually, to express policy, the Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the House Committee and the Senate Committee on Agriculture. Questions were developed by many members of the committees as to the intentions, and I think the Senator will find that, based upon those questions, the Secretary of Agriculture probably gave additional instructions, and somewhat different instructions, to those who were mailing out that material. The Secretary, following that, received instructions from the Congress itself that he should use existing facilities, and not engage in a program of constructing governmental facilities.

I was very much interested in the questions of the Senator from Missouri when the Secretary was before the committee, in which the Senator from Missouri quite effectively, I thought, pinned down the question as to what the program was. My understanding is that the entire first year's program will be devoted to storage on the farm. I know nothing beyond that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I might say to the Senator from New Mexico that I in no way question his intentions. I think he is sincere in this, and I think that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM] when he asked the same questions in the committee had every right in the world to believe the Secretary of Agriculture, but I do say, and I say it without any reservation, that I do not think that the Secretary of Agriculture meant what he told the Senator from Missouri, because at the very time when he was testifying before the Committee on Agriculture, making those statements, there was this document which he had written and passed down to his top administrative personnel telling them to go out and undermine the existing law.

I should like to read further for just a moment——

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to say to the Senator that only a moment ago he evidenced that his good nature still remained, and I want to remind him that 2 or 3 years ago there appeared in an official publication of the Department of Agriculture a very pleasant, let me say, if not complimentary, write-up of the then Secretary of Agriculture. I had heard about it, and had twice given instructions that it was not to appear; but it appeared anyway. I do not know how it appeared. I do know that the Secretary of Agriculture does not always control what goes out from the Department. Many times people, in what they think to be in furtherance of a program, send out preliminary material to get reactions from the field, and suggestions as to proposed programs, but they come back and are subject to review by the Secretary, and certainly are subject to review by the congressional committees. This time the congressional committees have quite clearly said to the Secretary of Agriculture that they do not expect him to construct these facilities, except under the principles laid down in the report.

The Senator from Vermont called my attention to a statement in the report issued by the managers on the part of the House which is absolutely contradictory and diametrically opposed to the language of the law. I think that when the language of the law is clear, there is no statement that would change the clear import of the language.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. I might say to the Senator from New Mexico that once again I am not speaking of news reports which are put out by someone in the Department of Agriculture contrary to the Secretary's intentions; I am speaking of an official bulletin which never should have been put out unless it did have the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, one which in my mind never was put out without the approval of Mr. Charles Brannan. I might say that he has so far not made any effort to deny the fact that this went out with his full approval.

To find out just what the program was, at the time the bill was discussed I received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in reply to questions which I asked him as to the extent of their program. At that time he stated that they intended to build 150,000,000 bushels of possibly needed capacity for 1949. I think that is what he testified before the committee.

Reading on page 2 of this report, I find the following:

To meet the critical storage situation which is almost certain to be developed when the 1949 grain crops begin to move to market, a program must be initiated at once and completed this year to provide for the construction of not less than 150,000,000 bushels of Government-owned and Government-operated trackside storage facilities.

That part of the program he told Congress about. That part of the program was incorporated in a letter addressed to me, and one which I in turn put into the RECORD at the time of the debate.

Reading in the same paragraph of this bulletin, however, we find that he says:

The further extension of Government grain-storage facilities to a capacity of at least 500,000,000 bushels for corn and wheat alone should be planned for completion within the next 3 years.

He did not tell Congress about that part of the program, he did not tell the committee about it, when he was testifying before it. Yet he had prepared this document and passed it down to the top personnel in his office staff, for their instruction in field operations, without telling any member of the committee about it, to my knowledge.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he knew about this overall, long-range program.

Mr. ANDERSON. I did not know about it, and I am quite sure that the intentions which the Secretary may have had at that time have been very materially changed by the action of the Congress itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Again, Mr. President, I reluctantly disagree with the Senator from New Mexico, because while I know he is sincere in what he has said, I think he is wrong, because this bulletin was sent out into the field as late as 10 days ago to some of the men, and they were still operating under these instructions. I know that to be a fact.

Now I wish to read a little further about the long-range program, because the 500,000,000 bushels is only the beginning. I read:

If an international wheat agreement should become operative, the program would have to be expanded to provide for an additional 100,000,000 bushels of Government wheat-storage facilities in order to assure dependable supplies for export to participating importing countries.

In other words, that would bring it up to 600,000,000 bushels. Even that is not all the long-range program of the Secretary of Agriculture, because I find that is only his program for wheat and corn.

When we come under the title of "Soybeans," we find these instructions—and I am quoting from the Department's bulletin:

Although no recommendations are made at this time with respect to Government-owned facilities for storing soybeans, it may be necessary in the near future to enlarge the recommended storage programs set forth here to include adequate facilities for storing such supplies of soybeans as are acquired by CCC under price-support programs.

In other words, they are going into the soybean storage field in addition to the 600,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn.

Turning to page 4, under the subtitle of "Grain Sorghums," I find this statement:

In the light of the specific problems involved in the marketing and farm storage of grain sorghums, the construction of Government facilities capable of holding up to 25,000,000 bushels should consist of permanent trackside storage structures equipped with adequate facilities for handling and conditioning the grain for storage.

That again is in addition to the other program.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Did Mr. Brannan sign that bulletin?

Mr. WILLIAMS. These bulletins are put out by the Department of Agriculture without signatures, but naturally they have his approval. It is an official document, I might say, and I am going to ask when I get through to have it printed as an official Senate document. I think we should all have a chance to read it in its entirety.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I take it from what the distinguished Senator from Delaware has said that he is opposed to this program of storage capacity for 600,000,000 bushels of soybeans, wheat, and other grain?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, I am opposed to it until such time as the Department of Agriculture comes before the committee and tells us the truth, and convinces the committee and the Congress that it is essential. I am opposed to the Secretary of Agriculture coming before committees of Congress and saying, "I want storage capacity for 150,000,000 bushels," when at the same time he is after many times that amount, and fails to tell us the truth. I am opposed to that part of it at any time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to say that the emphasis in the bill, as I understand it, which was intended by the conferees, and I was one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, is placed upon furnishing adequate on-farm storage. If the Secretary engages in a storage program of the magnitude indicated by what has been read by the Senator from Delaware, and goes in for a system of permanent storage facilities, or any storage except that which may be of an emergency nature, he would very clearly be violating the intent of the Congress, as set forth in the conference committee bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I might say to the Senator from Vermont that he may be violating the intent of Congress, and he would, but he would not be violating the law we are asked to pass today, because in the conference report which we are asked to accept we would be giving him the power to build any number of permanent storage facilities he wishes to build, and there is nothing in the law anywhere that I have seen that would prevent him from doing so.

Mr. AIKEN. I may say to the Senator from Delaware that I do not believe we should stop legislating simply because we fear some administrator in the executive branch of the Government is going to violate the intent of the Congress. There are other remedies to be used when that is done. I do not believe we should abrogate our right to legislate simply because we fear someone is going to violate the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason I am emphasizing this point is to show that when Congress turns the power over this $5,000,000,000 corporation over to the Secretary of Agriculture, it would be well for Congress to know what he plans to do with that power, and what I am reading is the plan as outlined by the Department of Agriculture itself.

Mr. AIKEN. I may further say to the Senator from Delaware that I hope he does not accept as gospel all material sent to the PMA committeemen throughout the country, because in the last 2 weeks they have received material containing utterly and absolutely false statements. Probably the Secretary would not assume responsibility for that. Who sends it out I do not know. Such a thing should be stopped. If it is not stopped, the whole Department of Agriculture is going to be discredited. But let me reiterate that we should not discontinue our efforts to enact the best possible legislation simply because we fear that someone in the executive department is going to abuse his power.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to reply to the Senator from Vermont first by saying that I am not reading from material sent out to the PMA men all over the country. I am reading from material sent to a few of the top administrators, as instructions to them. It is not passed out all over the country. This is still classified as a highly confidential document.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, may we look at the material from which the Senator is reading, so we may examine it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall be glad to let the Senator do so in a moment; yes.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Both the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], who was formerly Secretary of Agriculture, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who has long been a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, have referred to the confusion and utter lack of control now existing in the Department of Agriculture. I want to ask the Senator from Delaware whether in his judgment in view of the testimony of these two eminent witnesses as to the existing conditions of affairs, it is wise and sound for the Senate to vote to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the unrestricted control of this $5,000,000,000 corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I certainly do not think we should turn it over to him, particularly in view of the fact that he is indicating now his intention of not trying to carry out the wishes of Congress, and that he is making his plan to construct a large number of new storage facilities regardless of what the board of directors might say. He already has his program outlined, as shown in the report. I certainly think we should not turn any long-range program over to him. I am opposed to turning over to any one man such power as is contained in the charter of the Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to explain to the Senator from Missouri that the publication to which I took exception was not an official publication of the Department of Agriculture, but was a publication of the employees of the Department of Agriculture. They decided I had no control over that publication. I guess possibly they were right. I did feel, however, that since they were all employees of the Department I might prevail on them not to put it out.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I wonder if the Senator from Delaware agrees with me that the retention of the so-called Phillips amendment in the conference report tends to lessen by a considerable degree any need that might have existed for Government-owned storage facilities such as are contemplated in the report from which the Senator is now reading?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it does, yes.

Mr. MUNDT. And would the Senator from Delaware agree with me that that is a very important contribution, to which the Secretary should devote himself energetically, because the proper place to store grain is on the farm, in the farmer's own bins, rather than in Government-owned storehouses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I agree with the Senator, but I think he will agree with me that there is nothing in the law which would confine the Secretary to carrying out the program for providing storage on the farms. Under the conference report as submitted to us today, the Secretary has the power to build an unlimited capacity of Government-owned and Government-operated track-side storage facilities. Is that not correct?

Mr. MUNDT. He has that power, I think, but he would have to ignore entirely the legislative record, and, as Senators speaking from both sides of the aisle have made clear, it is the intention of the Congress that the Secretary exercise that authority only after a need has been demonstrated to exist, which cannot be taken care of by privately built storage facilities. Is not that the record of the debate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from South Dakota is probably correct. That is the record of the legislation as passed by the Senate. But we have before us today, not the Senate version of S. 900 but the House version, and that is not the record of the House bill. I read to the Senate an interpretation as contained in the statement of the managers on the part of the House. The Senator will remember that in the bill itself it is provided that the Commodity Credit Corporation cannot build storage facilities in any area without first determining that the existing storage facilities in that area are inadequate. That was clearly the intention, I think, of every Member of the Senate, including the members of the committee.

Mr. MUNDT. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the statement of the managers on the part of the House we find a phrase of which I am a little skeptical. I read from page 6, as follows:

> It is understood that the Corporation, in its determination of the adequacy of storage space "in the area concerned," will give due consideration to marketing and storage practices employed by private agencies in the case of the particular commodity involved.

If I interpret that language correctly, it means that if the Corporation goes into an area and disapproves of the manner in which the local facilities are conducting their business, then that can be used as determination of the need with respect to existing storage facilities.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Almost that same question was addressed to me by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota when the bill was on the floor.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. I tried to answer as fairly as I could, that I did not believe the bill gave the Department of Agriculture or the Commodity Credit Corporation the authority to do that. I still feel that it does not give that authority. I object to that language in the statement of the managers on the part of the House, but we have no authority to control it.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Delaware to this phrase on page 7 of the report, about the third paragraph:

> The provision for loans to grain growers for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage does not intend that the Corporation * * * (2) shall look exclusively to the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements received by the grower for the repayment of the loan to the grower for storage facilities.

Yet the bill itself is diametrically opposed to that. I believe that the wording of the law would be controlling, and not the report submitted by the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from New Mexico is correct in that respect, but the record shows that the report of the conference committee, of which the Senator from New Mexico was a member, agreed to the language in this report. It is clearly stated on page 6——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator must not say that, because I know he does not mean it. The conferees on the part of the Senate did not agree to a single word in the statement of the managers on the part of the House. I am sure the Senator from Vermont will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not the practice in the Senate for Senate conferees to submit statements. That is the practice in the House. However, so far as I am able to learn, the rule of the Department has always been that while it may look to the language of the statement of the managers on the part of the House, it looks to the words of the Senate debates. I am sure that the Senator from Vermont will bear me out.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason I assumed that the Senate conferees had agreed to this report was that in reply to a question asked by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] it was stated that the report was unanimous.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a unanimous report with regard to those things which are to be the law; but there is no joining with the managers on the part of the House in the language of their statement. I am sure the Senator from Vermont would be the first to say that he never saw the language of the statement of the managers on the part of the House until it was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from New Mexico is entirely correct. The Senate conferees disclaim any responsibility whatever for the statement of the managers on the part of the House. I never saw it. I do not think any Member of the Senate conferees ever saw the report which was made to the House. In my opinion the discussion which is taking place here on the floor of the Senate should be controlling in any interpretations.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Do I correctly understand, then, that the House puts one construction on the language and the Senate another? Will the Senator tell me what the Supreme Court is going to do when it comes to read the discussions and the reports, in determining the meaning of the gentleman who wrote the language?

Mr. AIKEN. As the Senator from New Mexico has said, in that case the language of the law itself would probably prevail. In the statement of the managers on the part of the House there is one statement which is certainly absolutely contradictory of the language of the bill. That has already been read by the Senator from New Mexico. It is this:

> The provision for loans to grain growers for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage does not intend that the Corporation * * * (2) shall look exclusively to the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements received by the grower for the repayment of the loan to the grower for storage facilities.

That is a statement with which I disagree. It is contradictory to the language of the bill. The bill itself says:

> That to encourage the storage of grain on farms, where it can be stored at the lowest cost, the Corporation shall make loans to grain growers needing storage facilities when such growers shall apply to the Corporation for financing the construction or purchase of suitable storage, and these loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers.

That provision of the bill is completely contradictory of the statement of the managers on the part of the House. Although I am not a constitutional lawyer, I feel sure that the provision of the law, being written in such plain language and being supported by the discussion on the floor of the Senate, should certainly prevail over the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is a clear legal and constitutional proposition that if the language of the law is clear, the court does not look at anything but the law.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know how it could be any clearer.

Mr. BREWSTER. If the law is in doubt, if the language is ambiguous, the court looks to the debates and the discussion. If the court should reach that point, if there were any doubt, the House and the Senate being entirely correlative and coequal, the court would have to give as much weight to what the House said as to what the Senate said, if it were within the limits of any reasonable construction of the language.

I hope the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Mexico are correct, that there is no doubt about it; but if there is any doubt, the Senate will have no primacy so far as construction is concerned.

Mr. AIKEN. In this case I should say that only the most deliberate intention could result in misinterpreting the wording of the bill as it is written.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if in his judgment, in view of the doubt as to the construction of this language, it would not be the course of wise legislation to refer the bill back to the conferees and have it straightened out. We certainly should not enact any law when, on the day of its enactment, we do not know exactly what it means.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I feel that that is correct, but I do not feel that there is so much doubt about it when we read the statement of the managers on the part of the House. That was the basis upon which we were going to operate until we started this discussion. As I understood the chairman of the committee at the time he presented the report this afternoon, he stated that he was presenting a unanimous report. Again it is clearly stated on page 6:

> It is understood that the Corporation, in its determination of the adequacy of storage space "in the area concerned," will give due consideration to marketing and storage practices employed by private agencies in the case of the particular commodity involved.

I should like to read a further statement contained in this so-called "confidential" bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture. Reading from page 13:

> It is an outstanding shortcoming of the competitive system of free market prices that there is not sufficient incentive to individual producers or processors of grain to store supplies sufficiently large to level out, as far as possible, periods of shortages and surpluses or periods of high and low demand.

In other words, they have already prejudged that the existing storage facilities are not sufficient. They go further and plainly state that the over-all program embraces the expansion of the Government into taking over the grain-storage facilities of the country.

I call attention to another item, under the title "Oats"——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the Senator from Delaware is performing a service in bringing these matters out. However, I consulted with Members of the Senate conferees when I first saw the statement of the managers on the part of the House. I went to the distinguished Senator from Vermont and said, "We must clear up some of these points on the floor. It would be tragic if that statement in the report of the managers on the part of the House should go unchallenged." The Senator from Vermont and I agreed to call it to the attention of the Senate. I asked the distinguished majority leader to notify me so that I could be present while the discussion was under way.

I do not subscribe at all to some of the statements in the report of the managers on the part of the House. I think it should be clearly understood that the Senate conferees, in presenting the conference report, presented only the language in the conference report, and did not in any way subscribe to the language in the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear the Senator from New Mexico say that; but since we are agreed that this is dangerous language, does not the Senator agree with me that the proper procedure would be to send the bill back to conference?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not dangerous language at all. The language of the bill provides that—

> These loans shall be deducted from the proceeds of price-support loans or purchase agreements made between the Corporation and the growers.

That language refers to money advanced for construction of facilities for farm storage of grain. It is as clear as it could be. How in the world anyone could make the statement contained in the statement of the manager on the part of the House, I do not know, unless he misread the language. It is a clear contradiction of the plain language of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I point out to the Senator from New Mexico that the language does not say that money cannot be loaned to any other groups, or under any other circumstances.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wonder what the Senator from New Mexico would say to this language, which, as I understand, is found in the document from which the Senator from Delaware has been reading. As I understand, the following language appears on page 7 of the private document:

> The suggestion that in the carrying out of price-support operations on grains existing commercial storage facilities be more extensively utilized, would not be practicable.

What does the Senator from New Mexico say to language of that character?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the language in the document from which I have been reading, which, up to the present time, Members of Congress have not had the advantage of reading.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know anything about that language. I do state that the language which has been agreed to unanimously by the conferees on the part of the Senate and the conferees on the part of the House clearly states, following the suggestions made by many Members of the Senate, that existing private facilities should be utilized. I think there can be no question that the Department would be required to use them, and I doubt that the Department would try to do otherwise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We all agree on the intent of the Senate, but the House conferees apparently differ.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is absolutely no question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there is a question in my mind as to whether there is in the conference report anything which would prohibit the Department from doing otherwise.

Reading from this confidential bulletin it would seem to indicate that the Secretary of Agriculture has no intention of carrying out the intent of Congress. If this is the program of the Secretary of Agriculture—certainly it was his program in February, and he has not recalled it since that time—why did he not tell the Congress about it? If this is the program that is being developed in the Department of Agriculture, do not the Members of Congress have a right to know about it?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I think they have a right to know about it. But regardless of the ideas the Secretary of Agriculture might have had as to what was desirable, after he came before the congressional committees and after they in effect restricted him to a certain practice, he would be obliged to act accordingly, and he could not indulge in his own ideas.

Something was said about the policy of the Department of Agriculture in February; but since that time the Congress has acted in this matter, and the Secretary of Agriculture must live up to what is provided in the pending measure which is about to become the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Again I emphasize that I am reading the language of the Secretary of Agriculture; this is a report which was put out by the Department of Agriculture, and for which the Secretary of Agriculture is responsible. If he is not responsible for it, he should have recalled it long ago.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask the Senator to permit me to see it, and then I can easily determine whether it is the language of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall do so in a moment.

I may say that the reason I picked up the report, in the beginning, and became interested in it, is the fact that certain representatives of the Department of Agriculture now are making surveys in regard to the building of such storage facilities. I have already read to the Senate the part of the report stating that their program for wheat and corn is to build storage facilities for 600,000,000 bushels. I have pointed out their program for soybeans and sorghum.

Here is what they say about oats——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have no desire to curtail the discussion; but simply for the information of myself and other Senators, I should like to inquire whether the discussion of the conference report is likely to terminate this afternoon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I myself have no intention of prolonging it unduly. As soon as I can read this report, which I wish the Senate to know about——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will permit the Senator from Vermont to straighten him out in regard to the report, I think he will find that the report he is dealing with is not the report of the Secretary of Agriculture at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I repeat that I do not wish to curtail the debate or interfere with the participation of any Senator in it, but I am trying to ascertain how long it will continue, so that I may inform those who are waiting with me on the floor of the Senate what to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Maryland will determine how many questions will be asked, I shall try to tell him how long it will take to answer them.

I am trying to place this report before the Senate. It is the only way by which the Senate can determine what is going on in the Department of Agriculture. The report has been withheld up to this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator from Delaware assume that probably he would take another hour?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I think the discussion probably will take that long.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to say that the presentation of this bulletin on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Delaware disturbed me considerably; and in the last 3 or 4 minutes I have called the Department of Agriculture to find out more about it.

I am advised that this bulletin represents a rather elaborate grain-storage program which was worked out by the Grain Branch of the Production and Marketing Administration. It was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, who appointed a special committee to consider it. They called in Mr. Roland Ballou, in charge of the Commodity Credit Corporation's office in San Francisco, because they thought he would be disinterested. After this program—which was worked out within the Grain Branch of the Production and Marketing Administration—had been considered, it was rejected, both by the committee appointed to consider it and by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I am authorized by the Department of Agriculture to make that statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the Senator from Vermont, and I am sure he is authorized to make that statement at this time. But I should like to point out that in February of this year—about the same time when the bulletin was issued—the Secretary of Agriculture was writing me a letter stating that he was planning for 150,000,000 bushels of storage capacity. This bulletin was not rejected then. If it has been rejected as of the present time, I feel it safe to say that such action took place since I started speaking this afternoon.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to ask the distinguished Senators who are engaging in this debate what they think, in the first place, of the language used and theory represented in this statement in the document, and then I wish to ask whether certain current activities are not calculated to implement the very policy so stated. I refer to page 15:

> The need to expand these facilities to a recommended capacity of at least 500,000,000 bushels is more fundamental than the problem of making existing legislation work.

I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico whether they consider that an administrative agency of any character should say that the objectives it has in view in regard to legislation are more fundamental and important than making existing legislation work.

Mr. AIKEN. Again I would say that I am advised by the Department of Agriculture——

Mr. BREWSTER. I am not asking that question.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LANGER. Who has the floor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor and controls the time.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I cannot credit——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I should yield to the Senator from Vermont, if he can frame his statement in the form of a question.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senator from Delaware will give me permission to answer the Senator from Maine. I am simply surprised that the Senator from Maine would think that I would even consider it to be a good theory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor——

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to go further, I would say that in my opinion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Delaware controls the time. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Vermont, to permit him to reply to the Senator from Maine, without thereby causing me to lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. LANGER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. It seems to me that what the Senator from Vermont states is clear, and I accept his statement that the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Agriculture do not now advocate the program outlined in the bulletin which has been discussed here.

I wish to ask this question of the Senator from Delaware, and also of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Mexico, whenever they may have an opportunity to reply to it: I should like to know whether the action contemplated today by the Department of Agriculture is not in precise accord with the utterly unsound principle there laid down, when they propose, as I am reliably informed they do, to resume the dumping of potatoes upon the market, although the Department this very day has full power and authority to proceed with the very program of allowing potatoes to seek their own market, and to pay the producers of potatoes the difference, exactly as Mr. Brannan proposes. I wish to know whether the Secretary of Agriculture or any Member of the Senate can defend a proposal of that character, which is so utterly in accord with the suggestion of the very sentence I have read—namely, that making existing legislation work is subsidiary to all other matters—when, as to the current potato crop now coming into the market in the Southern States, instead of exercising the power Secretary Brannan possesses—the power to allow the potatoes to seek their own level, and to pay the potato producers the difference between that price and the support price—it is proposed to start a great program of dumping the potatoes. I want to know what the Senator from Delaware thinks, and, when the opportunity is afforded, what the Senators from Vermont and New Mexico think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I may say in reply to the Senator from Maine, that I feel that this is a part of the preconceived plan of the Secretary of Agriculture to force the Congress to adopt his long-range farm program by making unpopular the existing legislation. I may say to the Senator from Vermont, that I do not question but that the Secretary of Agriculture did advise him that this bulletin was recalled. I question the accuracy of the Secretary's statement as to when he recalled the bulletin.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. Regardless of that, I say that, even if the plan was only off his desk with his approval 1 day, he did submit to a board for their consideration a proposal in which he pointed out to his men that it was far more important for them to get his program enacted into law than it was to make the existing legislation work. That was a damaging statement to come from any member of the Cabinet, even if it only leaves him for 1 day. So the time element as to when this was recalled does not enter into the fact that it was considered. It is the same Secretary of Agriculture. Under this bill he has the power to carry it out any time he wishes to do it, and I still say there is nothing that has been pointed out by anyone which would prohibit him by law from carrying out the program I am outlining.

I read further what he says under the title of "Oats":

A continued high level of oat production will further aggravate the problem of providing adequate farm-storage facilities for corn, and this has been duly considered in the program of expanding the farm grain-storage facilities, which is being vigorously developed by the PMA.

They are going to take over the storage of rice. Reading further, under the heading "Rice," I find this statement:

A study is being carried on under the Research and Marketing Act to determine the relative advantages of different methods of harvesting, farm marketing, handling, drying, and conditioning for storage and billing, which is expected to provide the information needed for the development of a program of Government storage facilities for rice.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it not be better for the Senator from Delaware to cease saying the Secretary of Agriculture said it? The Secretary of Agriculture has never said it. It did not at any time leave his desk with his approval. I think it is grossly unfair to a public official for the Senator to stand here and undertake to quote him, when the Senator is not quoting him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I may state it this way: The Department of Agriculture, of which the Secretary of Agriculture is the head, made this statement, and the Secretary of Agriculture did not deny it. The Secretary of Agriculture is responsible for the bulletin. It is the only source of information which comes from the Department of Agriculture that I know of anywhere, and if the Senator from New Mexico can point out to me why we should not consider this, I should be very happy to have him do so.

Mr. ANDERSON. I certainly can. In connection with the purchase of dried fruits in California 2 years ago, a committee came to Washington and suggested certain things to the Fruit and Vegetable Branch of the Department. Their suggestions were submitted to interested people over the United States for their comment. They were not my suggestions. They were never authorized by me. If someone had risen on the floor of the Senate later, read the suggestions and said, "Those are the words of the Secretary of Agriculture," it would have been grossly unfair to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like then to raise this question: Did those suggestions go out as an official Department of Agriculture bulletin?

Mr. ANDERSON. They were sent out by the Fruit and Vegetable Branch, because that is the program agency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not reading from the Fruit and Vegetable Branch statement, I am reading from an official bulletin of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator is reading from the Grain Branch statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the United States Department of Agriculture, the Production and Marketing Administration, Grain Branch.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Grain Branch.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me read to the Senator the official title of this bulletin: "The proposed program to provide the Government storage facilities for stockpiling grain—500,000,000 bushels of Government-owned trackside storage facilities needed for the farm stabilization and price-support program," and it is marked "for administrative use only."

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. All I am trying to suggest to the Senator is this: I am not objecting to his reading it. I shall be very glad to join with the Senator in trying to place it in the RECORD, if that is what he desires. But I think it is improper to suggest that those are the words of the Secretary of Agriculture. People working within the Grain Branch came forward with a proposal. The Secretary, before adopting or passing upon that proposal, said, "Find out what the people over the country think of the proposal." The proposal went out to a selected group. It was found that the committee's recommendation was bad, and the Secretary promptly rejected it.

Now, if I may be permitted to say so, the notice to which the able Senator from Maine has taken objection relates, I am sure, although I was never consulted and never heard of this document until this very hour, to the importance of getting trackside facilities or farm-storage facilities. I do not think that was anything to do with the agricultural program itself. All I am trying to urge the Senator to do when he presents this document is to say "This hypothesis, sent out by the Grain Branch for examination, has this language," not quoting the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to say that the bulletin was put out by the United States Department of Agriculture, of which the Secretary of Agriculture is head. It outlines the program, which he will be the one to carry out. It outlines the program which he approves to his top administrative assistants. It also outlines a program which he has only denied this afternoon. This is the first knowledge I have ever had that he has repudiated this program in any way. It outlines a program either of the Secretary of Agriculture or of men high up in the Department of Agriculture. Those men are still on the pay roll, and the Secretary of Agriculture has not said he is going to fire the men who issued this bulletin without authorization. Oh, no; everything was all right until Congress found it out, and now he suddenly comes forward and says he has denied it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. Since the Senator from New Mexico has answered a portion of the question, I hope he may be permitted to complete his reply as to whether dumping potatoes is preferable to Secretary Brannan's applying the very program he is now proposing for the entire Agricultural Adjustment Act, by observation of the price differentials.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to answer that by calling the attention of the Senator from Maine to this statement found on page 12 of the bulletin. I think perhaps the Senator from Maine should not be so concerned with potatoes alone, because the overall long-range program, which has been developed by the Secretary and his top personnel in the Department of Agriculture, outlines a further extension of this procedure. I quote from page 12 of this bulletin:

An effective means of siphoning off into complete disappearance such surplus supplies of grain as cannot be moved at support prices.

I shall read that entire paragraph later. They have here a program under which they propose to "siphon off into complete disappearance such surplus supplies of grain as cannot be moved at support prices." The item of potatoes is only the beginning.

Mr. BREWSTER. That apparently is in line with the current policy. The reason I emphasized potatoes is, potatoes are the only commodity in this country which is under the amended program of the flexible price support, as the result of the action of last year.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement at this point, if the Senator from Delaware is willing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, since the question has been raised, I would prefer to continue, and I shall yield as soon as I possibly can to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it would be helpful if we could clear this up as we go along.

Mr. AIKEN. It will not take over a minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Vermont so that he may reply at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in reply to the query of the Senator from Maine I want to say that while I do not know what goes on in the mind of the Department of Agriculture, except as to some things which are contradictory to what goes on in my mind, I would say that we certainly do not approve of destroying potatoes. It is only the flexible support price with reference to potatoes which takes effect in the year 1949. The method of disposing of them or of making compensatory payments and letting them find their own level on the market does not go into effect until January 1, 1950. For that reason, the only thing that can be done with them now is virtually to destroy them or give them away for a cent a hundred pounds.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, may I have an opportunity to reply?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is indeed a rare day when I am able to correct the Senator from Vermont on a problem of this character, and, possibly, also the Senator from New Mexico. I hold in my hand article V of the contract with potato dealers which authorizes precisely the action which Secretary Brannan proposes. I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ART. V. Sales below support prices: When directed or authorized by CCC as provided in article 3 (VI), dealer will offer for sale in commercial outlets, at minimum prices prescribed by CCC which will reflect less than the applicable support prices, any potatoes of designated quantities, qualities, grades, sizes, and varieties, acquired by dealer at applicable support prices. When directed or authorized to offer for sale under this article, dealer may offer for sale stock acquired at higher than applicable support prices, but in such case the liability of CCC relative to any such potatoes shall not be increased thereby. In the event such direction or authorization is issued to dealer by the chairman or acting chairman of the State committee or a CCC contracting officer, there shall be attached thereto a signed or a certified true and correct copy of the corresponding direction or authorization given to such chairman, acting chairman of the State committee, or a CCC contracting officer, by the Director or Acting Director, Fruit and Vegetable Branch, Production and Marketing Administration.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to read from that article:

When directed or authorized by CCC as provided in article 3 (VI), dealer—

Meaning the certified dealer—

will offer for sale in commercial outlets, at minimum prices prescribed by CCC which will reflect less than the applicable support prices, any potatoes of designated quantities, qualities, grades, sizes, and varieties acquired by dealer at applicable support prices.

Then it goes on to provide:

When directed or authorized to offer for sale under this article, dealer may offer for sale stock acquired at higher than applicable support prices, but in such case the liability of CCC relative to any such potatoes shall not be increased thereby.

In that event he is reimbursed for the difference between what the potatoes are sold for and what he paid for them.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the provision of the contract just read by the Senator from Maine. However, if I recall correctly reference was made to a contract with the dealer which would be different from any arrangement with the producer. I want to point out that the provision which permits the Secretary to make payments to producers in support of prices, as well as supporting prices by loans, purchases, and other means, does not go into effect until January 1, 1950. I do not know under what provision of law the Secretary is operating in entering into a contract of this nature but I am sure it must be a contract or agreement with the dealer.

Mr. BREWSTER. This particular provision has been in effect for more than 6 years. It was operated in the State of Maine in 1943. It was operated last year in the State of Idaho.

I read from article 6:

When dealer sells below the applicable support price in accordance with article 5 and is in compliance with all other provisions of this agreement, CCC will pay him the difference between support price at time of sale adjusted for marketing services not performed and the sales price.

In other words, there is the precise authority for Secretary Brannan to do today for the current potato crop what he is advocating in legislation in another year. Yet, instead of applying the provision which he is urging on us as proposed legislation, he is preferring to dump the potatoes on the ground this very day. I think it is time for some explanation.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Maine will have to look to the Secretary, not to me, for the explanation.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LANGER. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. LANGER. No question is being asked by any Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the answer is found on page 15, where the Department of Agriculture emphasizes the fact that getting its program enacted into legislation is more fundamental than making existing legislation work.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is the application of that very principle which the Secretary of Agriculture is carrying out today. The law is of no consequence as compared with achieving the other things he has in view. Why does he not try the power he already possesses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is correct. Continuing to read from page 7, we find more enlightenment on his long-range program:

The suggestion that in the carrying out of price-support operations on grains existing commercial facilities be more extensively utilized would not be practicable.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I should like to say that the Senator from Delaware has rendered a great service, which I am sure will be reassuring to a great many persons, so that the Senator from Vermont can exercise the authorization given him to advise that that report has been repudiated and rejected. We have the direct assurance from the Senator from Vermont, speaking for the Secretary of Agriculture, that those recommendations will not be carried out.

With that background, I should like to ask a question, based on the language of the conference report, reading from the bottom of the first page of the report:

Provided, That the authority contained in this subsection shall not be utilized by the Corporation for the purpose of acquiring real property or any interest therein in order to provide storage facilities for any commodity, unless the Corporation determines that existing privately owned storage facilities for such commodities in the area concerned are not adequate.

In view of the fact that that language is in the conference report, does the Senator from Delaware find anything in the language on the part of the managers of the House or in the debate which takes place by Senators in lieu of a statement by managers on the part of the Senate, anything to repudiate that definite language in the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I read from page 6, second paragraph:

It is understood that the Corporation, in its determination of the adequacy of storage space "in the area concerned," will give due consideration to marketing and storage practices employed by private agencies in the case of the particular commodity involved.

According to that language, the Department of Agriculture can find sufficient excuse to build Government storage facilities in any area, notwithstanding the fact that there may be many more times the required amount of capacity owned by private industry.

Mr. MUNDT. That is a possible interpretation which the Senator has placed upon it. But, in view of the statement made by the managers on the part of the House, the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico, formerly Secretary of Agriculture, the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, and the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, all of whom definitely stated that that is not the intention, does not the Senator think that that is adequate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir. I do not question the sincerity of any of those gentlemen. But if that is the intention, let us write it into the law. I do not trust the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the intentions unless we write them into the law. I pointed out at the time the bill was discussed that the intent of the law had not been carried out previously by the present Secretary of Agriculture. I, for one, do not say that he will again violate our trust, but I do not trust him in that respect.

Mr. MUNDT. Is it not also written into the law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is written into the present law, but not the conference report, under consideration.

Mr. MUNDT. But there is a difference between the conference report and the law. The language is written specifically into the law. There is some ambiguity of the language of the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we were passing this power back to the board of directors, I would not be so concerned. But when we consider that the proposal is to turn the control of this Corporation back to one man, who will have the sole power of operation, the sole power to borrow four and three-quarter billion dollars to carry out any program he desires, I do say that we must know what is in the man's mind, and the only way I know what is in the Secretary's mind, or what is in the minds of the officials of the Department of Agriculture, is to read what they themselves say is their program, and I continue to read from this statement. I will know in a few minutes the date when some of the so-called confidential bulletins were mailed out, that is, the most recent dates. I hope to have the information before we get through today as to when they really were suspended from their consideration.

I wish to read now from page 12. We find here that they have a program for disposing of their surplus commodities.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I do not agree at all with the viewpoint taken by the Senator from Delaware. Let us go to a town in South Dakota, for instance, the town from which my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from South Dakota comes, and see what might happen in Mound City, S. Dak. Let us assume there are two elevator companies there and they are in cahoots and are robbing the farmers in every direction. In view of that condition, why should not the Secretary of Agriculture have the power to go there and clean up that situation by leasing an elevator, or, if he cannot lease one, by building one? Why should not the common people be protected?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from North Dakota is pointing out a situation where there are two elevator companies in a town, as he says, in cahoots, robbing the farmers, and he wants to know why the farmers should not be protected.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The best answer to that could be obtained from the Department of Justice. We already have laws which specifically prohibit any two individuals getting together, conspiring, to rig prices. If such action is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture, he can go into court and try both those men and break up that combine. We already have laws, and if they are not being kept, it is a criticism of the Department of Justice, not of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to have the Senator give us just one instance, since the Sherman Antitrust Act was adopted way back in 1891, of anyone being sent to jail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot give the Senator any case, but the laws were passed, and if they are not being enforced, it is not my fault; it is the fault of the Department of Justice; and if the Department of Justice will not carry out the law, then let us get a new Attorney General. Let us not say that the antitrust law is being violated, and on that assumption we are going to build plants all over the country in competition with private industry, not only the grain industry, but steel mills, and automobile factories, merely because groups of manufacturers are accused of conspiring together in violation of the law, and the law is not enforced.

Mr. LANGER. The answer is very simple. We hear talk about communism coming into the country. It is coming in because, as a matter of fact, the antitrust law has not been enforced in this country, whether we had a Democratic Attorney General or a Republican Attorney General. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator whether he can give us the name of a single person, aside from Eugene Debs, who has been convicted and sent to jail under the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from North Dakota that perhaps it would be better if he named the ones he thinks should be in jail.

Mr. LANGER. I will tell the Senator who should be in jail. For example——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to say to the Senator from North Dakota that he should frame his statement in the form of a question to make sure I do not lose the floor.

Mr. LANGER. I shall do so. If a GI who is hungry and has a family to support steals a loaf of bread, he goes to jail, but if three or four big corporations get together and raise the price of bread and milk to widows and orphans, they do not go to jail, do they?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is always with joy that I hear a good orphan speech from the Senator from North Dakota. It is very informative, but it does not have anything to do with whether the Senate should confirm the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I quite agree with him that justice perhaps has miscarried, and I would read from a report of the Hoover Commission in which they pointed out that very thing. They said that, if in the Government you want to make a mistake, make one big enough and you will get away with it; which is a very damaging statement, in my opinion.

Mr. LANGER. To make it very simple, suppose there is one elevator in the town of Mound City, S. Dak., the home of our distinguished colleague, and that elevator is serving the farmers around there and robbing them. What objection does the Senator from Delaware have to the Secretary of Agriculture protecting those farmers against that one elevator, where there is no evidence of any combination or trust, and there could not be, because there is only one elevator there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order that I might answer that intelligently, will the Senator point out some towns where that is being done?

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection. I might say that in one area in my State 11 trucks were hauling wheat from 1 field to 11 different elevators. I found that where there was only one elevator in the town the farmers did not get as good a grade as where there was competition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to say to the Senator from North Dakota that I still do not see what that has to do with whether the Senate confirms the board of directors, or why the Commodity Credit Corporation, operating under an independent board of directors, confirmed by the Senate, could not carry out the law just as well as can the Secretary of Agriculture by having that exclusive power of appointment given to him. I do not get the connection between the two situations.

Mr. LANGER. I understood the Senator from Delaware to be objecting to the Secretary of Agriculture, if in his judgment there was inadequate storage space, having power to provide sufficient storage. That is what I understand the Senator has been reading from the bulletin.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I am doing here is not necessarily raising objections. I am merely outlining the program of the Secretary of Agriculture in order that the Senator from North Dakota and all the other Members of the Senate may know it. If the Senator disagrees with the report and the language I am reading, call the Secretary of Agriculture. He printed it; I did not print it.

Mr. LANGER. I want the distinguished Senator from Delaware to know that I agree with that report. I think the Secretary of Agriculture is doing something which should have been done 50 years ago in this country. I am for that system of Government storage. I want it wherever there are not adequate storage facilities to serve the common people of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from North Dakota has a perfect right to agree with the report, but I think he will agree with me that he can agree with the report more intelligently after I read it than before I read it. So I am going to try to read the report, and then he will know what is contemplated by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. If my distinguished colleague from North Dakota is going to continue to talk about robbery, I merely wish to ask that he talk about elevators in North Dakota, where robbery may be practiced, instead of elevators in South Dakota, where it is the exception.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For a question.

Mr. LANGER. I want Senators to know that in North Dakota we knew how to protect our farmers by building a State-owned elevator with millions and millions of bushels capacity. May I ask, as a question, whether that is not one way of protecting people, which is the way we follow in my State?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am one of those who do not want to agree yet that the private-enterprise system of this country has failed. I point out to the Senator from North Dakota that it was under this system of private enterprise that our country was developed into the greatest Nation on earth, and under this system our people enjoy the highest standard of living.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if it is not general knowledge that the adventure in the State of North Dakota in the grain and milling business has cost the people of North Dakota many millions of dollars?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I could not answer that question, but I will say that the Senator from North Dakota, from the State where they have State-operated grain-storage facilities, is now complaining of what is going on in his State, while the Senator from South Dakota, where apparently they are operating under the private-enterprise system, says that cases of exploitation are the exception. I should say perhaps that is another indication that the private-enterprise system in this country is working well.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I want to put what I am about to say in the form of a question. Does not the Senator from Delaware know that in the State of North Dakota the Bank of North Dakota, which has been referred to by my distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. KEM], has been a glorious success since the 19th day of August 1919, when it opened for business, and that there has never been a profit of less than one-half million dollars a year to the taxpayers of North Dakota from that bank?

Does not the Senator further know that through our storage capacities of mills and elevators located at Grand Forks, N. Dak., which cost the people of our State a trifle more than $3,000,000 to build, in 1 year we saved the people of North Dakota more than $12,000,000?

Does not the Senator from Delaware further know, referring now to the statement made by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Missouri, that in the matter of State-owned hail insurance, that State insurance has saved the farmers of our State more than $100,000,000?

Does not the Senator from Delaware further know, referring again to the statement made by my distinguished colleague from Missouri, that in the matter of the State-owned fire and tornado insurance, that is, public buildings being insured against fire and against tornado, that State insurance has saved the taxpayers more than $4,000,000?

Does not the Senator from Delaware know that instead of being a failure, instead of people losing money, each and every single year in which those State industries have been in operation they have been a glorious success?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, Mr. President, I have no way of knowing that. I do not dispute it. If it is true, I would suggest that the Senator from North Dakota place the information in the RECORD. I am sure it would be of value to the Senate, and that Senators would be glad to have it available to them. I am not questioning the accuracy of the Senator's statement, but assuming that it is true, I am surprised over the many requests we receive from the State of North Dakota for Federal assistance.

I continue to read what the Department of Agriculture plans to do under the surplus disposal programs:

> In the event that stock held by the Commodity Credit Corporation at the end of any crop year exceeds these limits as defined by law, mandatory surplus disposal programs should be implemented that move these excess stocks into consumption. * * *
> Expanded industrial utilization gives promise of providing increased market outlets which are not subject to the limitations imposed upon outlets for food. The potential demand for grain in nonfood industrial uses is sufficiently elastic relative to price to be relied upon as an effective means of siphoning off into complete disappearance such surplus supplies of grain as cannot be moved at support prices and which are in excess of desirable reserve stock.

In other words, they are planning to siphon all these surplus grains which are accumulated in the North Dakota elevators by the State of North Dakota, and pay them a profit on it, and siphon those grains into complete disappearance at the expense of the taxpayers.

Continuing reading from this same bulletin, I quote:

> It is, therefore, recommended, as a necessary concomitant of price support and supply stabilization programs, that burdensome surpluses of grains be made available for industrial uses, principally industrial alcohol, at less than support prices.

Reading further, we find the following:

> One of the fundamental objectives of the Commodity Credit Corporation, as stated in the declared purposes of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, is to assist in the maintenance of balanced and adequate supplies of agricultural commodities and to facilitate their orderly distribution. * * *
> The act further states that one of the broader purposes of the legislation is to assist consumers to obtain an adequate and steady supply of such commodities at fair prices. It is evident that it was the intent of legislation to stabilize supplies as well as prices against fluctuation in production.

In other words, their ultimate goal is that they are going to stabilize all supplies, prices, and production.

They conclude the statement, as I said before, with instructions to their departmental heads, as follows:

> The need to expand these facilities to a recommended capacity of at least 500,000,000 bushels is more fundamental than the problem of making existing legislation work.

I might say, Mr. President, that I have just been advised that this so-called confidential bulletin which the Department of Agriculture said was never seriously intended to be put out, was as a matter of fact being used as late as April 20 of this year by the departmental heads.

Mr. President, I think we should give serious consideration to this matter, before we ever consider turning over the control of this Corporation to the Secretary of Agriculture, or for that matter to any other one person. I fully recognize the difficulty in having any conference report rejected. However, one of the provisions, as contained in the conference report, as I said, is so far different from the bill as passed by the Senate, and its acceptance will have such far-reaching effect on the agricultural interests of the country, that I feel we have no alternative other than to express opposition to the conference report.

Under the conference report, as I said before, we are turning over completely to the Secretary of Agriculture exclusive control over this $5,000,000,000 Government Corporation. The Corporation is capitalized at $100,000,000, and in addition the Secretary of Agriculture will have the power to borrow an additional $4,750,000,000, pledging the credit of the United States, and he can do that without ever coming back to Congress for any additional authority.

We are told by the supporters of the bill that the management of the Corporation will be vested in a board of directors, but that simply is not true. In section 9 of the conference report we find this:

> The board shall consist of six members (in addition to the Secretary), who shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary.

It is this provision which states that the board of directors shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture, to which I most strenuously object.

Under this provision the Secretary of Agriculture can at a moment's notice remove any member of the board of directors who is bold enough to express disagreement with any of the policies of the Department. It is unquestionably one-man control over a $5,000,000,000 corporation, which, by the way, represents more power than has ever been granted to any President of the United States, and I might say it is more power than has ever been asked for by any President of the United States. The mere fact that a member of the President's Cabinet is bold enough to ask for this power is in itself sufficient reason for us to reject it.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Delaware mean that the members of the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation will hold office at the will of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The conference report plainly states that the board of directors shall be appointed by and hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. He could appoint them 1 day and remove them the next?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He may do that, and it almost has been done. I should like to point out to the Senator from Missouri the fact that in the last 7 years there have been 32 different members of the board of directors. In a 2-year period alone there were four different presidents of the Corporation. We have had six presidents of the Corporation since 1940. I wrote this statement 2 days ago, and at that time I understood that there had been only five presidents of the Corporation since 1940. Since then I have found there was another president discovered, who served for 8 months. They change officers so fast they do not know who are on the board of directors half the time.

Mr. KEM. That was under a regime under the previous law when the directors held at the pleasure of the Secretary?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. Subsequently that law was changed, and the appointments were made subject to confirmation by the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In 1948, by the Eightieth Congress, when we passed the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act. I may say that when we passed that act, making them subject to confirmation, we provided for exactly the same method by which all Government corporations are handled as of today. It is the same procedure which is recommended by the Hoover Commission, whose suggestions or recommendations the Senate so enthusiastically adopted a few days ago, but now we are starting in tearing down one agency at a time.

Mr. KEM. The Senate is asked again to surrender that authority?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. President, to emphasize the absurdity of this request, I should like to point out that if the Senate adopts the conference report the board of directors not only would lack sufficient authority to administer the affairs of the Corporation, but would actually lack enough authority to select or hire their own private secretaries, without first consulting with or obtaining the permission of the Secretary of Agriculture. The sponsors of the bill boast of the fact that they have written in this report a provision under which the advisory board, consisting of five members, who I understand are expected to meet once every 90 days, must be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That is a complete farce. It is perfectly ridiculous to suggest that the five-man advisory board, who have no power whatsoever except to give advice to a figurehead board of directors who, in turn, have no power except to carry out the suggestions of the Secretary of Agriculture, should be confirmed by the Senate. The board of directors clearly have no power to carry out any such advice unless the Secretary of Agriculture approves. It would be comparable to the procedure of having the Senate confirm the administrative assistants of members of the Cabinet without confirming the members of the Cabinet themselves.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Delaware know any reason why the time of the Senate should be taken up in confirmation of members of the advisory board when the Senate is denied the privilege of confirming the members of the board of directors themselves?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the suggestion that we confirm members of the advisory board is a complete farce. It is useles. If we are going to give the Secretary of Agriculture this power, let us do so openly. Let us not go through the farce of confirming an advisory board under the assumption that we are afraid that someone will make friends with the Secretary and give him the wrong advice, so we want to be sure with whom he talks.

Mr. KEM. Is it the idea that the Senate could not be trusted to confirm directors, but may be trusted to confirm members of an advisory board? Is that the theory of the conference repo..?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know just what the theory is; but in order to point out just how little power is conferred upon the directors—or the President of the Corporation for that matter—under the system under which the Corporation operated prior to the passage of 1948 law, I point out to Members of the Senate some testimony which was given before the House Appropriations Committee in 1945. This testimony was given by Hon. Frank Hancock, at that time President of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The testimony was given on February 27, 1945.

Mr. ANDERSON. What date was that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. 1945.

Mr. ANDERSON. What time in 1945?

Mr. WILLIAMS. February 27. Representative Tarver was questioning Mr. Hancock, the President of the Commodity Credit Corporation, relative to some of the personnel who were working in that organization, and who apparently had criminal records. He was expressing his opposition to the fact that they remained on the pay roll. He had just pointed out the name of a man to whom he was objecting. I quote from that testimony:

Mr. TARVER. This man Hatch is not an employee of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but of the War Food Administration?

Mr. HANCOCK. Judge, that is difficult to answer. Please do not misunderstand me, but I do not know exactly who are the employees of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. At that time, in 1945, there was a completely different organization of the Commodity Credit Corporation from that which existed after August 1945 and from that which existed up until 1948.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct; and I was about to point it out. I am reading from testimony which was given on February 27, 1945, by the president of the Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator can go back further, to the time when the Commodity Credit Corporation was not even in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just a minute. Let me finish reading the statement, and then perhaps the Senator from New Mexico will express his opinion. Representative Tarver asked this question regarding a man with a criminal record who was working in the Department:

Mr. TARVER. Does it meet with your approval that a man with that kind of a record should be employed by the Commodity Credit Corporation in a position of responsibility?

Mr. HANCOCK. It certainly does not.

Mr. TARVER. Is there anything you can do about it?

Bear in mind that Representative Tarver was asking the President of the Corporation, who said it did not meet with his approval that this man with a criminal record worked in the Department, whether he could do anything about it.

Mr. TARVER. Is there anything you can do about it?

Mr. HANCOCK. It depends entirely upon my authority. I do want to say here, with all due respect, that my duties and responsibilities as yet have not been clearly defined, and there is no man in the Corporation more insistent upon an early clarification of those responsibilities than the witness before you.

On February 27, 1945, at the time he was President of the Corporation and appearing before the Appropriations Committee of the House, he did not know whether he had the power to fire a man who, he said at that time, had no right to be on the pay roll; but he did not know whether he had authority to fire him.

The record shows that he did not fire him until May 1, 1945, when the man was removed at his own request. To me that is a perfectly ridiculous situation. Let us be fair about it. If we have not five men who are capable of handling the affairs of the Corporation, let us get them off the board and get five men who are capable.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. That was a man who was supplied to the War Food Administration by the Civil Service Commission. He was under Civil Service. The Senator from Delaware is well aware of the fact that a man who is under Civil Service cannot be fired. Charges must be preferred against him. That is why Mr. Hancock answered as he did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not the reason he gives in his testimony.

Mr. ANDERSON. What reason does he give in his testimony?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason he gave in his testimony was that he had not had an interpretation of his authority.

I should like to point out that I have checked into the pedigree of this individual. I find that three times during this period charges were made against him upon which he could have been fired. This official was working with the Commodity Credit Corporation during the period when it turned up with $366,000,000 for which it could not account. This official was working in one of the departments.

Mr. ANDERSON. Wait a minute. The Senator does not want to make the statement on the floor of the Senate that there was a shortage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say that there was a shortage.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator said that they could not find the money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said that they have not found it.

Mr. ANDERSON. They have found it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator should not make that statement. With respect to the entire $366,000,000, the Senator knows that it is a question of war food purchases for which the Army was not able to make allocations. The Army did not know whether it should be charged to lend-lease or to various funds or to the Army or Navy. That is not the fault of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the third time that statement, or a similar statement, has been made on the Senate floor.

I do not mean to say that the Senator from New Mexico may not believe it. I had hoped to keep that part of the discussion out of this debate; but since it has been brought in once again, I shall go into the question of the $366,000,000. I think perhaps I can point out some things which the Senator from New Mexico does not know.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sorry if I dragged in something that I should not have dragged in. I believe that we are to have an investigation of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A Senate committee has been designated to conduct an investigation. On various occasions I have expressed the hope that we could keep the discussion of this question off the floor of the Senate; but I will not permit to go unchallenged statements in the RECORD time and again that there is nothing wrong so far as the $366,000,000 is concerned, for which there is no accounting.

The explanation of the Senator from New Mexico is not correct. He may think it is, but it is not correct. Conceivably, when the investigation is over we might find where it has all gone; but by stretching our imagination the other way, conceivably we might find that it represents a great shortage. It depends upon how one wishes to stretch his imagination. I do say that there are plenty of irregularities in the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Since the question has been brought up, and since Mr. Brannan saw fit to insert in the RECORD immediately prior to the passage of S. 900 a letter which was a complete contradiction of what I had previously said, I shall later go into the discussion of that question and clarify the RECORD.

At this particular time, with further reference to the individual whom Mr. Hancock said he could not fire, I point out that charges had been placed against that man, who had a prior criminal record. Charges were placed against him in one instance for accepting a bribe. He was investigated by the FBI. We may assume that those charges were unfounded since I have no record now showing otherwise, but it is interesting to note that he received an increase in salary of approximately $900 within 3 months after the charges were filed.

Charges were placed against this particular individual that he was padding his expense accounts. He was investigated by the FBI. He pleaded guilty. He could have been fired. He was allowed to make a little repayment to the Government. Then he was given another promotion of $900, and placed in a more responsible position than he had ever held before.

His background, prior to being hired by the Department of Agriculture, shows that he had been convicted in the State of Massachusetts for embezzlement from one of the banks to the extent of $133,000. He was convicted and served time. He was working in the Department of Agriculture, and received one promotion after another. I have his entire record before me. I insist he could have been fired, under the civil-service rules.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Is that man now in the Department?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; he left when the investigation by the House committee began. There seems to be quite a contradiction——

Mr. AIKEN. Can the Senator tell us about when that occurred?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the information here in the file: It occurred on May 1, 1945, although on February 23, 1945, Mr. Hancock, the President of the Commodity Credit Corporation, testified that he could not then fire the man. He left on May 1, 1945. His civil-service record gives him a clean slate.

Yet, if we check further on the case, we find that charges were placed against him. He started with a salary of $2,600, and then it was increased to $2,800, and then gradually increased to $4,600 and then to $6,500. He resigned on May 1, 1945, during the time when the charges which I have outlined were placed against him. There seems to be quite a contradiction as to whether he left under fire or not.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Was that man an employee of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, at one period of time.

Mr. KEM. And the Commodity Credit Corporation is the organization we are dealing with now; is it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. KEM. And it is as to the Commodity Credit Corporation that we are asked to refrain from doing even so much as requiring Senate confirmation of its board of directors?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; we are asked to refrain from requiring Senate confirmation of its board of directors.

As I understand the civil-service regulations, anyone who pleads guilty to padding his expense account surely could be subject to prompt dismissal.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, if we were to change the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation in the way the Senator from Delaware desires to have it changed, so as to provide for a board of directors to be confirmed by the Senate, would the Senator from Delaware still contend that the board of directors of the Corporation could fire a man who had civil-service status?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely, if that man were found guilty of padding his expense account.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does not the Senator from Delaware think he would have to be referred to the Civil Service Commission, for investigation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course; but the records of the Civil Service Commission as to the man I have been discussing state that he resigned in good status, and thus is eligible for reinstatement at any time.

Why should that man have such a clear or clean record—a man formerly convicted of embezzlement, and who is guilty of doing such things during his Government service? As the Senator from North Dakota has pointed out, if a GI steals $3 or $4, he goes to jail. However, this man received a promotion and a salary increase of $900 after the investigation was conducted and after he had pled guilty to padding his expense account, and had returned a few dollars to the Treasury.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Delaware regard an incident of that kind as a very proper subject of inquiry by an outside director, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is unfair to the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, to give them no power in that respect.

Mr. KEM. Is not that exactly a case in which an outside director, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, is required; and in such a case is it not necessary and proper for such an outside director to interest himself in the matter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

As an indication of how fast the personnel in that group were changed, let me point out that on January 1, 1945, Frank Hancock was President of the Commodity Credit Corporation. He resigned on August 20, 1945, or was removed—we do not know just how the change was made. At any rate, J. B. Hutson replaced him on August 20, 1945.

On August 7, 1946, B. H. Shields took his place.

On February 9, 1947, J. B. Gilmer took his place.

On April 13, 1948, Ralph S. Trigg, who apparently has now been appointed by the President, took his place. Of course, I assume that Mr. Trigg's appointment would be confirmed by the Senate if the President submitted his name to the Senate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I merely wish to state that Mr. Hancock left by resignation, having continued in that position for several months after he desired to leave. He was asked to continue because changes were being made in that organization. Mr. Hutson left, to join the United Nations organization at a salary double the salary he received while with the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. Shields left the Commodity Credit Corporation to join the United States Beet Sugar Association, at a salary four times that which he received while serving with the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. Gilmer left the Commodity Credit Corporation to go into private employment at a salary several times that which he received while serving with the Commodity Credit Corporation.

So perhaps the remedy for such rapid changes in personnel, and the step to take because of the desire to keep such persons in the service of the Corporation on a permanent basis, is to pay them sufficient money to justify their carrying the type of responsibility which they are required to carry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps so; but I have talked to several of those men, and they have said they would never agree to serve on a board of directors when they were held responsible to a certain extent for what was done, but were given no authority to carry on the program.

I say it is ridiculous to ask a man to administer the affairs of a $5,000,000,000 corporation, but to provide that he shall serve in that position without any authority.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. If the House version of this measure is enacted, the Directors will be nothing more than advisory; will they?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; they will only have the powers of an advisory board.

Mr. FERGUSON. And under the act, their responsibilities would be only advisory; is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Of course, a man who serves in only an advisory capacity does not accept the real responsibility which has to be accepted by men who receive four times as much salary because they actually perform certain services and accept certain responsibilities—for instance, such men as the ones who were mentioned a few moments ago. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is an exceedingly strange way to create a board of directors—to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to select them to serve at his pleasure. I wonder what line of unique reasoning is used in the defense of that measure by its supporters.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from South Dakota has heard the arguments which have been made on this floor. Frankly, I do not think any good argument has been offered as to why the board of directors should be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture and should serve at his pleasure only. I have not heard anyone point out how the Commodity Credit Corporation has been hindered in any manner during 12 months during which it has operated under the necessity of having Senate confirmation——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a question, let me point out that he just said "12 years." They have been working less than 12 months under the requirement of Senate confirmation. Before that, they always were without the requirement of Senate confirmation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I certainly knew that it was only last June that the law requiring Senate confirmation was passed. I meant to say 12 months. I have already pointed out or referred to the seven presidents of the Corporation who served during the period when they were appointed at random by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. The Senator has followed the debate very closely. Let me inquire whether any argument has been advanced in regard to the anomalous suggestion that the Senate should be authorized to confirm the members of the advisory board, but should be denied any right to pass on the members of the board of directors.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no argument at all for it, and the only reason in the world why they are making the advisory board, which has no power, subject to confirmation by the Senate—which is nothing but a farce—is, I think, that since the Senate was insisting on confirmation, so they said, "You can confirm five advisers, who will meet every 90 days to give the Secretary a little advice." It is the most ridiculous suggestion I have ever heard of since I have been in the Senate. I say, either come out above-board and say we are going to turn the Corporation over to the Secretary of Agriculture, giving him all the responsibility, or else confirm the board of directors, and give them responsibility for it.

Mr. President, I had hoped to get through with this discussion sooner, but since the amount of the $366,000,000 has been brought up again today and since the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, saw fit to have inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Oklahoma a letter denying any responsibility, I think in fairness to the RECORD and to the Senate we have got to discuss this question further at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to have a little light on that. I was going to ask the Senator, Does he know whether the amount is $366,000,000 or $360,000,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To be exact, it is $366,643,129, for which there has been no accounting. As the Senator from New Mexico has pointed out, I am not saying it is short; I merely say that it has not been accounted for. I say that the taxpayers are entitled to an explanation. I think the Senator from New Mexico will agree with me that we should find out where the money went.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand the Senator says he has no personal knowledge that the money is missing; all the Senator knows is that it has not been accounted for. Will the Senator state for what length of time it has not been accounted for? Then, if he will, I should like the Senator to give us some enlightenment as to what has been done by the Commodity Credit Corporation to account for the money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. First, I should like to clarify one part of the Senator's question, in which he suggested that I had no knowledge of anything wrong. At this time I do not say that I do or do not. We shall leave that part out. But now, let me say this——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I ask if he has knowledge that there is something wrong, and can he state it on the floor of the Senate? I think Senators are entitled to an answer to that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have some information that I do not care to discuss on the floor of the Senate at this time. I prefer to work with the investigating committee at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is that because the Senator wants to make further checks and to ascertain further facts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I think the committee will get further information.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I state for the record that there was reason for my having come on the floor of the Senate at the very beginning, requesting the books of the Corporation. I further say without any hesitation that in my opinion there are irregularities in the records of the Corporation covering the period from 1943 to 1945.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan had reason to believe that the Senator felt there was something wrong in respect to the situation, of which at least the Senate should be advised, before the Senator ever came upon the floor to state the facts to the Senate. I think the Senator has competently displayed to the Senate that there is a reason for having an independent board of directors who can act with authority and independence, over and above the Secretary of Agriculture, so that if something does happen, such as the thing the Senator from Delaware is pointing out, there will be independence in seeking out the facts for the benefit of the public and for the purpose of prosecution, if a wrong has been committed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct. But I should like to say, in all fairness to the Corporation, that while I, for one, severely criticized it for its operations in the period from 1943 to 1945, and that there are examples of operations which are inexcusable, notwithstanding the fact that we were in the midst of war, I may say, not because the Senator from New Mexico is on the floor, that the General Accounting Office advised me that, particularly following the Senator's assumption of the duties of Secretary of Agriculture, there was a complete overhauling of the Department, and substantial steps have been made to correct the situation which I am criticizing. Whatever I say regarding the Corporation, I wish it understood that it in no way casts any reflection upon the Senator from New Mexico, the former Secretary of Agriculture.

I say that, and at the same time I want to emphasize that it is inexcusable that the books had not been delivered to the Senate earlier and we were not made aware of the fact that the books were in such a deplorable state for the years 1943 and 1945. I also point out the fact that even today we, as Members of the Senate, do not have access to, and have never received, the books audited by the General Accounting Office for the years 1946, 1947, nor 1948. Yet the law plainly states that the audit of those books should be submitted to the Congress as of January 15 following the end of each fiscal year. The reason they have not been submitted to us is, as the General Accounting Office says, that their records are in such a deplorable state of affairs that they have been utterly unable to reconcile the accounts with any degree of accuracy. Even during some of these later years, they are going to have to make allowances. Nevertheless, the GAO says that during the past 12 months the Corporation's affairs have been conducted in the best manner in which they have ever been conducted in the history of its operation; which is attributed to the fact that under the present law the directors are subject to Senate confirmation and have adequate authority to operate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. I appreciate very much what the Senator from Delaware has said about an attempt to improve the conditions after June 30, 1945. But I may say to him that I am quite willing there should be an investigation of the $366,000,000. I tried very hard to get the audit completed on that amount of money. It was not the wish of the Commodity Credit Corporation that there should not be a final audit. It was the recommendation of the General Accounting Office that it would cost a quarter of a million dollars, and that no useful purpose would be served, because it would involve bookkeeping between departments of the Federal Government. It was on that basis that the audit was not made. It would satisfy me, if they wanted to go ahead, to have the audit completed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The recommendations of the General Accounting Office had reference to transactions between the different departments of the Government, and to that extent I agree with them. But I am speaking of the irregular transactions which took place with private traders and private operators. The Senator from New Mexico, I think, will not dispute the fact that, regarding the period in question, there is a great deal of evidence that the Corporation sold surplus agricultural commodities to different buyers. They sold it to them, and if the buyer came back and said, "I received but half the amount," they would accept the man's word for it, for the sole reason that they knew they had no records at all to prove whether he was right or wrong.

I do not think it will be disputed that sales were made in an inexcusably loose manner.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Do I correctly understand that the $366,000,000 was not solely a matter of dealings between different branches of the Government, but that a part of it was involved in dealings with private individuals and corporations?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Positively, that is correct. It was not alone a matter of dealings with the agencies.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see the Senator from New Mexico rises, apparently indicating that he wants to speak. If the Senator wishes to correct me, now is the time. The $366,000,000 did not represent interdepartmental transactions only.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator tell the Senate how much of it did?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot tell. The General Accounting Office is doing its best to make an estimate. To my knowledge, they have not as yet made a definite estimate.

Mr. FERGUSON. How long have they been endeavoring to fathom the situation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Four years. On the surface my first impression was to criticize severely the General Accounting Office for not reporting sooner, but I want to point out to the Senator from Michigan that I am making quite a study, not only of this Corporation, but of all the other corporations. This is not the only corporation which is in a deplorable state of affairs in regard to bookkeeping.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am familiar with that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The General Accounting Office was asked by Congress to go in and audit the Corporation, sometime at the end of 1945. I think the Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from Nebraska, and the Senator from Virginia were cosponsors of the bill, if I remember correctly.

Mr. BUTLER. The act was signed in early December 1945.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The result of that act was that the General Accounting Office was called upon to audit all Government corporations and submit a report to the Congress. They found the corporations' records were in such a deplorable state of affairs that they have never been able to bring them up to date. There are several other corporations which I intend later to discuss which involve vast amounts of money for which no accounting can be made.

Even though assuming we conduct the investigation which the Senate has authorized, and find there is nothing wrong, I think we owe it to the taxpayers to clear up the situation and to say, flatly, that there is or is not anything wrong in connection with the $366,000,000. I insist on such an investigation so that the taxpayers would know the facts.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Delaware that such an investigation be made. I was not satisfied when I was told that these were only transactions between departments. I do not think it has very much to do with the way the Commodity Credit Corporation has been operated to the present time. I hope the Senator's investigation reveals the facts. It is of no immediate concern to me, because it reflects a period prior to the time I became Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not necessarily my investigation. The resolution has been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, and that committee has unanimously approved an investigation.

I had hoped we could keep the whole subject from the floor of the Senate, but it has been brought up at different times. I am receiving a great deal of correspondence on the subject. I received a great deal of it following the passage of the other bill from persons wanting to know why, if as claimed by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, there was nothing wrong with the expenditure of the $366,000,000, why should we investigate the question?

I shall now read a letter which was inserted in the RECORD without any Senator, except the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], knowing its contents. It is addressed to Representative BRENT SPENCE, dated April 5, 1949, and signed by the Secretary of Agriculture:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1949.

Hon. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPENCE: This refers to the $366,000,000 of receivables on the books of the Commodity Credit Corporation as of June 30, 1945, discussed in the General Accounting Office audit report on the CCC recently submitted to the Congress and to which attention has been again recently directed by Senator WILLIAMS of Delaware.

These wartime operations were the subject of an extensive investigation by a House committee under the leadership of Judge Tarver. The then War Food Administrator Marvin Jones, laid all pertinent facts concerning these transactions before the committee. All questions of fraud or loss to the Government were fully explored and the committee fully satisfied that there was no evidence of either.

I repeat the last sentence as written by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Member of Congress. Apparently the letter was inserted in the RECORD at the Secretary's request:

All questions of fraud or loss to the Government were fully explored and the committee fully satisfied that there was no evidence of either.

If there was any truth in that statement, it was the duty of the Secretary to put the letter into the RECORD. If there was no truth in it—and I shall prove, before I sit down, that there was no truth in it—the Secretary had no right to put an incorrect statement in the RECORD to influence Congress on legislation.

He is quoting Judge Tarver, as apparently being well satisfied with everything which had transpired in the Department of Agriculture. Judge Tarver, in 1945, was on the House Committee of Appropriations which was, under House Resolution 50, conducting an investigation of the WFA. The conclusions in the report signed by Judge Tarver, dated June 27, 1945, are referring to the same thing. The report of Judge Tarver's committee was a unanimous report, so far as I know. The committee was a Democratic-controlled committee. This committee not only was not satisfied with what was going on in the Corporation, but it urged a further investigation of the Corporation, and pointed out the fact that the General Accounting Office was auditing the books. The report stated that as soon as the audits were submitted to Congress, Congress should pay particular attention to their findings as to whether there was anything wrong. That was June 30, 1945. The General Accounting Office went in on December 19, 1945, and audited the books. That Office did not submit a report until after a resolution was presented on the floor of the Senate on the 25th day of March, this year. As a result of the investigation, the General Accounting Office said there was $366,000,000 which could not be accounted for, and, in the same report, it said the whole problem was worthy of a further study by a congressional committee.

So, Mr. President, when the Secretary claims that it is all cleared up, either he does not know what he is talking about—and he should know—or else he is deliberately trying to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Has the Senator asked the Secretary if he has in his files a letter from Judge Tarver, on the completion of the general audit, stating that the committee was satisfied as to the matter to which the Senator refers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order that we may get that straight, I shall read Judge Tarver's report——

Mr. ANDERSON. That is not the most recent statement on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall read the same report to which the Senator is referring.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sorry. I am not trying to stop the Senator, but I merely wanted to say that the matter contained in that report and the item of $366,000,000 are not the same items.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is correct in that; they are not the same items. The report refers to the investigation conducted by the House committee. The item of $366,000,000 was reported as the result of the investigation conducted by the General Accounting Office at the suggestion of the House committee of which Judge Tarver was a member. They are referring to two different situations; but that makes it worse, for they found them both out of line.

I shall read Judge Tarver's report to which the Secretary of Agriculture referred when he claimed it completely exonerated the department and that the committee was satisfied. After reading this report, the Senate can judge for itself whether either Judge Tarver or the committee was satisfied.

I read from page 6 of Judge Tarver's report:

> It has definitely been brought out during this investigation and hearings that there has been no reconciliation of the inventories submitted monthly by the various warehouses with records of the WFA and that storage and service charges are being paid solely upon the word of the warehouseman that such storage and service charges are due and accurate without checking against any storage records of the WFA.

I might say that each time we refer to the War Food Administration, we are in reality referring to the Commodity Credit Corporation, because it was operated under that name during the war.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under a Presidential directive, the duties were transferred to the Commodity Credit Corporation during the war; and no matter what we call it, it is still spending taxpayers' money.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall yield in order that the Senator may make any statement he desires to make.

Mr. ANDERSON. The War Food Administration and the Commodity Credit Corporation were not one and the same thing. The Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture are not one and the same thing. They have never been. I think the Senator should check that statement carefully.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not correct. The $366,000,000 I referred to as being unaccounted for, and which the General Accounting Office referred to as receivables for which there was no accounting, are receivables in the Commodity Credit Corporation at the time it was operating under the name of the War Food Administration. That is a fact. When the General Accounting Office used the name "Commodity Credit Corporation" they were referring to the same corporation to which Judge Tarver was referring, and when Secretary Brannan wrote this letter he, too, was referring to the same corporation.

I shall go back and reread this from the beginning:

> It has definitely been brought out during this investigation and hearings that there has been no reconciliation of the inventories submitted monthly by the various warehouses with records of the War Food Administration and that storage and service charges are being paid solely upon the word of the warehouseman that such storage and service charges are due and accurate without checking against any storage records of the War Food Administration. It has been obvious that the lack of such procedure is primarily due to the knowledge of the officials of the War Food Administration that they had no records which were of sufficient accuracy to make such checks.

That does not say anything about transfers between interdepartmental agencies. This refers to transactions with private industry, and it says they were carrying out their transactions on the sole word of the men in industry themselves because the Department had no records with which they could check. Continuing the report:

> It appears with respect to the sale of commodities to individuals and corporations that in some instances final settlement for the transaction is based upon the quantities which the purchaser states that he has received. Instances have been brought to the attention of the committee where the amount stated by the purchaser disagrees with the amounts reflected by the inventory records of the War Food Administration and final settlement has been made based upon the quantities reported by the purchaser. Obviously such a condition makes it possible for unscrupulous operators in surplus commodities to defraud the Government and action should be taken to correct this situation.

I read from page 2 of the report:

> Many errors of judgment and administration necesssarily occurred. It is not the opinion of the committee that all such errors justify unmitigated condemnation. We feel, on the contrary, that many of them were unavoidable. At the same time we are of the opinion that inefficiency and dereliction in duty have occurred on the part of some of the officials and employees of the War Food Administration and that such derelictions are clearly indicated by the record of the hearings.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator read the title of the report to see if it is an investigation of the War Food Administration or the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The title of the report is "Investigation of the War Food Administration Under House Resolution 50." But it is the same report to which Secretary Brannan referred in the letter which he had inserted in the RECORD, and I shall reread the statement as contained in his letter:

> These wartime operations were the subject of an exhaustive invesigation by the House committee under the leadership of Judge Tarver. The then War Food Administrator, Marvin Jones, laid all pertinent facts concerning these transactions before the committee. All questions of fraud or loss to the Government were fully explored, and the committee fully satisfied there was no evidence of either.

Secretary Brannan was referring to this, and nothing else.

Mr. ANDERSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. He was not referring to that report. The report the Senator has in his hand is a report prepared by the committee with reference to the investigation of the War Food Administration, and the study which was made by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, of which I still have a copy, was made with reference to the officials of the War Food Administration, not the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly it was, but the Senator from New Mexico did not pay attention when I read this.

Mr. ANDERSON. I did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Secretary Brannan also is referring to the War Food Administration in his letter. We are both referring to the War Food Administration for the period between 1943 and 1945. This is the Secretary's letter which is inserted in the RECORD. He did not say the Commodity Credit Corporation. He said the War Food Administration.

Mr. ANDERSON. I very respectfully suggest to the Senator that what he said was that Marvin Jones, the War Food Administrator, laid facts with reference to the Commodity Credit Corporation before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct, and I am going to show the facts Marvin Jones laid before them. Also in this report, which I shall read, the committee points out that Marvin Jones testified before the committee, but they said they did not accept his testimony as accurate; they merely allowed him to file it, because he was the Administrator, and they themselves said it should not be accepted as having any degree of accuracy. I will read that statement when I get to it. I shall refer to the same report. If there is another report, let us have it produced.

Mr. President, I see the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] present. I ask him if he wishes to have the session continued. I think I shall take at least another hour.

Mr. LUCAS. We will proceed. I will say to the Senator from Delaware, another hour, very probably.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no intention of unduly delaying. I do not know what other Senator wishes to speak on this subject. I think there are others. But since this question of the $366,000,000 has been brought up, I wish to finish clearing up the record.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that, and I think the Senator should have all the time he desires. I have no intention at all of rushing the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I continue to read from page 4 of the same report which was referred to by the Secretary of Agriculture, and which report he said exonerated the Administration of any blame. I find this statement:

> The foregoing conclusions are predicated upon actual inspections made by the committee's investigators in 12 warehouses, a study of warehouse inspector's reports covering 9 other plants, and information from other sources indicating that similar conditions obtained in at least 27 more establishments or a total of 48 warehouses. There is a total of approximately 1,500 warehouses storing commodities for the War Food Administration and it is obvious they could not all be scrutinized by the investigatorial staff.
> However, the committee believes the number actually covered comprises a reliable sampling. While we are not justified in assuming that conditions which are subject to criticism or condemnation exist in other branches of the War Food organization which we have not had an opportunity to examine—

I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico pay particular attention to this part of this report, which is Judge Tarver's report, referred to by the Secretary of Agriculture. I continue:

> We believe that a further investigation of them and of the operations of the War Food Administration as a whole is thoroughly justified and desirable. We understand that an investigation is at this time under way under the jurisdiction of the Office of the Comptroller General with reference to stocks in warehouses controlled by the War Food Administration, the results of which should be of considerable value.

I might say that that investigation was the one conducted by the General Accounting Office, and the results of that investigation are the ones contained in the books which were submitted to the Congress on March 30 this year, in which the statement was made that the amount of $366,643,219, recorded as due from sales, could not be justified.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. I suggest that that was not the subject at all of the second investigation. The investigation was completed. It had to do with inventory stock. The record of it is all on file. Following that, a general audit of the corporation was made by the General Accounting Office, and upon that audit was developed the $366,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly, the audit that was conducted as a result of the statement of the committee I have just referred to, which the General Accounting Office made of the books. The audit was begun on December 19, 1945, and was submitted to the Congress this year, and is the one that shows that this amount is short. If the Senator from New Mexico will check with the General Accounting Office, he will find they will support everything I have said, and if he thinks they will not, I am perfectly willing to carry this matter over until tomorrow, and he can check with them, and then we will continue. I have checked this with them, and that is what they have told me, and unless someone produces evidence otherwise then my statement stands.

If Senators will read the books which were submitted on March 30 of this year they will find that they do refer to the same report. Surely you are not claiming there are two corporations operating under one name.

I continue to read from Judge Tarver, in the committee report:

> The records of the War Food Administration are not sufficiently complete and accurate to enable us to determine the extent of loss which has thus occurred, but the evidence submitted justifies the feeling that it has been considerable, probably amounting to many millions of dollars.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Again I shall try to straighten out for the Senator my point of view on this matter. The farmers of the country have a great stake in the Commodity Credit Corporation. They do not want to lose it. I am sorry to hear the Senator tie into the criticism of the Commodity Credit Corporation the criticisms which were made of the War Food Administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator may be sorry to hear it, but the Senator from New Mexico is the one who started this discussion a few minutes ago for the third time it has been raised on the floor of the Senate. I specifically stated on the floor, and I think the Senator will remember it, when we first started this debate, that I did not think such a discussion should be made a part of the debate on the bill. I still feel that way.

Mr. ANDERSON. Why does not the Senator stop it then, and go on with a discussion of the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Secretary of Agriculture insisted on having his letter inserted in the RECORD. It has been referred to two or three times, and this time we are going to get the record straight.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Would the Senator permit me to state, as a Member of the Senate from a great farming State, that the farmers of the country have a great stake in the honest administration of the affairs of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe the Senator from Missouri is right. There is not a Member of the Senate who is more interested than I am in preserving the good name of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but a good name cannot be preserved by covering up a lot of corruption, if it exists. A good name can only be preserved by convincing the people that either the corruption does not exist, or else that the officials of the Corporation are honest enough to clear it up and expose it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator has examined the record respecting the $366,000,000. Does it contain charges of fraud?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The record does not contain charges of fraud, neither does it deny fraud.

Mr. ANDERSON. It does not contain charges of fraud or dishonesty on the part of individual employees?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It makes no charges, nor have I made any.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then are we interested in having an honest administration or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just to keep the record straight let me say that the report to which the Senator refers also does not say that there is no fraud, and I venture to say that the Senator will not get the Comptroller General to say that fraud does not exist. He merely says that there is the sum of $366,000,000 for which there is no accounting and satisfaction. When I first pointed that matter out on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] said it was one of the most damaging charges which had ever been made on the floor of the Senate, and that if he thought there was any truth in it he would be the first to ask for an investigation. Every statement I made on the floor of the Senate on that day was supported by the General Accounting Office. Unfortunately, the Senator from Illinois later became ill, and was not present in the Senate to join me in persuading the Senate to begin the investigation, but I am sure he will join with me in the expression of appreciation that the subcommittee has begun the investigation, and in expressing the hope that it will find the answer.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Democratic Party never shields any wrong, and if the Senator from Delaware can produce facts to support an allegation of dishonesty or fraud I am sure he will find that the subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will go to the bottom of any charge the Senator may make. We will be very glad to do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not misunderstand me. A subcommittee, in which I for one have a great deal of faith, with its investigators and staff, are going to go to the bottom of this matter. I certainly hope the Senator from Illinois does not take the position that because the Democratic Party is in control it is my obligation as a Member of the Senate, having once called the matter to the attention of the Senate, to go into every detail of it and find everything that is wrong and report it to the subcommittee. I say, let the subcommittee find out something for itself.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not expect the Senator to do that; not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall work with them in any way I can, and I have been working with them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want anyone to believe that what the Senator has said is directed against the Democratic Party or the Senator from Illinois. It is my understanding that a subcommittee has been appointed to investigate the matter, and that the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] is chairman of that subcommittee. Knowing the Senator from North Carolina as I do, knowing his reputation for rugged honesty and integrity, and knowing his reputation as Governor of his great State, and knowing the fine things he has done in the Senate of the United States, I am sure the Members of the Senate and the people of the country will be well satisfied when that Senator and his subcommittee, get through with the investigation. I may say to my good friend, the Senator from Delaware, that it seems to me the proper place to carry on the investigation is in the subcommittee, rather than to debate the matter here on the floor of the United States Senate. I doubt very much whether what the Senator has to say here at this particular time——

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEM. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from Illinois was asking me a question, but had not concluded. I shall be happy to answer his question if I can.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I admit that I violated the rule in making an observation on the Senator's time rather than asking a question. If the Senator from Missouri desires to make a point of order against me, it is perfectly all right with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware controls the time. To whom does he yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question in order that I may satisfy my good friend from Missouri?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. Does not the Senator agree with me that it would be much better if the Senator were to go before the subcommittee of which the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] is chairman, and submit the facts and figures he has in his possession, and make the arguments he desires to make, rather than to try the case on the floor of the Senate in connection with the conference report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that I not only agree with him, but I have stated on many occasions that a Senate committee is the place for the investigation to be made. When the bill in connection with the Commodity Credit Corporation first came before the Senate during this session, on two or three occasions questions were asked during the debate about this $366,000,000. I then stated—and if Senators will read the RECORD they will find what I say to be true—that I did not want to go into any discussion of this item.

Mr. President, I have the utmost confidence in the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY]. I think he will conduct his investigation without any thought as to which political party is involved.

I have never made this a charge against any political party. In fact, I have never made any charge on the floor of the Senate that there is anything wrong other than the matter of the $366,000,000, for which there is no accounting. I said we should have an accounting for that money. I think an investigation into that matter should be had. I for one would not feel that it was an investigation that was not worth while, even though the investigating committee later came in and said that every dollar was accounted for. In such an event I would not be disappointed in having requested the investigation. I merely want to know where that money went. I think we are entitled to an explanation. I think the name of the Commodity Credit Corporation can best be restored by the committee investigating it, emphatically stating that there is or that there is not anything wrong and crooked in connection with that money.

So far as debating the subject on the floor of the Senate is concerned, I will say that I had no intention of going into that matter if I could help it. When we started the discussion I stated that I refused to go into any debate on that subject at the time. But just before the passage of the bill, the letter to which I referred, written by the Secretary of Agriculture himself, was inserted in the RECORD, immediately prior to the vote. In my opinion it was highly irregular to have done so. Had the chairman of the committee felt that that matter should enter into the discussion I think it would have been much more proper to have discussed it on the floor, but since the letter was merely inserted in the RECORD, I ignored it and let the matter go, and made the statement the following day that I had not overlooked it, but did not feel that the floor of the Senate was the proper place to discuss the matter.

I did not raise the question here today. It was raised again today and referred to as water over the dam. I am now merely endeavoring to get the record straight. From now on I hope discussion of the matter will take place before the committee, a committee in which I have the utmost confidence.

I might say that all I intend to do now is to bring the record up to date from the point where the matter is already of official record. I am not violating any confidence. I have no intention of violating any confidences or to go into anything which the committee is now in the process of examining.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am in wholehearted agreement with the Senator from Delaware. Let me say again that if there is anything the majority leader can do to help in connection with the investigation, the Senator from Illinois is very glad to do it, because if there are any irregularities in connection with the millions of dollars which are handled by the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Senator from Illinios is just as anxious to find out about them as is any other Senator.

The only reason I made my previous statement in connection with the debate with the Senator from Delaware was that I thought, from reading the report, the House committee had thoroughly investigated this subject upon another occasion, and I was under the impression that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry went thoroughly into the controversy. Perhaps neither committee went far enough. I am very happy that another committee is going into the subject. I hope it will plumb to the bottom, and that this controversy can be settled once and for all, to the satisfaction of all Members of the Senate concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can readily understand how the Senator from Illinois has the impression that the House committee fully explored this question and was satisfied. The Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter which was inserted in the RECORD, made such a statement, when referring to the investigation which was conducted by the House committee, from whose report I have been reading——

Mr. LUCAS. I am familiar with the letter. It was sent to the Senator from Illinois at one time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Secretary of Agriculture made the statement that all questions of fraud or loss to the Government had been fully explored and that the committee was fully satisfied that there was no evidence of fraud.

The committee was not fully satisfied. If the statements which I am reading into the RECORD are statements indicating satisfaction on the part of the committee, and if this is what the Secretary of Agriculture describes as a favorable report, I should be most interested in seeing something which he would describe as an unfavorable report.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I have been trying for about half an hour to get the Senator to yield to me. A while ago the Senator made the statement that North Dakota was always asking for some kind of assistance and relief. Can the Senator tell me the last time North Dakota asked for anything along that line?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The last time to my knowledge was when the Senator from North Dakota started the so-called threat of a filibuster unless he got $25,000,000. He settled for $12,500,000, part of which went to the State of North Dakota. That question was settled on the floor of the Senate one evening. That was one of the noticeable occasions when a deal was made on the floor of the Senate; and I must say that it was the highest-priced speech I have ever heard. I congratulate the Senator from North Dakota. To my knowledge he is the only man ever to make a $12,500,000 speech on the floor of the Senate. He required not more than 30 minutes.

Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into an argument at this time with the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Do not the farmers in Delaware use modern toilets?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We do not use $12,500,000 toilets.

Mr. LANGER. Do they not use modern toilets?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Delaware has never been able to make a $12,500,000 speech on the floor of the Senate. I congratulate the Senator from North Dakota on his ability to finagle the other side into giving him $12,500,000 to shut up. So far they have never offered me anything to shut up. They will not even offer me anything to speak.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, continuing further in the Tarver report, I find the following statement on page 7:

> An examination of the hearings will reflect that practically all of the officials who were questioned admitted that the inventory records of the WFA were inaccurate.

A subsequent paragraph concludes with this statement:

> It naturally follows that inasmuch as the inventory records are admittedly inaccurate, and financial statements prepared which include inventory transactions are themselves inaccurate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Again I ask the Senator whether that refers to the War Food Administration or the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It refers to the War Food Administration, which was operating the Commodity Credit Corporation under a Presidential directive during the period from 1943 to 1945. They are one and the same Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. I merely wish to state for the RECORD again that they are not one and the same Corporation. The records, when they are finally produced, will show that they are not one and the same Corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dislike very much to disagree with the Senator from New Mexico, but they are the same Corporation. At the time the Presidential directive was issued in 1943, it stated that until further notice the Commodity Credit Corporation would operate as the War Food Administration. I will get the exact dates within which it so operated. I will get the date and the number of the Presidential directive, and will insert them in the RECORD.

In order that the RECORD may be complete—I do not know that I will have the information tonight—I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to insert in the RECORD at this point the number and the date of the Presidential directive to which I am referring.

The Executive order referred to above is No. 9334, dated April 19, 1943, under which the Corporation was consolidated into the War Food Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. In order that we may understand the mechanics of the conference report, I ask the Chair if it is not a fact that the pending question is on agreeing to the conference report, and that the only action that can be taken is to agree to the conference report or to reject it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. So if a Senator is opposed to the conference report he will vote "nay"; and a motion to do anything other than that at this time would be out of order, would it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know what type of motion the Senator refers to.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there any other motion that can be made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to recommit the bill to the conferees would not be in order, because the House has agreed to the conference report and has discharged its conferees.

Mr. WHERRY. Therefore, is not my observation correct—that the only procedure now is to agree to the conference report or to reject it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Then if other motions are desired, they can be made after that question has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, continuing on page 8 of the same report, we find this statement. I am quoting from the report which was published by Judge Tarver, and to which Secretary Brannan referred in his letter of April 5, which was inserted in the RECORD immediately prior to the vote on S. 900. I repeat, the WFA referred to herein is the same as the CCC:

> After due consideration and study of all of the facts developed with regard to the inventory records and financial statements contained in the hearings and in the reports of the committee's investigators, the committee can arrive at only one conclusion, and that is that any report submitted by the WFA based upon the inventory records and financial records will be inaccurate and will fail to properly reflect the true condition.

I call particular attention to this following statement, because it has been repeatedly said that Marvin Jones, Administrator of the War Food Administration, appeared before the committee and cleared up all doubt as to any existing irregularities. Secretary Brannan emphasized that point when he said that—

> The then War Food Administrator, Marvin Jones, laid all pertinent facts concerning these transactions before the committee. All questions of fraud or loss to the Government were fully explored, and the committee was fully satisfied that there was no evidence of either.

But here is what Judge Tarver said on that occasion:

> The statement by Mr. Lee Marshall, dated January 16, 1945, inserted in the hearings by Hon. Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, reports the theoretical condition and not the actual condition as found during this inquiry. While the statement has been permitted by the committee to be placed in the hearings, it is felt that the contentions therein made as to correction of conditions are not supported in their entirety by the evidence which has been adduced and that further efforts looking toward their immediate correction are imperatively demanded.

In other words, the committee accepted the statement, but at the same time stated in the report that the contentions were inaccurate, and were allowed to be filed only by courtesy.

I read further from the Tarver report:

> A very serious situation has been brought to light during this investigation with respect to erroneous information having been furnished to committees of Congress purportedly outlining certain conditions in the WFA with particular respect to losses and movements of commodities.

Even then, Mr. President, they were having trouble with members of the executive branch who appeared before the House committee and gave it erroneous information.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Again I wish to ask the Senator whether he has ever questioned the Department of Agriculture or the House committee as to whether, subsequent to the date to which the Senator has referred, it made an investigation and expressed itself as satisfied. I refer to that matter because the report was made to me, and it could not possibly have been made to me in May of 1945.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know of the report to which the Senator from New Mexico is referring. It had no reference to that matter, any more than this report has reference to the report of the General Accounting Office. Of course, I do not say that the Secretary cannot find letters in which it is stated that nothing was wrong. The Senator from Illinois inserted a series of letters, one day, every one of which specifically states that nothing was wrong with the Department of Agriculture. Interestingly enough, every one of those letters, which exonerate the Department of Agriculture, was written and signed by members of the Department of Agriculture itself.

Mr. ANDERSON. I refer to the House committee——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator to wait just a minute, please. The General Accounting Office have written letters in which they state that they do not believe it would pay to go into the details and check the transfers as between the various Government agencies, since no money would be recovered, and since it was more or less a matter of bad bookkeeping.

But so far as the records of transactions with private operators are concerned, we have a right to know how those transactions were conducted. A procedure by which transactions, sales, and settlements were made on the sole word of the buyer is highly irregular and should not be allowed to occur. Even assuming that everyone in the United States is honest, we still do not permit Government business to be done in that way—by telling a man to go into a Government warehouse and load up his trucks with all of a certain commodity that he wishes to have, and then tell the Government agency what he thinks the amount he has taken is worth, and make settlement on that basis. We do not permit Government business to be done in that way.

Mr. ANDERSON. I agree; but I think the Senator from Delaware has missed my point.

In Secretary Brannan's letter there is a statement that a House committee investigated this matter and expressed itself as fully satisfied.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. That is what Secretary Brannan said, but I am now reading the report itself which completely denies his statement.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now the Senator from Delaware is reading from a document which has no reference whatever to that matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The record will speak for itself. Later I shall insert the entire report.

If the Senator from New Mexico—and let me state that I have a great deal of respect for his opinions, but I wish to complete my remarks, for I have been speaking too long now——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the document from which the Senator from Delaware is reading is not the one to which Secretary Brannan referred. It will be a very simple matter for the Senator from Delaware to get the document referred to and read what it states as to the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from New Mexico has other reports he should produce them.

I will later ask unanimous consent to have this document inserted in its entirety in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that all Senators may read it. Then Senators can draw their own conclusions as to whether the same document is referred to, inasmuch as Secretary Brannan specifically referred to Marvin Jones, the War Food Administrator, and his appearance before the committee.

Mr. President, in this document the charge is made that when the members of the Corporation appeared before the committee in 1945, they supplied it with erroneous information; and the further statement is made that the committee did not have any confidence in those statements.

I read further:

> Congress has every right to expect that representatives of the executive agencies will furnish accurate information upon request; and in the event it is not possible for the executive agencies to furnish accurate information as requested, Congress should certainly expect that officials of such agencies would so advise.

Continuing further, I read from page 9:

> During the hearings held by this committee in connection with the 1946 appropriation a request was made for a statement of losses which was furnished in accordance with the testimony of Colonel Olmstead.

He was Vice President of the Corporation.

I read further:

> An examination of the hearings will definitely reflect that this statement of losses is completely inaccurate and was known to be inaccurate at the time it was submitted to this committee.

So the committee was accusing the Vice President of the Corporation, appearing before the committee, of submitting information which was inaccurate, and which he knew was inaccurate at the time when he submitted it.

Yet the Secretary of Agriculture claims the committee was finding no fault with the Corporation, but found that everything was in order, in line with proper procedure.

I read further from the report:

> It should not be necessary for this committee or any other committee to remind officials of the executive agencies that Congress has a right to expect accurate information on request.
> Only a few years ago this committee developed, upon an investigation, that a responsible official of one of the agencies had, in the language of the Secretary, "invented a scheme designed to thwart the submission of complete information that had been requested" by the committee, and for so doing was subsequently removed from office by the Secretary.

Later in the report the committee said:

> Col. Ralph W. Olmstead—
> Who was Vice President of the Corporation—
> has been a predominating factor in the War Food Administration, particularly with respect to the purchase, distribution, and storage of food. This is not to say that others in the organization were without responsibility, but obviously Colonel Olmstead's position in the broad food-handling picture is such as to preclude the dodging of responsibility by laying the blame on a lesser official under his jurisdiction.

I may say that Colonel Olmstead for some time past has been working with the Government of China, in handling the distribution of our food supplies. He made such a deplorable record in handling these matters in the Commodity Credit Corporation, and was censured to so great an extent by the committee, that now he is rewarded by being permitted to handle the food supplies which we send to China.

The Senator from New Mexico has emphasized that all these irregularities were in connection with transactions between Government agencies, but here is one which clearly was not between Government agencies. The committee called attention to it, saying:

> Dried egg albumen sale: One of the transactions handled by the officials of the WFA brought out during the hearings concerns the sale of dried egg albumen. The basic facts of the transaction are that 80,000 pounds of dried egg albumen were sold by the WFA to George Ehlenberger & Co., of New York City, for ultimate disposition to a Swiss firm at $1.30 per pound, at a time that the WFA had no surplus of dried egg albumen on hand and in order to fulfill the sales contract would have to purchase in the open market at from $1.70 to $1.85 per pound.

In other words, it had no inventory on hand, to speak of, and had to go out in the open market and purchase the commodity, in order to deliver it under the contract; and it paid a price of between $1.70 and $1.85 a pound for it.

I may say that was being done in the name of the farmers, and the impression is sought to be given that this Corporation operates and loses money in its transactions and operations for the benefit of the farmers. But I fail to see how they are benefiting any farmer, or benefiting anybody except the exporter, when they sell short an agricultural commodity which they do not own, which they have to go out in the open market to buy, in order to deliver on the contract. I might say I have been very much interested to note that there was no prosecution in the case. Evidently they decided that it was all right. If there was any prosecution that the Senator from New Mexico knows about, I wish he would correct me. But I have been advised there was not.

Mr. ANDERSON. I know of no prosecution, because the Commodity Credit Corporation in many of those transactions was acting as agent of the Military Establishment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Corporation was not acting as agent of the Military Establishment in this particular transaction. It is definitely pointed out in the report, on page 10, that it was a sale to a private corporation, George Ehlenberger & Co., of New York City, for ultimate disposition to a Swiss firm, at $1.30 a pound. In the open market it would have cost $1.70 to $1.85 a pound.

Mr. ANDERSON. Was that desiccated eggs?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was dried egg albumen, with respect to which they had no inventory on hand.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is the same as desiccated eggs. I know about the Ehlenberger transactions, because it came to my attention. I know there was some investigation made, followed by certain recommendations. I cannot state what the recommendations were.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was a short sale. It was highly irregular for the Commodity Credit Corporation. There was no provision in the law, and it certainly was not the intention of Congress, that it should go out and sell short, for the sole purpose of enabling a foreign purchaser to make extra profit. They went into the open market. They did not have any inventory on hand. If they had had adequate inventory records, somebody would have known what they had on hand, but they had no way of knowing what they had on hand, because they had no control over their inventories. I have read that case through from one end to the other. Those are the facts of the case. Whether the laws had been violated or not I am unable to say. I am not an authority.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator recall whether the Department of Agriculture recommended prosecution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether it ever recommended it or not. I do know the transaction took place.

Mr. KEM. To sum up the transaction, would the Senator from Delaware state the sales price of the dried egg albumen?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was sold at $1.30 a pound at a time when they did not have any inventory on hand, yet it was sold as a surplus commodity.

Mr. KEM. What price was being paid on the open market?

Mr. WILLIAMS. From $1.70 to $1.85 a pound which they paid in order to fulfill the contract.

Mr. KEM. What was the loss to the taxpayers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not figured it out, but it would be about 45 cents a pound on 89,600 pounds. Clearly it was not an interdepartmental transaction.

On page 11 Judge Tarver, speaking for the committee, made this statement:

> Members of this committee have a definite feeling and belief that the personnel policies of the War Food Administration have been very lax. In two instances during this investigation the committee has been advised that individuals with prior criminal records have been placed in positions of responsibility, have been recommended from time to time for promotion, even though in addition to their criminal records they have been the subject of inquiry for violation of Department of Agriculture regulations.

We discussed two instances a little while ago in the debate, in which men known to have criminal records were hired. They were promoted constantly, time after time, and placed in positions of high responsibility. To my knowledge, two former convicted embezzlers, against both of whom charges were placed, were employed in the Department. Then, when the General Accounting Office comes along, and says, "Here is $366,000,000 representing transactions which cannot be accounted for," I say, by all means, we have got to have an accounting; these men may not be guilty of taking any of this money, but the mere fact that, in some instances, they were guilty of irregularities and admitted their guilt, is evidence enough to warrant an investigation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether these men are still employed by the Corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are not now employed, to my knowledge. One of them definitely is not employed. I have not been advised definitely on the other, but I think both are out of the employment of the Government.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator know why they left the employment of the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The one with whom I am familiar left on May 1, 1945.

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I mean the reason. Does the Senator know the reason?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Civil Service Commission files show that he left voluntarily, and, according to the files, he has a perfectly clean record, as clean as any other civil-service employee. The FBI files are not quite that clean. There is quite a conflict in the testimony on the part of the top officials of the Government. One man says he was fired, another says he was asked to resign, and a third man said, "None of that is true; he resigned of his own accord." I do not know. He left on May 1.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the Senator would favor me by giving me privately the name of the third man, I would like to have it, because I think the gentleman was not in the situation the Senator suggests. The whole difficulty arose over the fact that the Civil Service Commission made its investigation, the man filled out a form, showing where he had been employed over a long period of time. This occurred well before I came into the Department, but he showed where he had been employed. He showed a perfectly good record. The Civil Service Commission investigated him and certified him, and the Department was required to take one of the three men. They took that man on the basis of the civil-service recommendation. I cannot possibly see how that is a reflection upon the Commodity Credit Corporation, when he was not an employee of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am only carrying through the reflection which was cast by the committee headed by Judge Tarver itself, which Secretary Brannan said cleared them of all responsibility.

Mr. ANDERSON. That was the investigation by the War Food Administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and the War Food Administration, I repeat, was the same as the Commodity Credit Corporation, during the period from 1943 to 1945. If that is not true, then I ask the Secretary of Agriculture, What did the Commodity Credit Corporation do? Did it function during that period?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but it functioned as it functions now, under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I repeat, the Commodity Credit Corporation, during the period from 1943 to 1945, as referred to by the General Accounting Office in the books which were submitted to the Congress on March 30 of this year, is the same Corporation to which I am now referring, and it is so referred to in the books which were submitted to the Congress by the General Accounting Office under date of June 30, 1945. The conclusion of the committee was this:

> The committee does feel, however, that these facts do not excuse errors in administration which were avoidable or which, if unavoidable, could have been corrected and were not corrected after proper notice of their existence had reached those who were in a position to bring about corrective action. There appears to be no logical reason why more accurate records of the War Food Administration could not have been kept nor why the commitments of the War Food Administration could not have been met as readily or perhaps more readily if this had been done. The committee recognizes that it was difficult to organize the regular flow of commodities to shipside due to the irregularity of ship schedules, but there appears to be no logical reason for inefficiencies in administration which have resulted in some cases in commodities which are in demand in the civilian market remaining in storage until they reach such a deteriorated condition that they are unfit for human consumption.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the entire report as submitted by the House under House Resolution 50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF THE WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 50

RE WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION SPOILAGE OF FOOD IN WAREHOUSES; CONTRIBUTING CAUSES, LACK OF RECORDS, AND OTHER EVIDENCES OF MISMANAGEMENT

Early in December 1944 the Subcommittee on Department of Agriculture Appropriations having received information indicating possible mismanagement and waste of public funds in the WFA, particularly in connection with the storage and disposition of food, issued the following directive to the Chief of the Investigatorial Staff of the Appropriations Committee, instructing him to investigate the following:

"Warehousing by the Food Administration, inspection of the warehouses thereunder, and the suitability of the Division of Warehouse Inspection therefor. Whether abuses have arisen from prolonged storage of essential foods needed by the military and civilian populations. Whether proper records have been kept of commodities placed in storage, showing in an orderly and accurate way the type and quality of goods stored and withdrawn, and whether any abuses, injurious to the public and to the armed services, have occurred in the handling of stored commodities. In pursuing this inquiry, the investigator should avail himself of the findings of the Mead committee of the Senate with a view to avoiding duplication and should include in his report a digest of the findings of the committee bearing on this subject."

A preliminary report was submitted in February 1945, based upon certain facts developed plus many allegations, some of which, if proven true, would violate certain Federal statutes and subject the violators to the criminal provisions thereof. After due deliberation by the committee, it was decided to continue the investigation regarding mismanagement and waste of public funds, utilizing the committee's investigative staff, and to refer all matters which might possibly result in criminal prosecution to the Attorney General for investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The committee requested the Attorney General to furnish it copies of the FBI reports but was advised that would not be done as such matters were for the consideration of grand juries as to possible criminal action and were confidential.

At the conclusion of the committee's investigation and hearings, another request was made of the Attorney General for him to furnish the committee with the reports issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation or furnish such information concerning the results thereof as could be made available. The reply of the Attorney General to this further request of the committee appears in the hearings. It is to be assumed that if any of the actions of the officials of the War Food Administration are in violation of Federal statutes appropriate action will be taken by the Attorney General to the end that such alleged violations may be appropriately investigated by the courts.

FINAL REPORT

The final report of the committee's investigators, as to a number of specific items and transactions, has been received and carefully reviewed by the committee. Considering the seriousness of the charges therein, it was decided that, in fairness to the officials who are directly or indirectly concerned with the supervision of the matters under investigation, they should have an opportunity to be heard. Hearings were held at which the officials appearing were questioned by the chief of the staff of the investigators and members of the committee, and the witnesses apprised of the nature of the charges and given an ample opportunity to offer any explanation. Fair consideration of the statements of these officials led, naturally, to the conclusion that they and their predecessors in their official stations were charged with the responsibility for setting up an emergency program for which administrative machinery had to be assembled hurriedly, and that great difficulties were incurred in securing a sufficient number of adequately trained personnel, as well as in the procurement with sufficient promptitude of adequate warehousing facilities with which to handle the huge program which was involved. Many errors of judgment and administration necessarily occurred. It is not the opinion of the committee that all of such errors justify unmitigated condemnation. We feel, on the contrary, that many of them were unavoidable. At the same time, we are of the opinion that inefficiency and dereliction in duty have occurred on the part of some of the officials and employees of the War Food Administration and that such derelictions are clearly indicated by the record of the hearings.

It is our belief that high officials of the War Food Administration were not in many instances apprised of some of these administrative errors themselves until they were brought to their attention in the course of this investigation. We believe that some of them have been corrected and have been assured that further efforts will be made to effect needed corrections in procedures as pointed out in this report and in the hearings themselves. The degree of responsibility for these errors of administration on the part of over-all supervisory authorities will depend, in the opinion of each person reading the hearings, upon what one may feel such authorities might have done to acquaint themselves with all of the details of the program under their supervision. Necessarily, many things were done in the field which did not come promptly to the attention of the Washington central office. We do not think that it was possible for authorities in the central office to have knowledge of all of the details of the work of this tremendous organization, and yet we do feel that when mistakes were called to their attention prompt action should have been taken, looking to their correction and to affording protection against the possibility of their recurrence. We are not able to feel that in all instances this has been done.

After studying the investigators' reports and the hearings, certain facts and conclusions have been reached by the committee which are set out hereinafter following the order of the charges as to mismanagement and inefficient operation of the WFA appearing in the hearings. This list of charges comprised the schedule of the interrogations of the several WFA officials who were summoned and given opportunity, under oath, to deny, explain, or justify the matters complained of which came within their respective jurisdictions.

While the committee has set forth its conclusions in the following pages, there are a few of the charges made by the investigator respecting which the committee as a whole has not formulated any opinion. Persons interested in the evidence presented under all of the charges are referred to the hearings.

REGULAR APPROPRIATION HEARINGS, 1946

In addition to the testimony incorporated in the hearings of the present investigation, the committee adduced considerable additional information bearing directly thereon at the time it was considering the regular Department of Agriculture appropriation bill for 1946. Reference is made to part 2 of the hearings on that bill. A special index of matters printed in those hearings which are related to this investigation has been prepared and is to be found under an appropriate heading at the end of the index to the hearings published in connection with this report.

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. Warehousing practices

The evidence found by the investigative staff and substantiated by officials appearing before the committee during the hearings indicates that in some instances the WFA has stored food in warehouses that had been declared unfit by warehouse inspectors, and that in some cases such storage has been unnecessary, inasmuch as suitable space was available elsewhere. In some cases food has been stored in warehouses without benefit of prior inspection and subsequently it has been determined through inspection that the facilities were not suitable; commodities have remained in such storage and have not been moved to suitable quarters even after the unsuitability of the warehousing facilities being utilized had been determined. It is true that insistence has been made by WFA officials to the effect that in such cases they have endeavored to effect transfer and restorage in suitable quarters as soon as such quarters could be provided and proper action to that end taken, but in the opinion of the committee adequate diligence in dealing with this subject matter has not been shown and unnecessary spoilage has resulted.

It appears that commodities have remained in storage in many cases for an undue length of time beyond that which is usually considered the safe storage period, with a resultant spoilage and loss to the Government. The evidence also indicates that sufficiently prompt action has not been taken in the disposal of food which has been in storage for a considerable period of time and is showing signs of deterioration and that action regarding the disposition of these commodities has in many instances not taken place until the commodities have become practically worthless.

We feel that explanations offered as to the conditions under which this situation became possible are not in accord with what might have been accomplished by careful administration both in Washington and in the field. We realize that since its inception the War Food Administration has been in a state of flux, with organization and reorganization and further reorganization following each other in rapid sequence and with several changes in a comparatively brief period of time in over-all responsibility both in the office of the War Food Administrator and among the responsible heads of various divisions of his organization. We believe that all of these circumstances make it difficult to place individual responsibility for many of the conditions which have been developed upon any specifically named individual or individuals, but we feel that WFA has been established for a long enough period of time to have attained a considerable degree of regularity in its procedures and that its organization should have been perfected to a far greater degree of efficiency than has been the case.

We are, as stated, endeavoring to furnish in this report our conclusions as to the evils which exist or have existed and should be corrected where correction has not been had without undertaking to incorporate in this report conflicting opinions of those who have considered the evidence as to where individual responsibility for these conditions should be placed. In many cases it has been impossible for us to determine this even to our own satisfaction.

The foregoing conclusions are predicated upon actual inspections made by the committee's investigators in 12 warehouses, a study of warehouse inspectors' reports covering 9 other plants, and information from other sources indicating that similar conditions obtained in at least 27 more establishments or a total of 48 warehouses. There is a total of approximately 1,500 warehouses storing commodities for the WFA and it is obvious they could not all be scrutinized by the investigatorial staff.

However, the committee believes the number actually covered comprises a reliable sampling. While we are not justified in assuming that conditions which are subject to criticism or condemnation exist in other branches of the War Food organization which we have not had an opportunity to examine, we believe that a further investigation of them and of the operations of WFA as a whole is thoroughly justified and desirable. We understand that an investigation is at this time under way under the jurisdiction of the Office of the Comptroller General with reference to stocks in warehouses controlled by WFA, the results of which should be of considerable value.

The criticisms here expressed of warehouse practices do not necessarily reflect blame upon the warehousemen, themselves. It is true, of course, that many warehouses are inadequately equipped and inefficiently managed by operators having little or no experience in the business, who have leased buildings without regard to their suitability, for the purpose of securing a share of the Government's storage custom, and who have directly contributed, by reason of their inadequacies, to the losses herein reported.

It seems to the committee that a properly managed inspection on the part of the WFA would have definitely determined the unsuitability of such warehouses prior to their use and we have not been convinced that the emergency nature of the program required in many instances the use of warehouses whose suitability has not been thus ascertained. In some of the instances in which such use was made it has been definitely established that adequate and suitable facilities were available and were not utilized.

On the other hand, many of the losses occurred among commodities stored in highly reputable warehouses, where neither warehouse conditions nor management contributed to the loss, but where loss occurred on account of failure of WFA officials to determine and act upon facts which were readily discoverable and concerning which in many cases it had been advised or could have been advised by ordinary diligence relative to the deterioration of food stocks and failure to take prompt and necessary action for disposal of the goods before spoilage actually occurred. The records of WFA are not sufficiently complete and accurate to enable us to determine the extent of the loss which has thus occurred but the evidence submitted justifies the feeling that it has been considerable, probably amounting to many millions of dollars.

2. Wasteful transfers between warehouses

It has been brought out during the hearings and further substantiated by information that was developed during the investigation that on some occasions commodities have been transferred from one warehouse to another without apparent reason, which, of course, results in extra transportation charges, additional storage charges, since the first month's storage always includes the handling charges in and out, and in some cases the storage rates paid for the commodities in the second warehouse exceed the storage rates which were being paid in the first warehouse.

The committee has examined officials of the WFA at some length with regard to the transfer of dried skim milk from six warehouses throughout the Middle West to the United Warehouse & Terminal Corp., Mallory Avenue warehouse, Memphis, Tenn. It has been definitely established that the Mallory Avenue warehouse should not be used for the storage of war food commodities, according to recommendations of warehouse inspectors; that the WFA had no contract for the storage of dried skim milk in this warehouse but was aware that the last contract carried a rate for the storage far in excess of that which was being paid in the six warehouses from which the dried skim milk was shipped. Two months' storage charges were paid by the WFA even though no contract was in existence and only after the inquiry instigated by this committee was in progress did the WFA take any affirmative action in an effort to obtain a contract at a lower rate with this warehouse. As far as the committee has been able to ascertain such a contract has not been executed and the committee has been apprised of no reasonable justification for this transaction.

In an effort to establish the responsibility for this transaction officials involved were closely questioned and gave conflicting statements. Mr. Eldon Richardson has stated in effect that he issued instructions that commodities should be stored in the Mallory Avenue warehouse but did not instruct that commodities should be taken from other warehouses but had in mind that they should be obtained from vendors. Mr. Ben Guthrie, Chief of the Storage Division, who received the instructions from Mr. Richardson, states that he referred such instructions to Mr. Charles Murray, Chief of Dry Storage, and that he had not issued instructions that commodities should be taken from other warehouses in order to provide the Mallory warehouse of the United Warehouse & Terminal Corp. with commodities. On the other hand, Mr. Murray has stated that he was instructed by Mr. Guthrie to make this transfer and that it was his understanding that his instructions had originated with Mr. Richardson. The committee feels that the conflicting statements and its inability to obtain forthright information from any of the officials reflected rather definitely against the management of the Shipping and Storage Branch and illustrates to some extent the lack of proper organization referred to elsewhere in this report.

3. Unbusinesslike settlement of accounts

It has definitely been brought out during this investigation and hearings that there has been no reconciliation of the inventories submitted monthly by the various warehouses with records of the WFA and that storage and service charges are being paid solely upon the word of the warehousemen that such storage and service charges are due and accurate without checking against any storage records of the WFA. It has been obvious that the lack of such procedure is primarily due to the knowledge of the officials of the WFA that they had no records which were of sufficient accuracy to make such checks.

It appears with respect to the sale of commodities to individuals and corporations that in some instances final settlement for the transaction is based upon the quantities which the purchaser states that he has received. Instances have been brought to the attention of the committee where the amount stated by the purchaser disagrees with the amounts reflected by the inventory records of the WFA and final settlement has been made based upon the quantities reported by the purchaser. Obviously such a condition makes it possible for unscrupulous operators in surplus commodities to defraud the Government and action should be taken to correct this situation.

4. Inefficient procedure for handling claims

The committee has been impressed with the lack of organization and coordination with respect to the handling of possible claims against warehouses and common carriers in accordance with losses that may have been partially due to mishandling by warehousemen and common carriers. The Chief of the Claims Division has advised in the hearings that he has not received full information concerning all possible claims and has estimated that the possible claims not received may run as high as 15 or 20 percent of the total.

The committee feels that adequate administrative machinery for the handling of claims should be promptly set up to the end that the Government's interests may be properly protected.

In some cases warehouses operated by individuals or corporations without adequate financial resources have been utilized and although the usual bond in the amount of 20 percent of the value of the goods stored has been required, complete recovery for losses sustained has not been possible. The committee feels that in the absence of extreme emergency only reputable warehouses of proven financial standing should be utilized.

5. Financial and inventory records

An examination of the hearings will reflect that practically all of the officials who were questioned admitted that the inventory records of the WFA were inaccurate. The primary responsibility for the inaccuracy of inventory records appears to rest with the Shipping and Storage Branch. It is here that all actions originate involving the acquisition and disposition, and all movements and change of status, of commodities in the custody of the WFA. It is, therefore, the responsibility of the Shipping and Storage Branch to advise promptly the Inventory Accounting Section of each and every transaction, if the latter is to be able at all times to furnish an accurate statement of the position of the WFA with reference to commodities within its custody.

The testimony of the several witnesses drawn from the Shipping and Storage Branch is in general agreement that no effective procedure has ever been imposed which will afford the Inventory Accounting Section adequate and timely data for its purposes. Statements made by John B. Charlton, Assistant Chief of the Inventory Accounting Section, disclose that his unit does not receive, in numerous instances, advices from the Shipping and Storage Branch of the receipt, disposition, or other movement of commodities until long after the action report has been had, and often not until after the position of the commodity has again changed, and in many cases such advices are never received.

From the foregoing it is apparent that even though information available to the Inventory Accounting Section should be accurately recorded and reported by that unit, it would not, because of its incompleteness, comprise an accurate inventory of the position of the WFA. It naturally follows that, inasmuch as the inventory records are admittedly inaccurate, any financial statements prepared which include inventory transactions are themselves inaccurate.

"Bulletin price"—"Unbilled accounts receivable": The inaccuracy of the financial records is, furthermore, aggravated by a procedure which has been in effect whereby sales to individuals and corporations are reported on the financial records at the bulletin price and not at the price at which the commodities were actually sold. The bulletin price is the price set by the WFA for the transfer of commodities under the lend-lease program and includes the original cost, transportation, and warehouse charges, handling charges, and a percentage estimated to be sufficiently large to cover the administrative cost and possible loss. As a result of this procedure, there is contained in the asset account, entitled "Unbilled Accounts Receivable," an undetermined amount, but amounting to several million dollars, which represents the difference between the bulletin price and the actual price received by the WFA. This results in the balance sheet of the WFA reflecting an asset of several million dollars which, as a matter of fact, is absolutely worthless and never was or never would be of any value.

In an effort to ascertain the extent of loss from spoilage and deterioration of commodities and including losses in connection with the price-support programs, the committee's investigators made requests of numerous officials for such tabulations. There has never been furnished to the committee such a tabulation, and efforts on the part of the investigators to ascertain the extent of loss have resulted in obtaining inadequate, and in some cases, conflicting information. A study of the investigators' reports which, as far as the financial records are concerned, were made by a qualified expert accountant, reflects that whereas there has without doubt been considerable losses, the financial records do not reflect such losses with sufficient particularity.

The policy of including in the bulletin price losses due to processing and repackaging of commodities has a result of confusing such losses, so that they are not distinguishable as such in any report. It is of interest to the committee to note that this method of handling some of the losses results in bulletin prices far in excess of the normal market prices, and inasmuch as the bulletin price is used in pricing transfers of commodities under the lend-lease program, the net result is that the lend-lease program is charged with such losses but they are not segregated and designated as such. While some special procedure may be necessary in the maintenance of accounts with lend-lease program beneficiaries, the records of the War Food Administration should be so kept as to accurately disclose the true losses sustained in connection therewith.

After due consideration and study of all of the facts developed with regard to the inventory records and financial statements contained in the hearings and in the reports of the committee's investigators, the committee can arrive at only one conclusion and that is that any report submitted by the WFA based upon the inventory records and financial records will be inaccurate and will fail to properly reflect the true condition. The statement by Mr. Lee Marshall, dated January 16, 1945, inserted in the hearings by Hon. Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, reports the theoretical condition and not the actual condition as found during this inquiry. While the statement has been permitted by the committee to be placed in the hearings, it is felt that the contentions therein made as to correction of conditions are not supported in their entirety by the evidence which has been adduced and that further efforts looking toward their immediate correction are imperatively demanded.

6. Erroneous information furnished to committees of Congress

A very serious situation has been brought to light during this investigation with respect to erroneous information having been furnished to committees of Congress purportedly outlining certain conditions in the WFA with particular respect to losses and movements of commodities. Congress has every right to expect that representatives of the executive agencies will furnish accurate information upon request and in the event it is not possible for the executive agencies to furnish accurate information as requested, Congress should certainly expect that officials of such agencies would so advise.

It has been brought out during this inquiry that requests of this committee for information to be used in the consideration of appropriations for the WFA have resulted in erroneous information. The committee was advised by Colonel Olmstead, who was then Director of the Office of Supply, in the regular appropriation hearings for 1946, which were held in February 1945, that the estimated loss from the price-support program on eggs during the late spring of 1944 was $5,800,000. It appears significant to the committee that in reporting such a loss, Colonel Olmstead used an estimated report as of September 30, 1944, whereas it has been brought out during this inquiry that information as of February 1945 would most certainly indicate a far greater loss. A very conservative estimate submitted by investigators for this committee indicates that the loss on the egg price-support program will exceed $11,500,000.

During the hearings held by this committee in connection with the 1946 appropriation, a request was made for a statement of losses which was furnished in accordance with the testimony of Colonel Olmstead. An examination of the hearings will definitely reflect that this statement of losses is completely inaccurate and was known to be inaccurate at the time it was submitted to this committee. It should not be necessary for this committee or any other committee to remind officials of the executive agencies that Congress has a right to expect accurate information on request.

Only a few years ago this subcommittee developed, upon an investigation, that a responsible official of one of the agencies had, in the language of the Secretary, "invented a scheme designed to thwart the submission of complete information that had been requested" by the committee, and for so doing was subsequently removed from office by the Secretary.[1] In reporting this matter to the House, the committee stressed "the importance of absolute good faith on the part of the officers and employees of the executive branch in dealing with the Congress" and stated further "that the departments, bureaus, and independent agencies of the Government are charged with responsibility to exercise vigilance to the end that all representations and facts presented to the Congress may be beyond challenge."[2] The committee feels that the repetition of this admonition is entirely appropriate to the current investigation.

7. Lack of coordination within the organization

Evidence has been submitted to the committee by some officials of WFA who were unable when questioned to answer fully and clearly inquiries regarding procedure and organization of the units over which they had supervision. Undoubtedly in many branches of WFA there has been confusion on the part of administrative officials as to their jurisdiction, and frequent reorganizations have resulted in confusion on the part of some employees as to the official to whom they were responsible, and there appears to have been lack of definite ascertainment by administrative authorities as to the jurisdiction and duties of the various units and sections with respect to some of the fields in which they operate. It also seems to the committee to be true that some branches of the organization have lacked proper supervision although we do not discount the insistence that properly trained and qualified supervisory personnel have been difficult to secure. The results of these defects in administration in the attitude of employees toward their job and in efficiency of the discharge of their duties is described in the evidence of Col. Ralph W. Olmstead, Director of the Office of Supply, on page 457 of the hearings. In addition, lesser officials have indicated their familiarity with this situation and have stated that they have called attention of higher officials to it without material result.

Col. Ralph W. Olmstead has been a predominating factor in the War Food Administration, particularly with respect to the purchase, distribution, and storage of food. This is not to say that others in the organization were without responsibility, but obviously Colonel Olmstead's position in the broad food-handling picture is such as to preclude the dodging of responsibility by laying the blame on a lesser official under his jurisdiction.

8. Questionable transactions

Dried egg albumen sale: One of the transactions handled by the officials of the WFA brought out during the hearings concerns the sale of dried egg albumen. The basic facts of the transaction are that 89,600 pounds of dried egg albumen were sold by the WFA to George Ehlenberger & Co. of New York City, for ultimate disposition to a Swiss firm, at $1.30 per pound at a time that the WFA had no surplus of dried egg albumen on hand and in order to fulfill the sales contract would have to purchase in the open market at from $1.70 to $1.85 per pound. It has been furthermore brought out during the hearings that this sale was highly irregular in that the normal procedures were not followed, such as offering the commodity to the original vendor, publicly announcing the sale for bid or disposing of surplus commodities through a definitely approved program. It is of further interest to note that this transaction upon being discovered by the committee's investigators and brought to the attention of the officials of the WFA has resulted in efforts on the part of the WFA to cancel the contract on the basis of illegality. The committee cannot reconcile the statement of officials that the contract is now illegal and that it was legal at the time of the original negotiation and subsequent execution of the contract. To say the least, the committee feels that this transaction was extremely unbusinesslike without any logical reason for its having been made and has resulted in a definitely unnecessary loss to the Government.

The cave cooler: Another transaction which has been of tremendous interest to this committee involves the construction of cooler storage space in a cave located near Atchison, Kans. It has been stated during the hearings that the original negotiation resulted in the Government's agreeing to pay $20,000 a year rental to the Kerford Co., operators of the limestone mine in the so-called cave; that as of the date of the hearings no formal lease has been executed; that the Kerford Co. was leasing the cave from others at a rental of $7,100 per year; that subsequently the WFA agreed to pay the Kerford Co. a lum sump of $40,000 to cease mining operations in the cave since such operations were interfering with the construction work and the original rental agreement provided that mining operations should continue.

It has furthermore been proven and admitted that the contract for the construction of this facility was let to J. F. Pritchard Co., of Kansas City, Mo., without benefit of bids; that the contract for the operation of the facility was let on the basis of informal bids and not let to the lowest bidder, and furthermore provided for the operation to start September 1, 1944, with an agreement that the WFA would pay a management fee no less than $5,000 per year; and that the facility is not yet ready for operation. It is furthermore of interest to note that the operating contract was let to the Atchison Ice Co., which is owned by the contractor, J. F. Pritchard Co., his son-in-law and a representative of the Frick Refrigeration Co., who assisted in the original survey and concurred in the recommendation that the cave should be converted to cooler storage.

The defense aid funds under the control of the Foreign Economic Administration have been used to the extent of $1,650,000 in this facility and recently FEA refused to advance $350,000 additional for its completion on the ground that the need for it no longer existed in the lend-lease program since adequate commercial space was available. Recently the Board of Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation have advanced $350,000 additional for its completion, justifying their action on possible use of the facility in the postwar period.

The justification for this facility has been given to the committee as shortage of commercial cooler space and the rapidity with which this facility could be made available. It has been noted that in the summer of 1944, when this project was first started, considerable publicity was given out to the effect that the facility would be ready for storage by September 1944. As previously stated, it will not be ready until approximately July 1, 1945. Statements have been submitted to the committee from the National Association of Refrigerated Warehouses which reflect that at the most crucial period from the standpoint of availability of cooler space, the commercial facilities could have accepted in excess of 12,500 carloads of cooler commodities and that at the present time these commercial facilities are capable of handling in excess of 31,000 carloads of commodities in cooler storage. This association has furthermore stated that the shortage of labor which has on many occasions been brought to the attention of WFA officials has been the primary cause for inability to handle additional commodities, rather than shortage of space.

The committee is not convinced as to the necessity for this facility and feels that very definite consideration should be given by officials of the WFA and Commodity Credit Corporation to abandonment of this project and recovery of as much as possible from the $2,000,000 investment.

9. Personnel policies

Members of this committee have a definite feeling and belief that the personnel policies of the WFA have been very lax. In two instances during this investigation the committee has been advised that individuals with prior criminal records have been placed in positions of responsibility, have been recommended from time to time for promotion, even though in addition to their criminal records they have been the subject of inquiry for violation of Department of Agriculture regulations. The committee is cognizant of the fact that there has been a manpower shortage and for that reason it has not been easy to obtain as high a grade personnel as might be desired.

The committee feels, however, that the manpower shortage as such cannot excuse the placing of incompetent persons in responsible positions and, more particularly, the retention of incompetent persons after their incompetency has been determined. This is not to say that all persons in the WFA are incompetent, but the committee has been impressed with the fact that too many incompetent persons have been employed in positions of responsibility. The difficulties of efficient administration are multiplied under existing circumstances, and the committee is not in position to say that in all cases adequate trained and qualified personnel has been available. It is but fair to state that the Civil Service Commission has had its degree of responsibility for the approval for classification under the Ramspeck Act of persons who have had prior criminal records. It is also fair to point out that since this committee began its investigation the two individuals to whom reference has been made have been separated from the service of the War Food Administration.

[1] See H. Rept. No. 1848, 77th Cong., p. 11.
[2] See H. Rept. No. 176, 77th Cong., p. 5.

10. Losses under egg price-support program

The committee appreciates the fact that in a program of this size, one of whose primary purposes was to insure to the producers an adequate market price for eggs, great losses were necessarily sustained. While purchase of run-of-the-nest eggs without inspection is practiced in the trade in some sections of the country and the committee does not question but that some Members of Congress urged that this procedure be followed in the egg price-support program in an effort to assure to the producers the type of relief to which they were entitled, it nevertheless feels that there should have been the candling of eggs in order to avoid losses which could have been in this way readily averted.

The committee does not feel that Congress gave any direction or instruction to War Food Administration which could be relied upon by its officials as justifying lack of this degree of care. It is not unmindful of the fact that the price per dozen eggs paid under this method of procedure was 27 cents, whereas had the eggs been inspected the support price was 30 cents, nor has it overlooked the insistence of the War Food Administrator that the eggs purchased really cost the Government less after taking a loss on account of bad eggs than would have been the case had the full support price been paid for thoroughly inspected eggs. However, so far as the committee is concerned, it believes that at least the measure of inspection indicated should have been practiced and that the losses in the program would have been considerably reduced had that been done.

The lost '00 cars of eggs: It is of interest to the committee that the status of approximately 400 cars of eggs which are reflected on the records of the WFA to have been purchased and consigned to certain warehouses has not been definitely ascertained and that WFA apparently has no records reflecting a receipt of these eggs in warehouses. Up to a month ago they were still carried on the records as "in transit." Whether this represents a real loss or only inaccuracy in the maintenance of proper records is, of course, debatable. In either event the situation is one which does not indicate efficient administrative procedure and the need for further investigation and correction is evident.

11. Conclusion

In considering this report, it must be borne in mind that the committee had available voluminous information obtained by the investigative staff which does not appear in the hearings. In some instances it was not felt necessary by the committee to bring out in the hearings this additional information and in other and more frequent instances, the information contained in the investigators' reports was obtained from confidential sources and the committee feels that such sources should be protected.

It should also be noted that this inquiry did not attempt to cover all of the activities of the War Food Administration but was confined to a representative segment of the warehousing, storage, and record-keeping functions. The committee cannot condemn all operations of WFA on the basis of this inquiry but the sample reviewed would indicate the desirability of officials of WFA reviewing all operations for efficient administration.

It is impossible for all of the deficiencies in the operation of the WFA to be justified upon the basis of the magnitude of the over-all operations. Many of them have been deficiencies of the type which should have at once required the most diligent efforts for their correction on the part of supervisory officials as soon as they were called to their attention, whatever the magnitude of the operations. We appreciate the fact that the WFA has indeed been faced with tremendous problems and we feel that the pride expressed by Judge Marvin Jones, present Administrator, in the course of the hearings, that no ship has had to sail without the requested food abroad and that, generally speaking, all commitments made by the WFA for delivery of commodities under the lend-lease program have been met, is thoroughly justified. WFA has met a national need in a period of extreme emergency and the over-all result has been one of which the people of this country have the right to be proud. The committee does feel, however, that these facts do not excuse errors in administration which were avoidable or which, if unavoidable, could have been corrected and were not corrected after proper notice of their existence had reached those who were in position to bring about corrective action. There appears to be no logical reason why more accurate records of WFA could not have been kept nor why the commitments of WFA could not have been met as readily or perhaps more readily if this had been done. The committee realizes that it was difficult to organize the regular flow of commodities to shipside due to the irregularity of ship schedules but there appears to be no logical reason for inefficiencies in administration which have resulted in some cases in commodities which are in demand in the civilian market remaining in storage until they reach such a deteriorated condition that they are unfit for human consumption.

The committee desires to state that the present War Food Administrator, Judge Marvin Jones, has cooperated with the committee in every possible way in making available to it and to its investigators any and all of the files and records of his organization and has evidenced a willingness and a purpose to cooperate to the end that the most searching investigation possible should be made. He it was who requested investigation of alleged criminal actions of WFA officials and employees by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and has been insistent that, if possible, a report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation as to its investigation and the results thereof should be secured and inserted in the records of these hearings. He has also expressed a willingness to correct mistakes in administration wherever they have been or may be shown. It is the hope of this committee that during his further administration of WFA the evidence in these hearings and the findings in this report may be of value to him in the efficient performance of his duties.

The committee desires to state that the information obtained by the investigative staff has been made available to Congressman CLINTON P. ANDERSON, who will take over the duties of Secretary of Agriculture and War Food Administrator as of July 1, 1945. It is the desire of this committee to cooperate to the fullest extent with Mr. ANDERSON and, for that reason, he has been acquainted with all of the facts developed during this inquiry. The committee has furthermore advised Mr. ANDERSON that it will expect periodic reports of progress from him as to the remedial measures that have been taken. It is furthermore the intent of this committee to keep in close touch with the situation through its investigative staff to determine the progress being made.

PEARL HARBOR FOOD CACHES

The present inquiry has resulted in disclosing many matters bearing on the War Food Administration and on the general food supply situation which suggest the desirability of further nvestigation. As an example, War Food Administrator Marvin Jones testified that at the time of Pearl Harbor, there was real fear of an attempted invasion by the Japanese, and it had been reported to him by persons who should know that, as a safeguard, great quantities of food had been located in different parts of the country without keeping any records of them. While it is possible such stocks of food, if they existed, may have since been returned to normal channels, Mr. Jones was unable to advise the committee whether that had occurred. Such supplies, if consisting of commodities now short, would be very useful if found.

UTILITY OF INVESTIGATION FOR ACTION UPON APPROPRIATION REQUESTS

The committee is impressed with the valuable results of this investigation as respecting its function of acting upon budget requests. When the regular appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture for 1946 was under consideration by the committee and by the Congress, the investigation was still in its inconclusive stages. It did not, therefore, except in limited degree, enter into the determinations under that bill. However, with respect to future bills, the members of the committee have very definitely enlarged their familarity with the functions of the War Food Administration and of the interrelationships of its several programs. They have also acquired a better understanding of the administrative set-up, its weaknesses, and the possibilties of its improvement through a more intelligent and sympathetic consideration by the committee. Reductions in appropriations, or more fruitful expenditures under the existing amounts, should inevitably follow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Secretary can interpret the statements which I just read and which are contained in the report, to mean that the House committee, under the leadership of Judge Tarver, was fully satisfied with the operations of the Corporation, then either he or I just do not understand the English language. If this is a favorable report in the eyes of the Secretary of Agriculture, then I should be most interested in reading what he considers to be an unfavorable report.

Contrary to being fully satisfied, as claimed in the letter of April 5, 1946, addressed to Mr. SPENCE, I point out that not only was the committee not satisfied, but it actually recommended a further investigation. On page 4 of the report it was specifically stated:

> We believe that a further investigation of them and of the operations of the War Food Administration as a whole is thoroughly justified and desirable.
> We understand that an investigation is at this time under way under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General with reference to stocks in warehouses controlled by the WFA, the results of which should be of considerable value.

The investigation to which reference is made is the investigation which was conducted by the General Accounting Office, a report of which was submitted to the Senate only on March 30, 1949, following my introduction of a resolution demanding the report. It was this report of the General Accounting Office as requested by the House committee under the chairmanship of Judge Tarver on June 27, 1945, and submitted to the Congress on March 30, 1949, which disclosed for the first time the fact that the amount of $366,643,129 recorded as due from sales made in the general commodity-purchase program of the Corporation could not be supported or verified.

I again remind the Senate that when the House committee, under Judge Tarver, referred to the War Food Administration, it was in each instance referring to the Commodity Credit Corporation, since, during the war period, this Corporation operated under the name of the WFA or War Food Administration under Executive Order No. 9334, dated April 19, 1943.

Throughout the report there are charges and evidence of negligence, waste, and extravagance beyond the imagination.

It was a common practice of the Corporation in disposing of surplus commodities in many instances to make no effort whatever to check the accuracy of the quantities delivered to the purchasers. They merely allowed them to go into the warehouse, take what they wanted, render their own accounting, and report the amount which they felt they owed.

There is plenty of evidence that warehouse charges have been paid without any effort being made on the part of the management to determine whether such charges were due. Reports have come in containing instances of duplications of payments having been made on charges which were submitted, some of them accepted, and many of them returned. The books of the Corporation were in such a state that it was not known how much was owed, and many times duplicate payments or no payments at all would be made.

In the case of this particular Corporation, even today Congress has not as yet seen the financial reports for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948, each of which, under the law, was required to be submitted to the Congress not later than January 15 following the ending of the fiscal year on June 30. We now know that the books were in a deplorable state for the period 1943–45. All we know about the records for the years following that period is that we are told by the General Accounting Office, which is conducting the survey, that they were found to be improved. Evidently their bookkeeping methods have not improved sufficiently to make it possible for the General Accounting Office to make annual audit in time for submission to the Congress.

Congress saw fit last year to take away from the Secretary of Agriculture exclusive control of this Corporation and place it in the hands of an independent board of directors. We have been told by the General Accounting Office that during the past year the affairs of the Corporation, under a board of directors subject to Senate confirmation, have been conducted in the best manner in which they have ever been conducted in the history of the General Accounting Office examinations.

The very least we should do is to find out in just what condition the affairs of this Corporation are for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948 before returning the control to any one man. That is one of the reasons why Congress passed the so-called Byrd-Butler bill, in which it was provided that each corporation should be granted a Federal charter, that the directors should be confirmed by the Senate, and that they should be accountable to Congress and not to any part of the executive branch of the Government.

I urge that the conference report be rejected. If it is rejected, I shall move that new conferees be appointed with instructions to insist upon that provision of the Senate bill under which members of the Board of Directors would be confirmed by the Senate and granted proper authority to carry out the functions which we expect them to carry out.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion?

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to withhold it.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 26, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SCRIPTURE READING AND PRAYER

The CHAPLAIN—

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

"As I stand by my cross on the lone mountain's crest,
Looking over the ultimate sea,
In the gloom of the mountain a ship
lies at rest,
And one sails away from the lea.
One spreads its white wings on a far-reaching track,
With pennant and sheet flowing free;
One hides in the shadow with sails laid aback—
The ship that is waiting for me!

"But lo! in the distance the clouds break away!
The Gate's glowing portals I see;
And I hear from the outgoing ship in the bay
The song of the sailors in glee.
So I think of the luminous footprints that bore
The comfort o'er dark Galilee;
And wait for the signal to go to the shore,
To the ship that is waiting for me."

Heavenly Father, our minds are arrested as we pause to meditate upon the brevity of this life and the immortality of the human soul. Thy providential care towers above the horizons of human needs, and reveals the ultimate blessing to those who pass this way. Our hearts sing, "God cares."

O Thou who didst bow Thy head upon the cross, comfort the sorrowing ones who linger here. Not in vain do we call upon Thee, for we know that neither death, nor life, nor powers, nor any other creature can separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

DEVOTIONAL SILENCE

There followed a period of devotional silence, during which the Members stood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Utah [Mrs. BOSONE].

Hon. REVA BECK BOSONE, a Representative from the State of Utah, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS BY HON. REVA BECK BOSONE

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Speaker, it is with gratitude that I accept your invitation to participate in today's memorial exercises. I realize the responsibility of fully expressing the spirit of warm friendship and the reverence which the Members of this distinguished body have for those comrades who have lifted that curtain of mystery and gone on to eternal rest. It is with a spirit of humility that I attempt my assignment.

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
However, we may call;
They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

It's hard to take the burden up
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown;
But, Oh, 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

More homelike seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
What e'er betides, thy love abides,
Our God, forever more.

Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

Bright is the morning with glaring light when the sun rises in the east. Brighter still become its rays as the morning grows into noon—the most brilliant part of the day. As afternoon wears on, the heavens shade the brilliance with colors in full bloom—the sunset. Then the twilight gathers in luxuriant hues, evening descends and darkness puts the world to sleep.

So it is with the life span of man. With great exultation a child is born. A smile is on every face. With each hope of life's expectancy, dreams are translated into reality. At the noontime of man's life great in luster is his development, varied is his activity, and bright is his future. As life wears on, his colorful contributions envelop him. Twilight slows the pace but sweetens the path—night descends. He who was once a child becomes a man, and in the evening of his life slips away into the night to rest forever.

In the midst of today's turmoil and haste, it is fitting that we pause to pay homage to those Members of Congress who in this past year have answered their last roll call. When those illustrious gentlemen—Senators JOHN HOLMES OVERTON, of Louisiana; HARLAN JOHN BUSHFIELD, of South Dakota; and JOSEPH MELVILLE BROUGHTON of North Carolina—answered to their names on those heavenly rolls, I am sure it was with a strong voice of conviction, and that they went with a firm step of courage—two qualities so eminent in these distinguished statesmen.

It was with sweet satisfaction that I perused the RECORDS and found sincere appreciation of the attributes of each of the Members of the House when notice came of his passing. Let me pay tribute to them in the words of one of their colleagues:

I know no man who assumed his responsibilities and duties as a Member of Congress more seriously than TOM OWENS. His name will go down in history as one of those rare individuals who made a thorough study of legislation and fought for what he considered to be right and just and in the best interests of the people of our glorious country.

Those who served with MILTON WEST know that he was firm in his convictions and, moreover, that he had the courage to stand by them at all times and under all circumstances. Here was the type of Representative who never deviated from what he considered the fundamental principles of sound government.

JOHN DELANEY was not only a lovable personality but a man of understanding nature; a man with whom anyone could live, without regard to differences of opinion or race or color or creed, because he was possessed of that one spirit, which I think is more important to enable people to live together than anything else—the spirit of understanding, of respect of one for the other, with an understanding state of mind.

America gave SOL BLOOM his opportunity and America honors him in passing. He was a devoted public servant. He represents the challenge of our civilization.

ANDREW SOMERS was a great student and authority on the Constitution of the United States—its origin and its interpretation. He was perhaps the greatest authority in the House on the world monetary situation. President Roosevelt recognized his knowledge and ability by appointing him a delegate to the International Monetary Conference that was held in London.

It has brought sorrow to the hearts of all of us to see the sudden passing from our midst of so young a man as Col. ROBERT COFFEY—one who had such a brilliant record in the war and who bore such promise of great accomplishment in the field of government and statesmanship.

To these tributes which have already been spoken, those of us here know that we can add one other tribute which is applicable to each and every one of these men. It is this: "As the soldier died in patriotic service, so did he."

Today the eyes of the whole world are centered on the building in which we now sit—the Capitol of the United States. The words that are spoken and the deeds that are consummated here have a deep and abiding effect on men and women all around the globe. Unrequested, our great country through its humanitarian philosophy has assumed world leadership and world responsibility.

That this country now sits on this pinnacle of preeminence is due in no small measure to many of the men who stood during their lifetime in the well of this House.

Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

'Tis true—no more they live in their worldly tabernacles—no more do we feel the warmth of their friendly smile, the grip of a strong handshake—the chastisement of our views on legislation, sometimes deserved. But truly we feel the inspiration of what they said—and what they did. Their convictions and their deeds will live forever in the statutes of this Nation. Their courage and humanity have forged an unbroken chain of friendship among those they met in their service to their country.

Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

"No more"? Who can say that? Regardless of a person's religious views or church affiliation, it is difficult to say where this influence leaves off. A word said today, blossoms into a thought tomorrow, and eventually activates a deed. Where is the end? There is none. Kind words and noble deeds go on forever. Their identity is lost, but the identity is not important.

Have you ever sat on the side of a mountain and observed the bigness of the universe? Have you ever stood on a high pinnacle where a panoramic view of God's handiwork overwhelmed you? One's ego vanishes into nothingness upon the sight of God's creation.

There is no end—a beginning of something else—what? Does it matter? If it does, climb to the topmost ridge of the nearest hill and drink in the fresh air and relax in nature's beauty. Fast will come the realization that there is a plan—a beginning, a development—a death—a death that there must be a rebirth. There is no end.

Some trees have shallow roots. They spread widely, but are stumped. Their shadow is large for awhile, but the tree soon topples and is gone.

Other trees send their roots deep into the earth. They reach for the heavens and grow tall. Their shadow is broad and long and remains for hundreds of years.

Some men develop fast and glamorously, but leave without an imprint upon the life of man—their shadow fades.

Other men work slowly but surely for the benefit of their fellow man. Their unselfish and noble thoughts and deeds give them a deep and rich foundation upon which they grow—grow to such a height and with such firm roots that their shadow lasts.

Some had a full day in which to develop; others, like Colonel COFFEY, lived a long life, but a short day.

We have long ceased to count the numerical years of a man's life, his life is calculated only on the scale of achievement, not selfish attainments but contributions to the happiness and security of mankind.

I feel sure that each Member of Congress who has answered the final roll call has shortened his life because he has placed responsibility to his country first. His community and State achievements have been given national expression. The weight of his conscientiousness in his daily work gave him deep roots, a long shadow, and an everlasting influence in the world.

Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more.

Death is only an old door,
Set in a garden wall;
On gentle hinges it gives, at dusk
When the thrushes call.

There is nothing to trouble any heart;
Nothing to hurt at all.
Death is only a quiet door
In an old wall.

Our beloved colleagues—

Cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
What e'er betides, thy love abides,
Our God, forever more.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Hon. FRANCES P. BOLTON, a Representative from the State of Ohio, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS BY HON. FRANCES P. BOLTON

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, some 15 years ago I was in London on the November day that marks the cease-fire order of the First World War. We call it Armistice Day, the British call it Remembrance Day, and so observe it.

It was not cold, but there was a mist which now and again became the soft rain with which Londoners are so familiar. Close after dawn the people began to gather at the Cenotaph, that simple monument in the very heart of busiest London to which every cabby unobtrusively tips his hat as he drives by it with a reverence which comes from his heart. There was to be a simple memorial service there in midmorning, read by bishops and archbishops, attended by the King and Queen and all the royal family, and shared by all the great and small who could get near enough to hear, as well as those who just stood quietly beyond the range of sight and hearing.

Many of the battle monuments had been designated as gathering places. We chose the one at Hyde Park corner, where a platoon of the regiment whose dead were honored there stood watch. At a few minutes before 11 a car drove up, several men in the formal morning coats of Members of Parliament got out, and in their turn placed a wreath and took their places beside the monument.

If you knew London in the thirties, you knew the teeming noise of that unbelievably busy corner with its busses, cabs, and cars of every sort, its hawkers of every kind. Then suddenly the bugler sounded the first note of taps, and instantaneously there was silence, hats were off, and we all stood motionless as the poignant call went out, to be taken up in the distance to the north, to the south, to the east, to the west, like echoes in the mist. Tears ran unchecked from the eyes of stalwart men and sad-eyed women as the sound died. Then once again the bugler raised his bugle to his lips—reveille. The English notes vary a little from ours, but there was no mistaking the call.

Deeply moved, I waited until the crowd had gone and I could go quietly up to this bugler and ask some little question which would perhaps draw from him the reason for this second call, as it did. He saluted, tears still in his eyes and on his cheek. "Yes, lady, we plays them taps and then we plays them reveille to remind us of the Resurrection."

Later in the day we went to Westminster Abbey, outside of which, in the grass plot, miniature cemetery lots had been marked out, each with the name of some regiment, each with rows of tiny crosses made of palm with a red poppy at the crossbar. There were literally thousands of them, and even as we stood there men and women and children came quietly and planted their crosses beside those already there.

And inside the Abbey?

I wish I could paint the picture to you in words you would never forget. We took our places at a side door in the quiet line that had begun its march in the early morning and in a few minutes found ourselves in the great Abbey. Only the chancel was lighted—the boy choir was chanting evensong. A deep red velvet rope outlined the slab under which lies the body of their unknown soldier. Four guards stood at the four corners. Heaped waist high upon the stone were red roses, placed there one by one even as we placed ours as we too paid our respects to the unknown dead—a steady stream of men and women from early day to dark—remembering.

Mr. Speaker, we, too, as a Nation have our Memorial Day. We, too, pay homage to our gallant dead who served their country on the battlefields of earth and sky and sea. This we shall do in all the cemeteries of this great land and those beyond the seas when Monday is upon us.

We here of the Congress of this indissoluble Union of great States have our own remembrance day when we come together to honor those who served their country in these halls through years that held both peace and war.

We have gathered here on this lovely spring afternoon in especial remembrance of those men to whom the gateway into the unseen has opened during the past year. Permit me to name them one by one that we may bring them more closely among us at this moment:

Senator JOHN H. OVERTON, Louisiana.

Senator HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, South Dakota.

Senator J. MELVILLE BROUGHTON, North Carolina.

Representative THOMAS L. OWENS, Illinois.

Representative MILTON H. WEST, Texas.

Representative JOHN J. DELANEY, New York.

Representative SOL BLOOM, New York.

Representative ANDREW L. SOMERS, New York.

Representative ROBERT L. COFFEY, JR., Pennsylvania.

We come to do them honor, these whose span of years is done, with the warmth of their personalities still with us and the echo of their voices still lingering in these halls. We come to commend them to the Almighty and to wish them godspeed on their next adventure.

As is our custom we have invited their families to come among us that they may know we share their loss, that we reach out our hands and hearts to them in their bereavement.

Friends, we welcome you. We hope that there may flow into you the warmth of this fellowship and that it may never grow cold. Especially do I welcome you, for I, too, have sat in those very seats with my sons and have been lifted up on this same tide of understanding. May you take with you from this hour of togetherness a new courage, and a deepened sense of what the years of service given here to our great country by the men you love meant to them and to the land they served. May you know beyond all shadow of doubt that "grief" can be and "should be, like joy, majestic, equable, sedate, confirming, cleansing, raising, making free, strong to consume small troubles, to command great thoughts, grave thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end"—Aubrey de Vere.

May you have learned ere this that grief is but a selfish thing, that death is one with life even as the river and the sea are one. May you have found that "in the depth of your hopes and desires lies your silent knowledge of the beyond, and like seeds dreaming beneath the snow your heart dreams of spring." May I urge you to "trust the dreams, for in them is hidden the gate to eternity"—Khali Gibran.

"A nation is not a tangible thing, not a building of bricks and mortar that will crash to ruins at the first strong blow." A nation is not its laws, its customs, its behavior, even its history. "It is an echo of the past, a whisper from the future, the whole bound together with the lives, the hopes, and the endeavors of millions of men and women"—Daphne du Maurier. The strength of a nation is the morale, the restraint of its people.

Our America was founded upon a dream and established upon a vision. To the peoples of the world, America stands as a symbol of strength and progress, of enlightened living. Let us remember that, whenever we listen for the echoes of other days, and lift our eyes and try to see over the cusp of tomorrow's dawn.

For 90 and more years these very walls have welcomed the men and women who have taken their turn here under the seals of the States of which the Union is made up, to formulate the laws that should protect the freedom which God in His wisdom permits us to enjoy. Insofar as they have had light they have endeavored to be faithful to their solemn oath to protect the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both without and within, the Constitution which gave us "a threefold cord that is not quickly broken"—Ecclesiastes 3: 7.

How marvelous that great document—that code under which all of us who are a part of government must function to protect the millions of simple men and women from the domination of other individuals and groups as well as that of government itself. Fluid, with its roots in the fundamental truths of man's very existence, containing within itself the formulas of necessary change.

For close to a century within this Chamber, and the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol, the laws of this great representative Republic have been made. Men have come here from every corner of the land to bring their particular points of view, their special contributions and lay them upon this altar. Distances are vast, both in miles and in backgrounds of thought. The clash of sectional thinking has often hurled itself back and forth as the spokesman of each area battled for particular interest. And then again the clear bell will ring from the tower of selfless patriotism and all hearts unite as if they were singing with Langston Hughes:

Let America be America again,
Let it be the dream it used to be.
Let it be the pioneer on the plain
Seeking a home where he himself is free.
Let America be the dream the dreamers dream—
Let it be the great strong land of love
Where never kings connive nor tyrants scheme.

—The Dream of America, Langston Hughes.

We sit here again today in this old-fashioned chamber where contention has flared, where compromise has been accomplished, where legislation has been brought forth. Above us the state seals have been a reminder that we are indeed a union of many different and differing groups. Our hearts are softened by our common loss, while before our inner eye pass these with whom we have shared the burden and the joy of service here. We shall miss them always.

Let us hope that the vibrations of loyalty and service of these many years have penetrated deep into these walls, that they may give back to those who listen the charge to be vigilant, the courage to be strong, lest freedom, the most cherished of all man's privileges, be taken from us.

These walls are saying to us even now:

There was a dream, that men could one day speak the thoughts of their own choosing.

There was a hope that men could one day stroll through streets at evening, unafraid.

There was a prayer that each could speak to his own God—in his own church.

That dream, that hope, that prayer became America!

Great strength, youthful heart, vast enterprise, hard work make it so.

Now that same America is the dream, the hope, the prayer of the world.

Our freedom, its dream. Our strength, its hope. Our swift race against time, its prayer.

We must not fail the world now.

We must not fail to share our freedom with it afterwards.

Keep singing, keep working, and fight for America.

—From The Flag Speaks.

Yes, this land we love was dreamed into being as all things are, for first must come the stirring of the idea and then the bringing it forth into form. But that is not all—for if it is not seized hold upon and built up stone by stone, arch by arch, spire by spire, it will lie quiet until some other comes and builds it to the skies.

When the dream has been dreamed and vision has brought it into being, men must have the courage to find out its depths and heights, its breadth and all its implications and the endurance to work unceasingly to make it live, to protect it from vandals, to share it with those who have it not.

This they have done in goodly measures, these in whose name we gather here—with those whose footsteps have grown faint with the years. May we add their courage and their longings to our own, for we are a Nation so truly wanting to do right, we Americans; but we still mistake the just wanting for the doing, for the being. Just wanting to be friends with others will not make us so. Much must first be built of trust, of confidence, of mutual respect, before there can be the strong handclasp of understanding.

Just crying aloud: Let there be peace, O Lord, peace in our time—will not bring peace. When shall we learn the lesson that if we really would end war, if we would preserve freedom, then must we—

Create great peace—
The peace that demands all of a man,
His love, his life, his veriest self;
Plunge him in the smelting fires of a work that becomes his child;
Coerce him to be himself at all hazards, with the toil and the mating that belong to him:
Compel him to serve—
Give him a hard peace: a peace of discipline and justice—
Kindle him with vision, invite him to joy and adventure;
Set him at work, not to create things,
But to create men,
Yes, himself.
Go search your heart, America—
Turn from machine to man,
Build, while there is yet time, a creative peace—
While there is yet time;
For if you reject great peace,
As surely as vile living brings disease
So surely shall your selfishness bring war.

—From 1914 and After War and Laughter, by James Oppenheim.

This same thought so forcefully given by James Oppenheim after the First World War was expressed to me in other language in 1945 by an ensign in our Naval Reserve. He wrote:

Be strong, curious, tenacious in your investigations and thinking on the various matters that come before you. Be critical of anything that tends to regulate our lives—demand facts, not fine words, from those who sell these things. Don't be afraid to let us struggle with our lives, for out of struggle comes strong people.

What wisdom in his words. "Do not be afraid to let us struggle with our lives."

Is it perhaps fear that gives birth to measures that would deprive our youth of struggle, of the compulsion to serve, of the discipline of justice? Is it fear that tempts us to give him something other than a hard peace? Are we afraid to turn loose the creative forces of our people to build the creative peace that Oppenheim has said is the one way to keep from war?

If this is so then let us use these precious moments of togetherness to clasp hands, and hearts, reviewing our faith in the God in whom we have put our trust that His power may strengthen our courage and add to it the wisdom and the carelessness of self that are the essentials of leadership. Let us reconsecrate ourselves to the preservation of freedom with all its implications of individual responsibility and of selfless recognition of the interdependence of men and of nations. Let us remind ourselves that only as we give shall we possess, that only as we strive shall we attain.

These men who were our colleagues only yesterday—and the many others who preceded them, have left a command to service upon us that we may not set aside. Their valiant souls were here among us so short a time ago, striving to serve America.

We salute you, comrades, and we pledge you our word that we shall not falter in the task of protecting freedom here at home. Nor shall we fail to hold the torch high in the darkness that enshrouds the world, that other peoples far across the sea may take fresh heart and go forward toward the dawn. To do this we do know that we must "put our hand into the hand of God for that shall be to us better than a light and safer than a known way"—King George VI. What lies ahead is uncharted territory, unknown ways, for the world has changed, all things are new and we who must walk here yet a little time must take a fresh hold on courage and on faith. And let us be quite certain that could we but hear these comrades of ours as they speak to us they might well be saying:

You must not weep or grieve for me, but see
My joy that all my earthly chains be broke.
I go to other fields, a fairer land—
New vistas, wider visions meet my eye,
There will be other labors for my hand.
And new adventures 'neath that other sky.

No sigh nor tears that dissipate the soul
Can build a lasting monument on earth
For rather would I see my life-work whole,
See you convert it to some last worth.

—A Message, by Roscoe Charles Wilson.

So we have come together for an hour sharing our sorrow, strengthening our faith, taking fresh courage for the work ahead—their work and ours.

Grant us Thy blessing, Lord.

Unveil oh Thou who are the sustenance of the universe, from whom all doth proceed, to whom all must return. Thou face of the true sun now hidden by a vase of golden light, that we may see the truth and do our whole duty on our long journey to Thy sacred seat.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1949

(Legislative day of Monday, May 23, 1949)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God, our Father, in a world where the very foundations seem to be shaken, we cherish this hushed and hallowed moment which so long ago the founding fathers set apart as an altar of prayer at the day's beginning. Here bowing with contrite hearts we would be sure of Thee and of spiritual resources before we go to meet the high solemnities of waiting tasks.

In the fateful conference of nations, now deliberating in the fair capital across the seas, strengthen the high resolve of those who strive to break the fetters which bind multitudes in regimes of coercion. Especially we pray for wisdom and guidance for those who stand and speak for America. In an hour when such vast issues are at stake may those who here serve, conscious of the great tradition in which they stand, rise to greatness of vision and soul as the anxious eyes of all the nations are upon this chamber of freedom. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on Senate bill 900, amending the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the conference report on Senate bill 900 is now being debated by the Senate. Another conference report, on House bill 3704, to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, has come over from the House. It is necessary that the conference report on House bill 3704 be adopted as soon as possible in order to make the bill immediately effective so that adequate revenue may be collected for the District of Columbia, as provided under the bill. So I ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily lay aside the conference report on Senate bill 900, and take up for immediate consideration the conference report on Senate bill 3704.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the distinguished majority leader whether the action proposed by him will in any way affect the present status of the conference report on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill. After action on the conference report dealing with the District of Columbia bill has been concluded, will the conference report on Senate bill 900 remain in the same status it now is?

Mr. LUCAS. The moment the conference report on House bill 3704 is disposed of the Senate will immediately return to consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 900.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for another inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the distinguished majority leader intend to announce the program for tomorrow, and what the Senate will do on Monday, Decoration Day?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to answer the question propounded by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. The pending business, which has been temporarily laid aside, is what is known as the unification bill. The moment we finish with the two conference reports we immediately return to that bill. Following that we hope to take up the central intelligence bill which has been reported by the Armed Services Committee. Following that we may even take up the basing-point bill, or perhaps the bill providing home rule for the District of Columbia.

There will be no session on Monday. I wish to make that announcement now so that Senators may make their plans accordingly. A number of Senators plan to deliver addresses at various places on Memorial Day. So far as I know, there will be no session on Saturday. However, we may run a little later than usual today and tomorrow because of conference reports and the importance of the legislation which is on the calendar at the present time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of this conference report at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before we take up the conference report, I ask unanimous consent that Senators who have bills or resolutions to introduce, or routine matters to be incorporated in the Appendix of the RECORD, as during the morning hour, may be permitted to do so without debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON ORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF GOVERNMENT (H. DOC. NO. 197)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, transmitting, pursuant to law, the concluding report of that Commission, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

JURISDICTION OVER NATURAL-GAS OPERATIONS—RESOLUTION OF COMMON COUNCIL OF WAUWATOSA, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received today from P. H. Riemer, a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Wauwatosa, Wis., in opposition to legislation which would deprive the FPC of jurisdiction over natural-gas operations. I believe that this matter will be of interest to my colleagues and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Wauwatosa resolution adopted by the common council and approved by Mayor William B. Knuese, be appropriately referred and printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Common Council of the City of Wauwatosa:

1. That opposition to said bills is hereby supported.

2. That the city clerk forward copies hereof to the Honorable CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI, Congressman for the Fourth District of Milwaukee County, and to the Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY and to Hon. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, United States Senators.

PUBLIC-WELFARE PROGRAMS—RESOLUTION OF WISCONSIN PUBLIC ASSISTANCE ASSOCIATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have received this morning from Joseph V. Krahn, of Kaukauna, Wis., the text of a resolution adopted by the Public Assistance Association of Wisconsin. The resolution expresses the views of the membership of the association in opposition to H. R. 2892, to amend the Social Security Act to enable States to establish more adequate public-welfare programs which is now being reviewed by the House Ways and Means Committee. I believe that the resolution will also be of interest to my colleagues, and I ask unanimous consent that its text be printed at this point in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE ASSOCIATION OF WISCONSIN,
Kaukauna, Wis., May 23, 1949.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Our association meeting at Neenah, Wis., on May 18 passed the following resolution:

"Be it hereby resolved, That we are opposed to bill H. R. 2892.

"It places 'home relief' in the same category as pensions, thereby tending to make it more permanent whereas it should be considered on a temporary basis.

"In the administration of 'home relief' the first consideration should always be rehabilitation. Relief in any form should never encourage idleness, lowering morale or suggest dependence on the Government.

"During normal periods 'home relief' is not a serious burden and can best be controlled and more economically administered locally.

"In trials of giving 'home relief' in cash instead of kind, it was found to be more costly. Cash is more acceptable, creates more applications and extends the stay on relief rolls. It will certainly take on the complexion of a pension if the Government is participating.

"At the time of serious unemployment the Federal Government can best assist the local communities through Federal participation in a local work program, which can be expanded or curtailed to meet conditions.

"After PWA, CWA, WERA, and WPA experience, it should be possible to develop a work program reasonably satisfactory and not due for too much criticism, certainly less criticism than the expenditure of vast sums for 'home relief' with no productive results."

We commend this matter for your consideration.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH V. KRAHN,
President, Public Assistance
Association of Wisconsin.

EXTENSION OF OFFICERS' RETIREMENT BENEFITS TO CERTAIN PERSONS OF WORLD WAR II

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize the extension of officers' retirement benefits to certain persons who while serving as enlisted men in the Army during World War II were given battlefield promotions to officer grade and were incapacitated for active service as a result of enemy action. It seems that under the present laws and regulations these men are not eligible for retirement. There are only a few of them, and I earnestly hope that the bill allowing these men who were given commissions on the battlefield and then were incapacitated may receive favorable consideration so as to make them eligible for retirement.

The bill (S. 1945) to authorize the extension of officers' retirement benefits to certain persons who while serving as enlisted men in the Army of the United States during World War II were given battlefield promotions to officer grade and were incapacitated for active service as a result of enemy action, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the junior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr.

The bill is open for further sponsors if other Senators care to add their names to the list I have given.

The bill (S. 1946) to establish a permanent National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, introduced by Mr. TAYLOR (for himself and others), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1946

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, following what appears to be a shocking and careless disregard of the national security by the Atomic Energy Commission, the demand has been raised that the present Chairman of that body be required to resign his position. As one who seriously opposed the appointment of the Chairman in the first place, I wish to associate myself with that demand. It is particularly significant, Mr. President, that the issue was raised first of all by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] who was perhaps more instrumental than any other Senator in bringing about the original confirmation. That he has found it imperatively necessary to withdraw his support from the Atomic Energy Commission Chairman is a fact which ought to impress every Senator and every American citizen.

I should like to recall a portion of a statement I made in this Chamber on March 31, 1947, when the confirmation of Mr. Lilienthal was being considered by the Senate. I said then, and I wish to repeat it now:

> Does a single Member of the Senate have any right to assume that America is so lacking in and devoid of leadership that we must accept a controversial, contradictory, cloudy figure as our selection to head the most powerful organization the mind of man has ever conceived? If we accept the premise that David Lilienthal, or any other individual, is, in spite of the serious doubts held by some of us, indispensable, we shall do the American Nation an irreparable injustice. If we confirm the nominee, as the Senate has the power to do, we are doing Mr. Lilienthal no favor. We leave the Nation confused and uncertain about the choice. We withhold from the chairman what he needs most—a sympathetic, devoted, understanding public. Unless the chairman maintains this relationship with the people of this land, his efforts are foredoomed to suspicion, argument, and failure.

Mr. President, the resignation of David Lilienthal would, to my mind, have a healthy effect, not only on the atomic-energy program, but also on the confidence of the American people in the men who today are responsible for our national security. This, however, represents only a partial solution to this question which the Congress must decide. The Atomic Energy Commission as presently constituted is to a large extent the creation and the creature of the same man, and of the group which surrounds him, that the Members of this Congress have so severely censured. The situation warrants a complete reevaluation of our atomic-energy policy. We have experimented with a slipshod control of our major war-making potential, the atomic bomb. We can no longer afford to permit this kind of carelessness to place our security at the mercy of a clique of men whose political philosophy is seemingly devoid of adequate consideration for our national security.

The Congress of the United States ought now to reconsider the question of whether the atomic-energy program should be returned to the control of the armed forces, where it logically belongs, and whether we should wipe out the Atomic Energy Commission as it is presently constituted, so that we shall begin to build a new and sound program upon which to base the national defense. I do not believe we can take the Commission as it stands today and bring about by partial work, by partial reform, by demands for the resignation of a single individual, a new program in which the American people can have complete confidence.

In order that the question may be reopened and reconsidered in the light of recent efforts, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to abolish the Atomic Energy Commission. The bill would establish in its place a Commission consisting of the four Secretaries of our National Defense Establishment, the three Chiefs of Staff, and an atomic scientist of a national reputation. I wish to emphasize that this is not a bill for purely military control. Five of the seats on the Commission, a clear majority, will be held by civilians, and only three by military officers.

The principal advantage of this type of control, as I can see it now, is to place within the security set-up of the Defense Establishment the responsibility for protecting atomic-energy developments and atomic-energy secrets. It is conceivable, Mr. President, that the Congress may, in its wisdom, develop a definite, positive plan and program for the control of atomic energy. I do not propose the bill as a complete solution, by any means. My purpose is to bring the broad question of atomic security up for reevaluation, so that the Congress may have an opportunity to rewrite the existing laws, and in order that the alarming conditions which have just been revealed will not again rise up to shake and plague confidence and jeopardize our future.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1952) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, to provide for the security of the defenses of the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. CAIN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE—AMENDMENT

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1057) for the relief of John Keith was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIDS ON AIR MAIL CARRIAGE—LETTER FROM E. V. RICKENBACKER AND REPLY BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the insertion in the RECORD of a letter from "Eddy" Rickenbacker, president and general manager of Eastern Air Lines, addressed to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, dealing with a proposal for bids on the carrying of mail on five air-line systems. I ask unanimous consent also that the reply of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the letter also be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EASTERN AIR LINES, INC.,
New York, N. Y., May 25, 1949.

Hon. EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The questions concerning Eastern Air Lines' willingness to operate without subsidy, propounded to me by members of your committee yesterday at the completion of my formal statement, prompt me to offer for the record a supplement to my remarks.

In order that there may be no doubt as to the meaning of my statement yesterday, Eastern Air Lines, Inc., makes the following proposals to your committee, and to all interested agencies of our Government:

1. Eastern Air Lines will, if given the opportunity, operate the domestic system of National Airlines, Inc. (between New Orleans, Florida, and New York), on Eastern's nonsubsidy mail rate. National received $1,289,000 for carrying 323,000 ton-miles of mail in 1948. At Eastern's mail rate the annual cost to the Government would be $212,000, saving the taxpayers $1,077,000 per year.

2. Eastern will, if given the opoprtunity, operate the entire system of Delta Airlines, Inc. (between Dallas-Fort Worth, Atlanta, Charleston, Chicago, Miami), on Eastern's nonsubsidy mail rate. Delta received $2,754,000 for carrying 927,000 ton-miles of mail in 1948. At Eastern's mail rate the annual cost to the Government would be $603,000, saving the taxpayers $2,151,000 per year.

3. Eastern will, if given the opportunity, operate the entire system of Capital Airlines, Inc. (between Great Lakes, Washington, Norfolk, Memphis, New York, Pittsburgh, Atlanta, Birmingham, New Orleans) on Eastern's nonsubsidy mail rate. Capital received $4,905,000 for carrying 884,000 ton-miles of mail in 1948. At Eastern's mail rate the annual cost to the Government would be $575,000, saving the taxpayers $4,330,000 per year.

4. Eastern will, if given the opportunity, operate the entire domestic system of Chicago and Southern Airlines, Inc. (Chicago, Detroit, New Orleans, Houston), on Eastern's nonsubsidy mail rate. Chicago and Southern received $1,881,000 for carrying 482,000 ton-miles of mail in 1948. At Eastern's mail rate the annual cost to the Government would be $313,000, saving the taxpayers $1,568,000 per year.

5. Eastern will, if given the opportunity, operate the system of Colonial Airlines, Inc. (Montreal, New York, Washington), on Eastern's nonsubsidy mail rate. Colonial received $1,178,000 for carrying 82,000 ton-miles of mail in the above-mentioned area in 1948. At Eastern's mail rate the annual cost to the Government would be $53,000, saving the taxpayers $1,125,000 per year.

Eastern Air Lines, Inc., hereby offers to operate the entire domestic systems of any one or more of the five above-mentioned air carriers at a nonsubsidy rate.

According to my calculation, the five above-named air carriers carried 2,701,000 ton-miles of mail in the above-mentioned areas in 1948 and received an average of $4.45 per ton-mile for doing so, aggregating $12,077,000 received from the Government by them in 1948; whereas at Eastern's rate which would range from 60 cents to 65 cents per ton-mile, Eastern could carry the 2,701,000 aggregate ton-miles for a total of $1,676,000, effecting a total annual saving to the taxpayers of $10,401,000.

With assurance of my high regards, I am,
Yours sincerely,
E. V. RICKENBACKER,
President and General Manager.

MAY 26, 1949.

Capt. E. V. RICKENBACKER,
President, Eastern Air Lines, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR CAPTAIN RICKENBACKER: The phenomenal proposal made in your letter of May 25, to operate the domestic systems of five air lines in the territories which Eastern Air Lines now serves, and to carry the mail over them at Eastern's "no subsidy" mail rate, is most challenging. I am sure that you are aware that it cannot be effectuated by this Committee, and that under the Civil Aeronautics Act, the Civil Aeronautics Board is the proper agency to consider it. I am, therefore, forwarding your letter to the Board for their recommendation. Doubtless the law would need to be amended to authorize them to direct a merger or consolidation.

During our investigation pursuant to Senate Resolution 50, we will examine the advisability of changing certain of the fundamental tenets of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, which would be required by your proposal. In order that we may have a better understanding of the precise nature of your suggestion, will you clarify several matters.

You do not suggest in your letter how you propose to obtain control of these air lines so as to accomplish the desired end. It would be interesting to know whether it would be through merger, purchase, suspension of certificate, or by other means.

The description of routes by cities and areas given in your letter does not appear to include the "entire system" of each of the air lines mentioned. Therefore, would you render present-day service to each city on the routes of the five carriers mentioned accepting the present CAB route service restrictions, and would you give each city at least the same amount of service as the present companies now render? Or, to put it another way, would you contemplate a reduction in the total unduplicated miles operated? Does your proposal contemplate taking over all of the personnel and property of the other companies? Would you purchase their stock and assume the payment of their debts and other obligations? I appreciate that your letter does not constitute an acquisition proposal, but these matters are important to understand the significance of the proposal.

During the course of your testimony you will recall that Senator Brewster discussed the advantages and feasibility of Eastern Air Lines acquiring and operating the Northeast Air Lines system. Northeast Air Lines is conspicuously absent from your proposal, and as this would seem to be a logical system to consider if the general principles of your proposal are adopted, will you advise us whether your proposal includes Northeast Air Lines, in conjunction with others or alone, and if not, the restrictions and subsidy mail rate that you would recommend.

I might say that the Committee is not yet convinced that there is no element of subsidy in the mail rate now being paid Eastern Air Lines. At least the Civil Aeronautics Board was unable to state what portion of the "service rate" which Eastern and other carriers receive was compensatory and what portion was subsidy.

You may be sure the Committee will give full consideration to the principles involved in your proposal. Your letter will be made part of the record.

Sincerely,

EDWIN C. JOHNSON,
Chairman, Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

"'SEC. 23. (a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all of the following-named beverages manufactured by a holder of a manufacturer's license and on all of the said beverages imported or brought into the District of Columbia by a holder of a wholesaler's license, except beverages as may be sold to a dealer licensed under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States and not licensed under this Act, and on all beverages imported or brought into the District of Columbia by a holder of a retailer's license, a tax at the following rates to be paid by the licensee in the manner hereinafter provided:

"'(1) A tax of 15 cents on every wine-gallon of wine containing more than 14 per centum of alcohol by volume, except champagne or sparkling wine or any wine artificially carbonated, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (2) a tax of 22½ cents on every wine-gallon of champagne or sparkling wine or any wine artificially carbonated, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (3) a tax of 75 cents on every wine-gallon of spirits and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon; (4) and a tax of $1.25 on every wine-gallon of alcohol and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such gallon.'"

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, this bill provides that the Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation who have the authority for directing the business and the affairs of a $5,000,000,000 corporation shall be appointed by and hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture. The bill which was passed by the Senate and sent to conference provided that the Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation should be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Senate conferees receded from that provision in the conference, and the provision giving the Secretary the sole power of appointment was adopted in its stead.

Mr. President, I have very grave doubt as to the constitutionality of the proposed bill. Article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution of the United States provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

The proposed law vests the right of appointment in the Secretary of Agriculture. So the question is whether the Directors of this $5,000,000,000 Corporation are inferior officers within the meaning of this provision of the Constitution.

I believe it has been generally understood that inferior officers, as the statement is used in that provision, mean those who do not exercise policy-making powers. In this case we are dealing with officers who have policy-making powers over a vast field of governmental affairs. They have the policy-making power over the expenditure of $5,000,000, or any part thereof. I do not believe that by any stretch of the imagination officers having such authority can be fairly considered to be inferior officers. Certainly they cannot properly be regarded as officials who do not exercise policy-making powers. For some reason, the bill gives the Senate the right to confirm the appointments of the members of an advisory board, which has no policy-making power, no authority, but merely can meet at stated intervals and give the Secretary of Agriculture the benefit of such advice as its members may see fit to offer. Mr. President, I believe this provision violates the spirit of the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred, if indeed it does not violate the express letter of the Constitution itself.

The Members of the Senate will recall the very celebrated statement of Aaron Burr, then Vice President of the United States, who as such was the Presiding Officer of the Senate, to the effect that—

If the Constitution be destined ever to perish by the sacrilegious hands of the demagogue or the usurper, which God avert, its expiring agonies will be witnessed on this—

That is to say, the Senate—floor.

Mr. President, if we, the Members of this body, are not prepared to assert our constitutional prerogatives and responsibilities under the Constitution, it is clear that no one else is going to assert them for us.

A great many thoughtful Americans have been disturbed recently at the constant enhancement of the power of the executive branch of the Government at the expense of the legislative branch. We are dealing here with a glaring instance of that sort of thing. I wish to recall several instances of that kind which have occurred rather recently. During the days when he was Secretary of State, Gen. George C. Marshall one day simply observed at a press conference that the Government of the United States approves and accepts" the recommendations of the London Conference for the disposition of western Germany. The question as to the disposition of western Germany was debated at great length in the House of Commons, in London, and in the Legislative Assembly in Paris. Yet the head of an executive department of the United States Government brushed the whole thing aside, and announced ex cathedra that a certain proposed government had been accepted on behalf of the United States. That was one press conference.

Another press conference to which I wish to invite attention took place some time ago in the White House. The reporters who were attending the President of the United States on that occasion were told that he had the sole power to halt strikes affecting the Nation's welfare, without additional authority. He said, in effect, that the powers of the President are sufficient to meet any national emergency. A somewhat bemused reporter asked him where those powers could be found. The President replied that the reporter should read the history of the country. He said that whenever an emergency has arisen, the President has found authority. He added that in time of emergency he felt that the President has immense power to do what is right for the country. In other words, Mr. President, under this theory he has the right in time of emergency to bypass entirely the Congress of the United States, to do what is right for the country.

I do not wish to belabor the point, but I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to a third instance in which the constitutional powers, prerogatives, and authority of the Senate have been bypassed in recent times. Mr. Truman's predecessor in the White House was the inventor, I believe, of the "executive agreement" dealing with foreign affairs, by which it became unnecessary to secure the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate to important international agreements, for which such a vote in the Senate would be required if submitted as a treaty.

Mr. President, this body has not always been entirely inert and unattentive to its constitutional responsibilities. This morning I had occasion to look up some of the occasions on which the rights and prerogatives of the Senate have been asserted by Members of this body. I see the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] sitting in the Chamber. I read a very striking statement he made a few years ago about the way in which the processes of democracy were being undermined by the failure to recognize and carry out the constitutional provisions with reference to the powers and duties of the Senate. Similarly, I found a very striking report made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], in which he asserted the right of the Senate to confirm the appointment of all important officials of the Government. He introduced a bill, Senate bill 575, and submitted a report on it, dated April 14, 1943. That bill provided that the Senate should have the right to confirm the appointments of all officers receiving compensation in excess of $4,500. Attached to the report is a table showing the large number of officials in various branches of the Government who were receiving compensation in excess of that amount.

The report says:

> There was a very good reason for including in the Constitution a method by which appointments in the Federal Government could be controlled. That reason was well known to those who drafted the Constitution, with the taste of despotic tyranny still on their lips. That reason has not changed. It is still with us today. In fact, it is of even greater importance now than in all the history of our Government. Specifically, it has been ably summed up in the words of Abraham Lincoln: "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

In arguing for the bill and in summing up its conclusions, the committee, in its report, says this:

> Your committee believes that the method provided in the bill for revesting control in the people, through their legally elected representatives, is unobjectionable because it in no way interferes with the war effort; it disrupts no agency of Government; it lays no withering touch upon the merit system established by act of Congress under the classified civil service, but rather strengthens and upholds that system; it implements and assures the selection of competent persons of unquestioned ability to administer the laws of the United States; and, at the same time, it assures that appointments shall hereafter be made in the manner prescribed by the Constitution. In addition to this, it insures reasonable control and supervision by the people, through their representatives, of the Government itself and of its operations.

When a bill such as the pending one comes before the Senate, one cannot help but recall that the Constitution of the United States begins with the very significant words, "We, the people." I know that in some quarters it is the fashion now to talk of the Constitution as being outdated, and perhaps a number of people are not particularly interested in what the founding fathers said about the Constitution. But I want to read what Alexander Hamilton said in the Federalist about this power, this authority, this duty of the Senate to confirm important officials of the Government. I read from the Federalist of April 1, 1788:

> To what purpose then require the cooperation of the Senate? I answer, that the necessity of their concurrence would have a powerful, though in general a silent, operation. It would be an excellent check upon a spirit of favoritism in the President, and would tend greatly to prevent the appointment of unfit characters from State prejudice, from family connection, from personal attachment, or from a view to popularity. In addition to this it would be an efficacious source of stability in the administration.
> It will readily be comprehended that a man who has himself the sole disposition of offices would be governed much more by his private inclinations and interest, than when he was bound to submit the propriety of his choice to the discussion and determination of a different and independent body; and that body an entire branch of the legislature.

Mr. President, let us look at the RECORD to see what reasons are given by the proponents of the bill for disregarding the advice of the founding fathers in this respect and bypassing the Senate in the appointment of important officials of the Government. I read, from page 6790 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, a colloquy between the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, making the report for the conferees, and the Senator from Missouri, as follows:

> Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator why, in the judgment of the conferees, it was advisable to depart from the usual and customary principle of confirmation by the Senate of members of an important executive board.
> Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The main reason is that the House would not consent to confirmation by the Senate. We were forced to accept that provision. We spent four sessions in trying to arrive at an agreement on two or three points. This is one point upon which I am sure the House of Representatives would not have yielded.

I observe that the report on behalf of the House is not signed by three of its managers, so there must have been considerable dissent in the conference with respect to the bill. The colloquy continues:

> Mr. KEM. Without going into detail, will the Senator from Oklahoma outline the reasons advanced by the conferees on the part of the House for taking that position?
>
> Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand the situation, it is this: The Congress passes laws directing the Secretary of Agriculture to do certain things, and we hold him responsible for carrying out the duties thus imposed upon him by the laws passed by Congress.
> The position taken by the House of Representatives, as I understand it, is that the Congress must give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to carry out the functions imposed upon him by the laws passed by Congress, and that in order to be able to do so, he must have a Board upon which he can rely.

The Constitution vests in the President the primary duty to carry out the laws of the United States, and yet the members of his Cabinet are themselves subject to confirmation by the Senate. The Secretary of Defense is confirmed by the Senate, as is every commissioned officer in the armed forces. I have never heard it contended that this prevents the President from properly discharging his duties and responsibilities as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, or that there was any lack of flexibility in the operation of the armed forces merely because officers of the Army must be confirmed by the Senate.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that the reasons assigned for disregarding this long-settled practice in the case of the very powerful board in question are insufficient. I believe the Senate should reject the conference report, and should undertake, in regular course, to have agreed upon, a bill which will recognize the traditional constitutional prerogatives of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the experience of the distinguished junior Senator from Missouri relative to the work of advisory boards? My reason for asking the question is, it seems that those who favor the provision requiring confirmation of the Advisory Board by the Senate do so on the ground that, in the light of the work done by other advisory boards, it is unnecessary to confirm members of such a board as the one in question. I may not have stated the case exactly, but, in a sense, the answer given by proponents of the measure is that it is unnecessary for the Congress to confirm such appointees. That is suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with appointments to this permanent board. What is the experience of the junior Senator from Missouri relative to advisory boards?

Mr. KEM. My experience and observation indicate that they do not have any authority at all, that they are debating societies or discussion groups. They meet and discuss questions. Their deliberations are academic and largely futile, unless they are given some power and authority. Our discussions in the Senate would likewise be largely futile if on some day we could not reach the point of voting and deciding the issue. Similarly, the estimable gentlemen from various parts of the country constituting this advisory board will never in the nature of things reach a point when they can vote and decide a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it not also a fact that usually advisory boards are called in after a policy has been developed? The policy, of course, is submitted to them, but is it not a fact that it is more or less sold to the advisory board after it has been developed, and all they do is hastily to approve what has been done, and then go back to their respective homes? Is not that about as much force and effect advisory boards can have?

Mr. KEM. That certainly is their force and effect, so far as my own observation is concerned. But I should like to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that if, by any chance, the advisory board did not approve the policy submitted, the policy would go into effect regardless of the opinion of the advisory board.

Mr. WHERRY. That was the next question I wanted to ask the Senator. Even though the policy should be sold to the board, it simply adds prestige to what the Department has done, because, in the final analysis, even though the board should disagree, it has no right to change the policy.

Mr. KEM. On the point of prestige, I hope that no one will be inclined to think that an effort is being made to make fun of the Senate or shall we say make a joke at the expense of the Senate in this bill, which solemnly confers on the Senate the power of confirming members of the Advisory Board, but denies to the Senate any right or any say in connection with the members of the Board which controls the Commodity Corporation.

CONFIRMATION OF SUNDRY NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that sundry nominations in the Army, Navy, and Air Force be confirmed and the President notified thereof. May I say that these recommendations come from the Committee on Armed Services unanimously, and that no objection has been filed in connection with any of the names appearing on the list. Most of the nominations are in minor grades. A great many of those involved are graduates of Annapolis and West Point, and the services are anxious to have the nominations confirmed so that commissions can be issued to them, to be available at the time these men are graduated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that another point is that it saves the printing costs to a great extent, and follows the customs and practice which have heretofore been indulged in with reference to such appointments.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator. The reason why the Senator from Maryland interrupts proceedings and asks indulgence of his colleagues in this manner is that it saves a great many thousands of dollars in the printing bill.

Mr. KEM. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask whether these men whose names the Senator has just presented for confirmation are as important as are the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which is carrying on a $5,000,000,000 business.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I am not familiar with all the ramifications of the bill which the Senator has been discussing, but the Senator's question almost answers itself. The Senator from Maryland would be compelled to reply that he does not think most of them are as important. Some of them, however, are in the top military level.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none.

Without objection, the nominations are confirmed, and the President will be immediately notified.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask that the colloquy which has just occurred be printed at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I object. I would rather have it exactly where it occurred, otherwise it may lose such point as it has.

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the request is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION CHARTER ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 900) to amend the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri this question: The permanent Board provided for in the bill will be on the job each and every day of the year; at least, it is supposed to be. Is that correct?

Mr. KEM. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. They, in turn, also help to formulate policies, do they not? Is not that the intention of the bill?

Mr. KEM. That brings up a very important distinction. If the directors are appointed by the President for a definite term and are confirmed by the Senate, they have a vested right in their position, and if a question arises on which they do not agree, they can stick their feet in the sand. The Supreme Court will sustain them in their position to the extent that they cannot be fired. But the persons appointed by the Secretary specifically and directly, will hold office, under the terms of the bill, at the pleasure of the Secretary, and he can kick them out any day if they should say something he does not like.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his answer to the question, because I think there is a vast difference, as he has pointed out, between the work of the permanent committee and of the advisory committee, in the respect to which the Senator has so eloquently referred in his answer.

Mr. KEM. In my own view, the advisory commitee is wholly without either authority or power. That was admitted by one of the able apologists for the committee report yesterday on the floor, who finally, after a series of questions, said they had no authority.

I should like to invite the Senator's attention, if he does not mind, to the colloquy which occurred yesterday. I wish to read from page 6792 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where the colloquy is shown between the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the junior Senator from Missouri. The senior Senator from Vermont was asked a series of questions as to whether the advisory committee had any authority. The senior Senator from Vermont replied at considerable length. Finally this question and answer appear:

> Mr. KEM. I realize the Senator from Vermont is not on the stand, and I do not want to press him unduly, but if the advisory board has any authority I wish the Senator from Vermont would advise us what it is.
> Mr. AIKEN. It has no authority.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. KEM. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask, very respectfully, that the junior Senator from Missouri answer this question: Is it not true that if Congress confirms the appointments on this board, we have not only fulfilled the constitutional processes, which I think we should not abdicate, but does it not place the director in a little different position with respect to his responsibility, regardless of his integrity, granting that he will do what he feels is just—does it not place him under a somewhat different responsibility than if he were solely responsible to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KEM. I would say "Yes"; but I should like to strike out the word "somewhat," and definitely and categorically say "Yes," because he is assured tenure of office.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. He is not only responsible to the Secretary of Agriculture but, in turn, he is certainly responsible to the Senate which confirmed his nomination.

Mr. KEM. And to the American people.

Mr. WHERRY. And to the American people.

Mr. KEM. He is an officer representing the American people, appointed by the President, and confirmed by the elected representatives of the people.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Why should not these directors be confirmed?

Mr. KEM. I spent some time yesterday trying to bring out any reason, and I am still unable to answer the Senator's question. I see on the floor the able and distinguished Senator from New Mexico, who is one of the managers on the part of the Senate. Perhaps the Senator from New Mexico would like to answer the question.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have a deep respect for the former Secretary of Agriculture, and I certainly do not want to engage in any prolonged colloquy with him, but I feel that it might be appropriate to get the views of the Senator from New Mexico, inasmuch as this issue was brought up on the floor of the Senate prior to the time the bill was passed, and the argument was advanced, relative to the permanent board, that it would be difficult to get career men to serve because possibly they would not be confirmed if they were appointed by the Secretary.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Mexico be permitted to answer the question which the Senator from Nebraska has put to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if one reason advanced is not that a career man appointed from the Department of Agriculture might have difficulty in being confirmed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from Nebraska. I should like to answer his question in my own time, and I had hoped to have opportunity to speak next.

Let me say now, however, that I recognize the feelings of the Senator from Missouri. He expressed them strongly and steadily before the Committee on Agriculture, and I have great respect for his opinion on this matter. But experience has taught us that the best people on the board of directors, who handle the day-by-day operations, are drawn from the Department of Agriculture. Those people have more experience than anyone else who could be brought into the Department.

When we had this matter under discussion on a previous occasion, I tried to say that Mr. Gage, of the Tobacco Branch, had far more experience than any one individual who might be taken from any other place. The same might apply to the directors of the other branches. It was my feeling that from an operating standpoint those men of long years in the Department of Agriculture could serve well as members of the board. Under the bill they are not subject to confirmation. Those who would be subject to confirmation would be the members of the advisory committee, who would lay down policies for the Secretary. We had in mind the possibility of enlisting such men as Will Myers, of Cornell University. I know of no finer person, but I doubt very much if Will Myers would permit his name to go before the Congress for appointment to an administrative job within the Department. We can, however, guarantee him the security of tenure, which the Senator from Missouri is talking about, by putting him on the Advisory Committee.

I do not wish to take much time of the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri ask unanimous consent that I may ask a further question?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Nebraska be permitted to continue the colloquy as they see fit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me propound this question to the distinguished Senator. What objection is there to requiring confirmation? I agree 100 percent with the idea of getting career men on the permanent board. But why should they not be confirmed? It seems to me that if the distinguished Senator from New Mexico had been selected by the present Secretary to serve on the permanent board, the Senate would unanimously have confirmed his appointment. I am asking the distinguished Senator whether he feels that a career man would have greater difficulty in being confirmed in the Senate than would some other person?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, exactly; for the very reasons the Senator from Missouri suggested. He said that if they did not like what the Secretary was doing, they could stick their feet in the sand and stand there. The important responsibility for carrying out the price support program rests upon the shoulders of the Secretary of Agriculture. We put it there, and it would be wholly wrong to set up a board which could resist the Secretary of Agriculture while he was trying to do what the Congress said he should do.

Mr. WHERRY. Would any one attempt to persuade the Secretary to do otherwise than what the Congress said he should do? If he were not doing what the Congress said he should do, would not the permanent members of the board be the ones to pass on that?

Mr. ANDERSON. But he might not be doing what was contrary to the wishes of Congress. It would be a matter of judgment, and the Secretary, relying on his own conscience and the advice of the staff, might decide to seek the advice of the board. Members of the board, as has frequently happened, may have different ideas. If they are placed in an independent status, where they proceed without regard to the final wishes of the Secretary of Agriculture, then I say the possibility arises that the Secretary of Agriculture could better do the work.

Mr. WHERRY. Then the Senator feels that when the Secretary of Agriculture decides on a policy, the permanent board should go along with him, even though members of the board might feel that the Secretary should not initiate the policy?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think so. I do think he should give himself the benefit of their advice. I am happy to say that I found the board of the Commodity Credit Corporation differing with me on a couple of occasions. I once yielded to their votes. In the other case I followed my own judgment.

Mr. WHERRY. That Board was confirmed by the Senate, was it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; there never has been a board confirmed.

Mr. WHERRY. The permanent board?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it was selected solely by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. The Board previously was confirmed.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not refer to the last 12 months. The boards with which I dealt were not confirmed.

Mr. WHERRY. If the present board had been confirmed, would the difficulty which has come about have arisen?

Mr. ANDERSON. After the law was signed, the Senate adjourned, and the names were not sent to the Senate. Subsequently, I think, the Senate was in special session, and no names were sent. No names have been sent to this date. I am unable to explain that, but I think that no names have been sent.

Mr. WHERRY. In spite of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, I cannot yet understand why there is objection to confirmation of career men, because it is my feeling that if the name of a career man were sent to the Senate, he would be confirmed.

I ask the distinguished Senator this question: Should there not be a board which could exercise independent judgment? That is what the board is for, so that if the Secretary initiates a policy with which a member of the board does not agree, he should be able to express himself, and not have to agree with the Secretary, if he is so inclined.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I should think that anyone who believes in the American system of checks and balances would have difficulty in saying otherwise. Of course a dictatorship is more efficient. If we want to get an absolutely efficient Government, we can do away with the Constitution of the United States and set up a Hitler or a Mussolini, and give him all authority and all power, and for a time at least have efficiency. But the rights of the people would not be protected as they are under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. KEM. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senate confirms officers in other departments, does it not?

Mr. KEM. Yes; it does.

Mr. WHERRY. The question of military advice is much more important at times than the advice of a board such as the one we are discussing, is it not?

Mr. KEM. I should certainly think so.

Mr. WHERRY. That might apply in situations much more acute than one involving a board such as the one we are discussing. If the Senate should abdicate its function of confirming these appointees in the case of the Department of Agriculture, why should it not, on the same theory, abandon the confirmation of Under Secretaries under the Secretary of Defense, and other important appointive officers?

Mr. KEM. In my judgment it is just a case of the camel getting its nose under the tent. The policy started here, and the process of continually chipping away the authority, the prerogatives, the dignity, and the prestige of the United States Senate will be continued. Let me say that it is passing strange that Members of the Senate themselves should be here seeking to abdicate their constitutional function by urging instead of resisting this process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I am greatly interested, of course, in the subject now before the Senate. I regret that I shall perhaps take more time than I should, but I do want to comment on the situation, because I think the question before us is very fundamental and is going to be with us for a long time.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. KEM], for whose integrity I have the greatest respect, has spoken of a system of checks and balances, and finds himself unable to understand how a Senator can stand on this floor and advocate the refusal of the right of confirmation by the Senate. I say to him that in administrative responsibility one man must do a job, and in administering the far-flung empire of the Department of Agriculture, if we allow its authority to be divided in a half a dozen different directions we will never have an administrative unit that is worth considering. Therefore, I say to the Senate that the place for consideration of checks and balances is when the Senate confirms the Secretary of Agriculture and when the Senate confirms his associates.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from New Mexico if the form of government he is advocating consists of the President, heads of the executive departments confirmed by the Senate, but with no further intervention on the part of the Senate at all?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not with respect to the armed services, but otherwise nearly exactly what the Senator has said, and I will tell the Senate why.

Mr. KEM. Why should there be intervention in connection with the armed services?

Mr. ANDERSON. A wholly different situation exists with respect to the armed services than with respect to the agency we are discussing.

Mr. KEM. In what respect?

Mr. ANDERSON. In the case of the armed services, we are dealing with career people, and we have always taken the position that those who are to lead our children in time of war should have their nominations confirmed by the Senate. One of the first men I appointed to the Military Academy was the son of very distinguished Republican parents. I appointed him because when my boy got ready to join the Army I knew he would not ask the politics of his commanding officer.

Mr. KEM. Are there not career men in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; but I think they are in a quite different situation.

Mr. KEM. I ask the Senator if there are no sons of Republican parents in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. Sometimes I think there are too many. But I agree with the Senator that there are.

Mr. KEM. Then why the distinction between the Department of National Defense on the one hand and the Department of Agriculture on the other?

Mr. ANDERSON. I tried to explain that. I think it is a question of leading a boy into battle where he may lose his life.

Mr. KEM. I understand the reason for it is that the men in the armed forces are career men, and many of them sons of Republican parents.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I did not say that at all. But it is all right.

Mr. KEM. The record will show what the Senator said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico how he reconciles his view that we should not confirm these five men who are going to control a $5,000,000,000 corporation, when at the same time the Senate will have to confirm a postmaster who may have to handle only two or three thouhand dollars of receipts in a year?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know that I can answer to the Senator's satisfaction, but I shall try to deal with the situation we are considering.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from New Mexico agree with me that in time of war the directors of this corporation will be holding more responsible positions than will many of the officers in the armed services whom the Senate confirms?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, I agree.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I am vitally interested in the answer the Senator from New Mexico gave to the Senator from Missouri with respect to the military situation. The Senator from New Mexico differentiated between the importance of those connected with the military, and civilians. The Senator from Delaware brought up a question relative to confirmation of postmasters. And, considering Government officials who are confirmed by the Senate, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretaries of the various other departments, and other officials in charge of civil functions throughout the Government are all confirmed by the Senate. Therefore, it is not enough simply to differentiate between the military and, for example, officials in the Department of Agriculture. Because all through the whole system of government we find that civilian officials, appointed by the President, are confirmed by the Senate, do we not?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, but I hope that there is some differentiation made. The distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday asked the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] the following question:

> How does the Senator from Vermont reconcile that action—
>
> Concerning the Hoover report—
> with the action taken here?

He had previously said that he understood that the Senator from Vermont was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hoover Commission Report which was adopted in the Senate a few days ago.

> How does the Senator from Vermont reconcile that action with the action taken here? Is not the taking away from the Senate of the power to confirm the directors a direct contradiction of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission?

Mr. President, I think we should find out what the Hoover Commission reported. First, I should like to refer to the Hoover report which deals with Federal business enterprises specifically. I turn to page 10, to recommendation 1 (f) which reads as follows:

> That where boards or part-time boards are established they be wholly advisory and be appointed by the President.

That is the Hoover report. What the Senator from Delaware read from was a recommendation of the task force, and it had nothing to do with the recommendation of the Hoover Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from New Mexico mean to say that the board of directors is a part-time board or a full-time board of directors? He read from the recommendation of the Hoover Commission, in which the expression "part-time directors" was used. I am talking about the full-time board of directors.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me read the language again:

> That where boards or part-time boards—
>
> Both of them—
> are established they be wholly advisory.

Now, I read that and say, to paraphrase Paul, "That which ye have worshiped without knowing, come I to declare unto you."

The Hoover report has made that recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand the Senator to interpret that language to mean also the RFC Board of Directors?

Mr. ANDERSON. I come to that in a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a board; is it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. I shall show what happens to the RFC, if the Senator will be patient with me.

Then I want to turn next to section 1 (g) as follows:

> That where these corporations are located in the departments or major Government agencies the heads of such agencies or representatives designated by them serve as ex officio chairmen of their advisory boards.

That is from the Hoover document Federal Business Enterprises, page 10.

Notice that the Senate conferees by putting in "an advisory board" have followed to the very letter the recommendations of the Hoover Commission on Reorganization of the Government, and the conference report, by limiting the actual board of directors to employees of the Department surely follow the recommendations in the Hoover report.

But for additional information I desire to turn to page 8 of the report on Federal Business Enterprises, under the heading, "Defects in the organization of Government corporate enterprises," and consider paragraph (c) which lists the defects. Paragraph (c) reads:

> Most of these agencies are within executive departments, but some have independent status and their activities are not adequately coordinated with those of the executive branch.

That is what I was trying to say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, the minority leader; that where there are independent agencies their activities are not coordinated with the executive branch, and therefore that is held to be bad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Hoover Commission in its report go further and say, with respect to the Commodity Credit Corporation, that either one of two programs should be adopted; either the board of directors should be free from the need for confirmation, and the activities of the Corporation should be made a part of those of the Department of Agriculture, and that the Secretary of Agriculture should come before Congress with respect to matters connected with it, or else the board of directors should be set up as an independent board?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, there is a recommendation about that which I thought was in the task-force report, not in the Hoover Commission report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not what the Senator from New Mexico is proposing at this time a consolidation of the two reports, taking out of each of the reports that of which he approves?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. I am reading only from the Hoover Commission report. The Senator from Delaware read from the recommendations of the Task Force. Let me go a step further. I have here the recommendations respecting the Department of Agriculture. Look at recommendation No. 2 on page 8 of the report on the Department of Agriculture, in which this statement is found:

> All officials below the Under Secretary and the Assistant Secretaries should, where possible, be appointed from the career services.

Under the Hoover Commission scheme the Commodity Credit Corporation and all its activities are moved under the Commodity Adjustment Service. Under the Hoover report they are not merely independent boards. They are not only under the Secretary, but they are under the Under Secretary; they are under two Assistant Secretaries; under the Administrative Assistant to the Secretary. Below that comes the Commodity Adjustment Service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that same recommendation do they recommend that we carry over the four and three-quarter billion borrowing power, and confer that upon the Secretary of Agriculture exclusively?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the Senator is quoting from the task force report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am asking the question. Does the Senator find that recommendation in the book from which he is reading?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not find it in the book. Perhaps the Senator can find it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not in that book.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it is in the task force report.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from New Mexico understand that the Hoover report recommends that the corporate device be continued, but that the authority of the Senate to confirm the directors of the corporation be denied?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think I would want to interpret the Hoover report in that respect.

Mr. KEM. That is the very crux of the question. As I understand the section which the Senator read, it simply says that it is thought that the heads of the departments should have greater authority over the operations within the departments, and that the Government corporations should be broken down. Here we are continuing the device of the Government corporation. We are adhering to the corporate fictions, but we are not giving the Senate the customary and traditional power to confirm the directors. That involves more than merely a question of form, as the questions of the Senator from Delaware suggested. We have a corporation which transacts its business independently of the Congress, without definite, specific appropriations when it makes commitments. Furthermore, it has a borrowing power. It can borrow money on the credit of the United States, without any intervention of Congress at all. What we are doing is maintaining the corporate fiction, but we are doing away with the right of the elected representatives of the people to govern the way their money is spent.

Mr. ANDERSON. I merely say that the Hoover report all the way through is to the effect that when boards of that nature are established, they should be advisory boards appointed by the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to refer to the recommendations of the Hoover report——

Mr. ANDERSON. May I have the page of the Hoover Commission report from which the Senator is about to read? I am afraid the Senator is about to read from the task-force report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to read from page 48 of the task-force report. I should like to know when the idea suddenly developed that the task-force reports have no value.

Mr. ANDERSON. It did not suddenly develop. It has been known by everyone who received any of the Hoover Commission reports, from the very beginning. Ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]. He knows all about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am asking the Senator from New Mexico——

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a wide difference in the recommendations as between the task-force reports and the Hoover Commission report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not believe the Senator will find anywhere in the Hoover report a denial of that principle.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator will not find anywhere in it an affirmation of it, either.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Very well. Will the Senator show me where, in the Hoover report——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Hoover Commission recommends that such boards act in an advisory capacity. The Senator will not find anywhere in the Hoover report a recommendation that those boards have the power to borrow money in the name of the United States Government.

I read from page 48 of the task-force report of the Hoover Commission:

> It is recommended that the Commodity Credit Corporation be continued solely as a nonstock financing agency under the control of the Administrator. Further, there should be substituted for the Corporation's present borrowing power and capital stock a revolving fund capital and annual appropriations to replace, to the extent Congress deems necessary, impairments of such capital if and when they occur.

If we are going to carry this Corporation as a part of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, we should repeal its borrowing power and make it come before Congress annually for its appropriations.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am very glad the Hoover Commission saw fit to disregard that recommendation.

In final summary, let me say that today there was placed upon the desks of Senators the concluding report of the Hoover Commission——

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. KEM. A few minutes ago I asked the Senator if the Hoover Commission approved what is being done here, namely, a maintenance of the corporate fiction, but without the right of the elected representatives of the people to confirm the directors of that corporate entity. I understood the Senator to say that he would not undertake to construe the Hoover report in that respect.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct. I will not attempt to say what the Hoover report did, because it never directly passed upon that question.

Mr. KEM. The Senator does not want to be understood as contending that the Hoover report justifies or recommends what is being done in this bill, does he?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. I am happy to say to the Senator that my observations were based upon the observations made yesterday, which were completely contrary to the Hoover report.

Mr. KEM. So the Senator is not advocating what the Hoover report recommends, and he does not want the Congress to understand that he is.

Mr. ANDERSON. In the large chart of the reorganized executive branch, showing the major purposes, departments, and agencies, it will be found that under the Department of the Treasury there are the Export-Import Bank, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and other agencies, but the Commodity Credit Corporation will not be found as a separate and independent agency. It is actually merged into the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. That is another thing. That is a question for another day. But this bill does not merge it, and I do not think anyone ought to understand that it does.

Mr. ANDERSON. It comes pretty close to it.

Mr. KEM. It merely merges the authority, but it continues the borrowing power, and it continues the authority of the corporate fiction to dispose of the people's money. We are continuing the power to deal with the people's money, but we are refusing to permit the elected representatives of the people to confirm the persons who are doing it.

Mr. ANDERSON. The man who has the final word on the expenditure of the people's money is a member of the President's cabinet, who is confirmed by the Senate, and who is finally responsible for every transaction of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

I have mentioned cabinet officers. I am very sorry that in the discussion yesterday we entered into the discussion of a pamphlet circulated by the Grain Branch, and it was emphasized that that was the language of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I refer to page 6797 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday, in the third column, where we find the following:

> Mr. WILLIAMS. Again I emphasize that I am reading the language of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I think the distinguished Senator from Vermont answered that statement pretty well, because it is not the language of the Secretary of Agriculture at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to point out to the Senator that the language to which he is referring was read into the RECORD from a Department of Agriculture bulletin. The question is this: Does the Senator from New Mexico mean to say that we confer power on the Secretary of Agriculture, but that he does not want to assume responsibility for the bulletins which are issued and the actions which are taken?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator agree with me that with power goes responsibility?

Mr. ANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Secretary of Agriculture wants to assume power over the Commodity Credit Corporation, he must be ready to assume the responsibility for its actions. The action of the Department of Agriculture is clearly set out in these bulletins, so far as concerns the long-range program for Government storage. This particular bulletin was issued with the consent of the Secretary, and with the knowledge of the Secretary. It was not wtihdrawn, to my knowledge, until yesterday when we began to discuss it on the floor of the Senate. Suddenly the Secretary tried to deny any responsibility whatever for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the Senator should have the correct information before he makes a charge like that against the Secretary of Agriculture. I remind the Senator that when I tried to find out what he was reading, he said—and I quote again from page 6797:

> Mr. WILLIAMS. Again I emphasize that I am reading the language of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I submit that this bulletin was prepared in the Grain Branch and submitted to Ralph Trigg, the head of the Production and Marketing Administration. Mr. Trigg, acting in behalf of the Secretary of Agriculture, turned down the program. The Grain Branch was not satisfied. A special committee was appointed, headed by Mr. Ballou, as the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] pointed out. That committee again considered the program and rejected it. The Grain Branch still thinks it is a good idea.

I hope we have not yet reached the point where every idea advanced by every person in every Government department immediately becomes the idea of the executive head of that department and their words become his.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the date of the conference they had with Mr. Ballou?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not sure. But Mr. Ballou was here some 3 or 4 weeks ago. The time when Mr. Trigg turned it down was nearly 2 months ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it seems that it is desired to have the authority taken away from Mr. Trigg, so apparently, if the conference report is adopted, his rejection will not mean anything.

My point is that as late as 3 weeks ago they were still considering this document in the Department of Agriculture, and at the same time they had not told anyone in Congress what they were planning.

Mr. ANDERSON. My guess is that they will continue to consider it for many years, so long as there are people there who believe in it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator from New Mexico advise us what disposition was made of the report which was read from, as shown at page 6797 of yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not informed. I understand it was first circulated in the Department. I obtained the best information regarding it that I could, which is that it was first circulated only inside the Department by the Grain Branch, in order to get the reaction of other branches. After Mr. Trigg disposed of it, it was then mailed out by the Grain Branch to other organizations, to try to get their opinions. Then a committee met to consider whether it was or was not a good program. I am not certain to what extent it was circulated.

Mr. FERGUSON. Did the committee have the power to turn down such suggestions?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it simply met to consider its circulation.

I think a wholly wrong interpretation—although I am sure it was honestly reached—has been placed on one sentence in the report. These words were read yesterday:

> The need to expand these facilities to a recommended capacity of at least 500,000,000 bushels is more fundamental than the problem of making existing legislation work.

I think it might be well to read the remainder of that statement, which is as follows:

> It is based on the recognition that the economic soundness of any price-support program for agriculture depends on how effectively supplies can be stabilized at prices fair to producers and consumers.

The impression was left that the Department wanted to ignore the provisions of the law; but actually the Department recognized that a price-support program is not effective unless there is some control upon supply. I believe at least that explanation should be given.

Yesterday a great deal was said about a criminal who was in the Department, a man by the name of Hatch. It was said that he was in the Department, but that he should have been fired. Mr. President, I agree that he should have been fired. I think he should have been allowed to resign in 1943, when he tried to resign, but when an employee of the Department of Agriculture refused to accept his resignation.

I am very happy to say that one of the most influential men I know came to me shortly after my appointment as Secretary of Agriculture and asked me if I would continue the appointment of a certain person in the Department of Agriculture, and I was happy to inform him that I would do everything I could to see to it that Col. Ralph Olmstead was fired from the Department of Agriculture.

Subsequently, the Army proposed to send him to Germany and put him in charge of the food supplies there. I called General Somervell and said to him that if that were done, I would feel compelled to release to the newspapers all the information I had about that man.

Yes; it is true that he has gone to China, but he is not doing there what the Senator from Delaware said yesterday he is doing. He is a financial adviser to the Government of China. My information, after looking through the records in the Department of Agriculture, indicates that he should be excellent in that sort of work.

As for Mr. Hatch, he was appointed a clerk in the Government service in 1934. At that time he gave no indication of his prior record. He was examined by the civil service, and was covered into civil-service status. He subsequently resigned.

I say to the distinguished Senator from Delaware that he is quite correct when he says that man should not have been continued in the Department. I do not question that at all. But I think the Senator from Delaware is quite in error when he infers that that man was an employee of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and that the head of that Corporation should have known all about him.

The record shows how the questions in that regard were put. Mr. Tarver said:

> This man Hatch is not an employee of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but of the War Food Administration.

Mr. Hancock answered:

> Judge, that is difficult to answer. Please do not misunderstand me, but I do not know exactly who are the employees of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

That statement was stressed in the debate yesterday as if it were a terrible confession for any man to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; after I have reminded the Senator from Delaware that there were 5,000 employees of the Commodity Credit Corporation and 55,000 employees of the War Food Administration; and yet someone thinks it is strange that the administrator did not know the names and records of all 60,000 of those people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico to continue reading from the same record. If he will, he will find that the objection I made was, not that the head of the Corporation did not know all the employees, but because in answer to the next question he said he did not know whether he had authority to fire from among those employees a man of whom he did not approve. That was my point.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am sorry if I misunderstood the Senator's objection. Certainly Frank Hancock should not have been expected to know who that man was.

I shall concern myself for a little time with the Brent Spence letter. I realize that perhaps I may thus initiate a long discussion which possibly I should avoid; but I wish the Senate to understand that there was some basis and justification for what the Secretary of Agriculture had written to Representative SPENCE, of Kentucky. Perhaps it may be well to refer again to what was said in the first paragraph of the letter. It refers to the argument over the $366,000,000 of receivables on the books of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Secretary of Agriculture, in replying to Representative SPENCE, said:

> These wartime operations were the subject of an extensive investigation by a House committee under the leadership of Judge Tarver. The then War Food Administrator, Marvin Jones, laid all pertinent facts concerning these transactions before the committee. All questions of fraud or loss to the Government were fully explored, and the committee was fully satisfied that there was no evidence of either.

On yesterday, the Senator from Delaware proceeded to quote from the early Tarver report, which had been prepared early in the year 1945, and was ordered printed on June 27, 1945. What the Secretary of Agriculture was referring to in the letter was that the comment made in that report had resulted in a long investigation. A great many auditors and accountants were assigned to that task. Some very reliable people were brought down to direct it; and Judge Malcolm Tarver on the first day of October 1945 inserted into the record a letter written by me to him on September 28. On the basis of that letter, Judge Tarver replied on October 2, and suggested that there be some further hearings on the matter.

The Department of Agriculture's representatives appeared many, many times before the House committee, day after day, explaining the points at issue. Those hearings were in some degree secret. I do not know what the official records of the House of Representatives show as to those hearings; but I do know that at the conclusion of the hearings, Judge Tarver expressed himself to me and to other members of the Department of Agriculture as being completely satisfied; and it is to that that the Secretary of Agriculture refers in the letter, when he says that there was no evidence of fraud or loss to the Government.

Lindsay Warren has written to the Secretary of Agriculture a letter dated May 2, in which he says:

> However, it can be definitely stated, now that lend-lease settlements have been arranged, that no purpose would be served by further investigating the balance due June 30, 1945, from other governmental agencies.

I have previously said, Mr. President, that I shall be happy to have anybody go into that record. I should be happy, not because it concerns me, but because it concerns the administration of Judge Marvin Jones, who in my opinion is as fine a man as ever served the Government of the United States. I felt a little sorry in behalf of Marvin Jones that I was not able to pursue that examination. We were overburdened with every kind of work. It would have cost a quarter of a million dollars. I think it is too bad that we did not proceed then to wipe out all of this cost billing and come down to accounts, but we did not, and now, if the Senate is going into it, that will be fine, but I merely remind Senators also that the General Accounting Office has been stating in answer to questions that there is no evidence of fraud in connection with these items. In connection with the $366,000,000, I do not say that there were not many, many items brought up as to which it looked as if fraud had taken place in the handling of transactions, but that is not involved in the $366,000,000, so far as I have ever been able to find out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that the reason the General Accounting Office says there was no evidence of fraud is that in the $366,000,000, for which they have submitted books to us as being unaccounted for, certainly they cannot assert whether there is fraud, when they do not know what happened to it. On the other hand, I do not think it will be found that the General Accounting Office will make a positive statement, assuming all responsibility, that there may not be some fraud uncovered.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I do not think they would make that statement, either, in view of the great variety of operations in the Commodity Credit Corporation. I think that would be very foolish if they said that, with the possibility that one little item may show up as to which there is a very unusual situation. We have encountered such situations. I found out while I was in that responsibility, that a man was depositing unusual sums of money in a bank in another city. We sent investigators. We removed him from the Government service. We tried to bring him to trial, but a grand jury would not indict him. I suppose the Department should be blamed for the fact that his record is still clean, but the Department did its very best to bring him to trial, and the Department did its very best in some of the other cases. There are cases well known in the Department as to which the Department has made recommendation after recommendation looking to the prosecution of people, some of them prominent in this country, but prosecution has never yet occurred, principally because local grand juries do not think there is sufficient evidence, indicating that we were trying not only to prosecute acts which were provable, but even acts which smelled bad. But the General Accounting Office has had some things to say about the Commodity Credit Corporation. It does say on page 1 of the report:

> The field examination was concluded in December 1946, and in general the report has been written as of that date.

They are dealing with things back to June 30, 1945, 4 years ago, although the field work was not finished until December 1946. The country was still at war on June 30, 1945. I wonder whether it would be permissible, Mr. President, to ask that at this point there might be inserted two and a one-half pages of comment from the Comptroller General, of which I shall read only the first line or two:

> It should be pointed out that, notwithstanding the accounting deficiencies discussed, the officials of the Department of Agriculture and the Corporation recognized the desirability of having the General Accounting Office perform a so-called commercial-type audit of its financial transactions. Representatives of the Department working jointly with those of the General Accounting Office drafted legislative provisions enacted into the act of February 28, 1944 (58 Stat. 103), which contained a provision directing the Comptroller General to make such an audit for each fiscal year commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. In February 1945 requirements for a similar audit were imposed with respect to all Government corporations.

It further says:

The Corporation has given increased recognition to the importance of sound accounting policies and procedures, has augmented its accounting staff and appointed a comptroller in April 1947 who was made an officer of the Corporation on May 12, 1947.

All through the report which the General Accounting Office has submitted there is recognition of a very sincere desire to work things out. Mr. Simpson, of the Accounting Office, in answer to one question by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] said:

The question of dishonesty is not raised at any point in our report. It is a matter of inefficiencies in the accounting set-up and the accumulated errors. It is a matter of accumulation of work, getting behind, and errors that have been built up over the years, rather than any dishonesty.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator from Delaware desire me to yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I assume the Senator from New Mexico was going to ask unanimous consent to have that inserted in the RECORD. I have no objection. I was merely going to ask the Senator whether he would also include in the unanimous consent request that there be inserted in the RECORD with those comments—I think it well that those comments be put in the RECORD—the conclusions which Mr. Warren wrote in the same report, found on page 73. I have it here and could supply it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I congratulate the Senator. I have never been able to receive a copy of the report. I congratulate the Senator upon obtaining it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It required a Senate resolution in order to get it, I may say, but we got it.

Mr. ANDERSON. It would almost seem as though it would take less than that to get it for the man who had to bear most of the responsibility. I congratulate the Senator upon obtaining it. I have never been able to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has it now. To save inserting it, since it is very short, I shall be glad to read it, if the Senator cares to have me do so. Mr. Warren concluded with the statement:

The accounting deficiencies encountered were so substantial and the inaccuracies cited in this report so material that we cannot express an opinion that the financial statements prepared by the Corporation present fairly the financial position of Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. ANDERSON. The only statement I have ever been able to get was that the audit of the Commodity Credit Corporation—I have it again just handed to me, from the Comptroller General—does not disclose fraud existed, neither does it disclose that fraud did not exist. I am glad the Commodity Credit Corporation finally got a chance to explain what happened to this money.

Let me merely say that as of May 25 the Commodity Credit Corporation issued High Lights of CCC Loans, Purchases, and Sales Activities, which is an up-to-date presentation of its financial position as of that date, March 31, 1949, and again, it will do it as of June. The Commodity Credit Corporation has published a complete report of its financial condition and operation. To hear certain portions of the discussion we have had here, one would think it was not possible to get any sort of report from the Commodity Credit Corporation within less than 3 or 4 or 5 years. Yet here is a complete report of financial operations as of March 31, 1949.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that the criticism was made that the books had not been audited by the General Accounting Office, and that they were behind some 3 to 4 years?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think the Senator from New Mexico is trying to infer that the books have been audited and that reports for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948, are before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; the books have not been audited.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the law not specifically state that audits shall be made and submitted to the Congress on the 15th of January each year?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. Is the Senator now saying the Commodity Credit Corporation should make it? It says the General Accounting Office shall make it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says the General Accounting Office shall make it, yes, but the General Accounting Office takes the position frankly that the books are in such deplorable state that they have been unable to bring them up to date.

Mr. ANDERSON. I may only say to the Senator that the first auditor who came in to talk to me was not a very well qualified auditor. I would not let him touch a book of my own business under penalty of death, and if that is the reason why books are in such deplorable state, we can understand it. He did not know there was a difference between a physical and a fiscal inventory, in this matter, and he had to go back to find out what the difference was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very much interested in the Senator's statement. Could the Senator from New Mexico tell me whether that individual who was so incompetent is on the Government pay roll at the present time?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know, but he never got back in my office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from New Mexico care to state the name of the man, so that we may find out?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we have a man on the pay roll such as that, I think the Senator should join with me in finding out something about it. I am very much interested in that statement.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know his name, but by going back to the permanent register, we could find out who he was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very much interested.

Mr. ANDERSON. I now wish to come to the portion which deals with the fact or with the charge that the Commodity Credit Corporation and the War Food Administration were one and the same. I refer now to page 6310, where I had asked the Senator from Delaware whether the comments he was making referred to the War Food Administration or to the Commodity Credit Corporation, with respect to these awful things that Judge Tarver's committee had reported. The Senator replied:

It refers to the War Food Administration, which was operating the Commodity Credit Corporation under a Presidential directive during the period from 1943 to 1945. They are one and the same Corporation.

That matter rose three or four times later in the discussion. Each time the Senator from Delaware said:

Yes; and the War Food Administration, I repeat, was the same as the Commodity Credit Corporation—during the period from 1943 to 1945. If that is not true, then I ask the former Secretary of Agriculture, What did the Commodity Credit Corporation do? Did it function during that period?

Mr. President, the President of the United States issued an Executive order——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator remember that I asked unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, either last evening or at a later date, that Executive order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have it with me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Senator aware of the fact that I read into the RECORD the date of that order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not only aware of that, but I have the Executive order with me. The statement of the Senator was as follows, and I am reading from page 6810, first column, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

It refers to the War Food Administration, which was operating the Commodity Credit Corporation under a Presidential directive during the period from 1943 to 1945. They are one and the same Corporation.

Let us see what the President did. I read from Executive Order 9322:

It is hereby ordered as follows:

The Food Production Administration (except the Farm Credit Administration), the Food Distribution Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Extension Service are hereby consolidated within the Department of Agriculture into an Administration of Food Production and Distribution, to be under the direction and supervision of an Administrator.

Mr. President, it is seen that the Extension Service in every State of the Union was in exactly the same category as was the Commodity Credit Corporation. Will the Senator from Delaware now rise and read what was written about the War Food Administration and say it applies to the Extension Service, to every extension service anywhere in the country? Of course, he will not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the number of that Executive order?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is No. 9322.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the date of it?

Mr. ANDERSON. March 26, 1943.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator be so kind as also to submit the Executive Order 9334, following that?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I shall be glad to submit it for the RECORD. I desire to refer to it, but I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the Executive order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 9334

WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION

Executive Order No. 9322 of March 26, 1943, entitled "Centralizing and Delegating Authority With Respect to the Production and Distribution of Food," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes of the United States, particularly by the First War Powers Act, 1941, as President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in order to assure an adequate supply and efficient distribution of food to meet war and essential civilian needs, it is hereby ordered as follows:

"SECTION 1. The Food Production Administration (except the Farm Credit Administration), the Food Distribution Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Extension Service, together with all their powers, functions, and duties, are hereby consolidated within the Department of Agriculture into a War Food Administration, to be administered under the direction and supervision of a War Food Administrator. The Administrator shall be appointed by the President and shall be directly responsible to him.

"SEC. 2. All powers, functions, and duties of the Secretary of Agriculture (a) under Executive Order No. 9280 of December 5, 1942, (b) under title IV of Executive Order No. 9250 of October 3, 1942, (c) which relate to labor and manpower under orders of the Economic Stabilization Director or the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, (d) which relate to or which have heretofore been exercised through or in connection with the agencies, including corporations, consolidated by section 1 of this order, and (e) which relate to personnel, property, and records transferred by section 3 of this order, are transferred to and shall be exercised and performed by the War Food Administrator (in addition to the powers, functions, and duties conferred upon him by Executive Order No. 9328 of April 8, 1943); but the Secretary of Agriculture shall continue as chairman of the interdepartmental committee set up by section 7 (a) of Executive Order No. 9280, as a member of the War Production Board as provided in section 7b of Executive Order No. 9280, and as the American representative on the Combined Food Board. The War Food Administrator shall be a member of the said interdepartmental committee, which shall be advisory to him. He shall also be alternate American representative on the Combined Food Board.

"SEC. 3. For use in connection with the exercise or performance of the powers, functions, and duties consolidated and transferred by this order, so much of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, and other funds available to the Department of Agriculture for such purposes, as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine, and all of the personnel, property, and records used primarily in the administration of such powers, functions and duties, are hereby transferred to the War Food Administration.

"SEC. 4. In addition to the powers and authority granted by this order, and in order to carry out its purposes, the Secretary of Agriculture and the War Food Administrator, to the extent necessary to enable them to perform their respective duties and functions, shall each have authority to exercise any and all of the powers vested in the other by statute or otherwise; and the exercise of any such power by either of them shall be deemed to be authorized and in accordance with this order, and shall not be subject to challenge by any third party affected by the exercise of the power on the ground that the action taken was within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture rather than the War Food Administrator, or vice versa.

"SEC. 5. Any provision of any Executive order or proclamation conflicting with this Executive order is superseded to the extent of such conflict. All prior directives, rules, regulations, orders, and similar instruments heretofore issued by any Federal agency relating to matters concerning which authority is vested in the War Food Administrator by this order shall continue in full force and effect unless and until modified or revoked by orders or directives issued by or under the direction of the War Food Administrator pursuant to authority vested in him."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 19, 1943.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to read from it. I shall skip portions of it, because the entire order will be set forth in the RECORD:

The Food Production Administration (except the Farm Credit Administration), the Food Distribution Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Extension Service—

I do not see the Senator rise—together with all their powers, functions, and duties—

Will the Senator advise me why he wanted this Executive order in the RECORD along with the other one?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, immediately following the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, the report of examination of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the period ending June 30, 1943, which was submitted to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. May we have some idea of what it involves? Is it 5,000 pages?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not 5,000 pages. I will say that this report was submitted to the Congress on March 30. It was ordered printed as a House document, but, for some unknown reason, it was not printed. I think it is unfair to the Senate that we stand here debating, I saying one thing and the Senator from New Mexico saying another. Let us lay the record before the country.

Mr. ANDERSON. If it is being printed as a public document, I certainly object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that answers the question.

Mr. ANDERSON. I withdraw my objection. I am amazed at the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew my request to have the document printed in the body of the RECORD immediately following the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I have tried very hard to avoid personalities. I do not want anyone to infer that I was afraid to have the report printed in the body of the RECORD. I shall be glad to enter into a discussion of this matter with the Senator. I do not believe his statements will be borne out by the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My request had no relation at all to any personal reference to the Senator from New Mexico. I was merely surprised by the objection, because we have inserted such documents many times in the past. I was also surprised when we were unable to get the report from the printer; but, for some reason, it has not been available. The Senator from New Mexico expressed his regret that he had not been able to read it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am glad to have it available. I think when it is being printed as a public document at a tremendous cost, it should not be inserted in the RECORD. It would cost many dollars a page. But I have no objection. All I want to say is there is not and cannot be any contention that the War Food Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Extension Service are one and the same things. To be sure, War Food Administration took over control of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but that did not make them one and the same thing. There were approximately 5,000 employees in the Farm Credit Administration. There were approximately 55,000 in the War Food Administration. They cannot be regarded as one and the same thing.

In closing, Mr. President, I come to the item appearing on page 6817 of the RECORD at the bottom of column one and at the top of column two. I should like to read again from the statement of the Senator from Delaware:

The very least we should do is to find out in just what condition the affairs of this corporation are for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948, before returning the control to any one man. That is one of the reasons—

I am sure the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is interested in knowing this, and if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr.

BUTLER] were present he would be equally interested—

That is one of the reasons why Congress passed the so-called Byrd-Butler bill, in which it was provided that each corporation should be granted a Federal charter—

And I agree with that—that the directors should be confirmed by the Senate—

I shall be happy to have the Senator from Delaware read that section of the Byrd-Butler bill which provides that they shall be confirmed by the Senate——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. In a moment. I read further:

and that they should be accountable to Congress—

I shall be glad to have the Senator from Delaware read that section of the bill—and not to any part of the executive branch of the Government.

I shall be glad to have the Senator from Delaware read the section which provides that the directors are not to be accountable to any part of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see the Senator from Virginia on the floor, and I should like to ask him to reply as to whether it was the intention——

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall not yield the floor for that purpose. I should like to have the Senator from Delaware show me any provision in the Byrd-Butler bill that a director must be confirmed by the Senate. I shall be glad to have the Senator show me any section providing that a director is accountable to Congress, and where it is shown that the directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation are not to be accountable to any part of the executive branch of the Government. I should like to have him show me the provisions if he can produce them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from New Mexico mean to say that as he understands the law the directors are not accountable to Congress?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have submitted to the Senator a very simple request. He stood on the floor of the Senate and assured every Member of the Senate that the Byrd-Butler bill provided that each corporation should be granted a Federal charter. I agree with that. Then he said, "The directors shall be confirmed by the Senate." I ask him to show any section of the Byrd-Butler bill which so provides. That is a simple request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the Senator from New Mexico if he would not yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator from Virginia is very careful in his language, and I do not believe the Senator from Virginia would make such a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am suggesting to the Senator from New Mexico to try him and see.

Mr. ANDERSON. This statement is on the authority of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My interpretation of the Byrd-Butler bill is that all Federal corporations should have a Federal charter, and that the boards of directors should be confirmed by the Senate and accountable to the Congress; and I still feel that way.

Mr. ANDERSON. To sum up, Mr. President, the first statement made by the Senator from Delaware was that this was contrary to the Hoover Commission report. I have tried to point out that it was not contrary to the Hoover Commission report, that it may be silent on it, but that what it says regarding boards is that they should be advisory.

The Senator said, when one pamphlet was introduced, that it was the language of the Secretary of Agriculture. It was not the language of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Then as to this man who has the criminal record, I submit that that sort of a situation can happen. It was remarkable, as rapidly as we were recruiting people, that we got only two such people. I regret that they were there. I admit they should have been fired, but, nonetheless, when a man turns in a report, and the Civil Service Commission certifies him as eligible for appointment, I think it is pretty hard to reject that sort of person.

The farmers of the Nation, I am sure, are not going to be happy about many of the things which have been said concerning the matter under consideration. I believe they have been somewhat proud of the Commodity Credit Corporation. In all the discussions we have heard nothing about the fact that the cotton-support program, from the day it started until the day I left the Department, at least—I am not familiar with the reaction after that—had not cost the people of the country a penny. Instead of that, on one cotton-selling program alone we acquired profits of nearly $200,000,000, which the General Accounting Office is willing to certify.

I have not forgotten that some of those who were supposed to be under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture are among those who went to the Philippines when we were trying to restore the copra industry. I have not forgotten that private enterprise had tried to revive that industry and had given it up. They said, "Perhaps you can do something with it." I have not forgotten that the United States Commercial Company, a subsidiary of the RFC, with directors who have never been confirmed by the Senate, turned the task over to the Commodity Credit Corporation, and instead of losing $5,000,000, which private industry was prepared to lose, the $5,000,000 was salvaged, and $4,000,000 of profit was turned into the Treasury of the United States.

People are forgetful of the fact that millions upon millions of dolars were accumulated by the handling of products during the period of the war. I know there were losses, but sometimes the after sight is not so encouraging. The same House committee whose report was inserted in the RECORD yesterday did complain about conditions. Among other things, they complained about the cave at Atchison, Kans. They called me before them and demanded that I close the cave immediately as one of the first official acts I should take. Early in my administration I spoke at Stillwater, Okla., and while there I went to Atchison, Kans., to take a look at the cave. It seemed to me too bad that the Government of the United States should invest $2,000,000 in an enterprise and then abandon it. It seemed possible that there might be people who would like to have it abandoned, because of rights which would revert to the owner of the land. We went to work to see if we could make that cave pay. We had to fly in the face of congressional criticism, we had to go almost against a mandate of the House Committee on Agriculture. But all the costs, except for a small charge for machinery, have been amortized and paid since that date.

Those things do not get any notice. It appears that it is not important whether Commodity Credit makes $200,000,000 in a cotton operation; the important thing seems to be whether someone loses $40,000 because some eggs went bad in a New York warehouse.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether, under the set-up proposed in the bill, the members of the Board of Directors or the members of the advisory committee are the more important.

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall answer the Senator honestly, even though it works against my own argument. I believe the members of the Board who are appointed by the Secretary are more important than the members of the advisory committee. I know his next question will be, then, Why are they not to be confirmed? I have said to him that all I have to go on is my experience in the office of Secretary, and I think I found out in that position that two men cannot at the same time shoulder the same responsibility for supporting prices of farm commodities in this country. Fundamentally the responsibility comes back to one man. He may not like it, but if he holds up his hand and takes an oath of office, he must administer the office, even if it breaks his body. He must go through with it. He cannot divide or escape the responsibility. I hope Senators will remember that.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to say, by way of preface, that the Senator's anticipation of my question is a perfectly proper one, but it is not the one I wanted to ask.

Mr. ANDERSON. I apologize if I anticipated the Senator.

Mr. KEM. All I wanted to ask the Senator was whether he was familiar with the provisions of section 2, article II, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone," and so forth. Is the Senator familiar with that provision of the Constitution?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not a lawyer, and I am not so familiar with the Constitution as I perhaps should be, but I am familiar with the fact that the persons we are discussing are not officers of the United States.

Mr. KEM. I should like to say that I sat with the Senator in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and in this particular field of law he is an expert.

Mr. ANDERSON. I thank the Senator, but it is not possible for me to answer his question.

Mr. KEM. I have merely asked him whether he is familiar with that provision of the Constitution by way of introduction to the next question, namely, whether, when we are dealing with two groups, one of which he says is more important than the other, but in which the confirmation of the less important group is accorded to the Senate, he thinks that is in accord with the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have tried to answer over and over again that I feel that an advisory committee can do a splendid job of laying out policy. Once it has been laid out, either by Congress or by an advisory group, the Secretary has to administer it, and he cannot have that administrative authority divided. He cannot have an independent board, with independent powers, charged with doing the same thing he is charged with doing, without running into conflict. It is upon that basis, and on that basis alone, I may say to the Senator, that I prefer the other method.

Mr. KEM. The Senator has stated his point of view in that respect very clearly, and I think it has some cogency, but that is not the question I am putting to the distinguished Senator. The question is whether it is in accord with the spirit of the Constitution to provide that certain inferior officers shall be subject to confirmation of the Senate, whereas their superiors are not so to be confirmed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator with what he will probably regard as an evasion, but I must say that I have never attempted to interpret the Constitution, not being a lawyer, but have found it much better in my business to hire lawyers to do my legal work. I should, therefore, want to stay out of the field as to what the proper constitutional interpretation is. There are many constitutional lawyers in this assembly who can better answer the Senator's question.

Mr. KEM. I want to address the Senator from New Mexico, not as a lawyer, but as a man of high intelligence who can read and understand the English language. I should like to ask the Senator whether in his opinion it is in accord with the spirit of the Constitution to a provision of which I have just invited his attention for the bill to provide that the inferior officers shall be confirmed by the Senate, and that the more important officers shall bypass the Senate?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would only answer the Senator in this way, that I do not feel that advisory boards can be measured against administrative tasks. We cannot say whether policy or administrative people are of the greatest importance. May I say that we have an Atomic Energy Commission now. It would seem to me that if we were to start a new development again, that if Dr. Oppenheimer could be moved back into my State, where he served so brilliantly at Los Alamos, he would be far more important to the atomic energy program than some members of the board would be, but he would not be subject to confirmation.

Mr. KEM. I realize that the Senator is not a witness on the stand, and I have no right to press him. I realize fully that he can decline to answer the question if he wishes to do so. But I should like to ask him again whether he thinks any other consideration in the respect referred to is in accord with the spirit of the constitutional provisions to which I have just invited his attention?

Mr. ANDERSON. To the best of my understanding it is.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wish the Senator to yield long enough for me to point out apropos the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, that the advisory board does not advise the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, but it is distinctly stated in the bill that they are to advise the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. Yes, but, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico again which of these two groups he thinks is the most important: The one which exercises the right of decision, or the one which exercises the right to advise?

Mr. ANDERSON. I say it goes back to the same old story always. The question often is asked, Who is most important in the Military Establishment, the men who are at the front or the men who are making it possible for them to stay at the front? To put it another way: Is Congress in making policy more important than the executive branch in carrying out that policy? It would be extremely tragic if a fine advisory board was not selected. I should love to have a chance to suggest to the Senate four names for that board, Mr. President. If we could get the type of men I am thinking of on that board, the Secretary of Agriculture would have the finest possible aid and assistance in determining policy. But once policy has been determined for him by the Congress, then the people who administer that program underneath him are to him the most important people he could possibly have. Upon their integrity rests his own. Upon their ability to work long hours rests the possibility that the task may be done. The Senator asks me something which I could only answer one way after my experience with the men in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KEM. Let me ask the Senator another question. As a former Secretary of Agriculture, would the Senator from New Mexico feel it were a greater compliment to be asked to suggest members for the board of directors or to suggest names for appointment as members for the advisory council?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can answer that question. It would be a compliment to suggest members for the advisory board, but as a former Secretary of Agriculture I would not attempt to suggest members of the other body, because the then Secretary of Agriculture has to live with his people. Someone highly regarded by a former Secretary of Agriculture might be impossible for me to work with, and someone I might cherish might be wholly unacceptable to the present Secretary. I do believe I could suggest members of an advisory council which would be satisfactory to both.

Mr. KEM. So if I understand the Senator correctly, and I know he will correct me if I do not, from any aspect he regards the members of the board of directors as more important than members of the advisory council?

Mr. ANDERSON. I cannot help reiterating that, once the policy has been laid down, the Board of Directors are of tremendous importance to the Secretary, and it is their wise judgment and ability to handle programs that I think is of transcendent importance.

EXHIBIT 1

COMPTROLLER GENERAL
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 30, 1949.

The honorable the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is presented herein report on the examination of Commodity Credit Corporation for the period ended June 30, 1945. This examination was made by the Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office, pursuant to and in accordance with the requirements of section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945 (59 Stat. 6).

Respectfully submitted,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General
of the United States.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
CORPORATION AUDITS DIVISION,
Washington.

HON. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General
of the United States.

DEAR MR. WARREN: We have made an examination of Commodity Credit Corporation and its affiliated corporation, War Hemp Industries, Incorporated, for the period ended June 30, 1945, pursuant to the requirements of section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945 (59 Stat. 6). Our report consists of condensed over-all comments on the nature and operations of the Corporation, recommendations, sections in some detail amplifying certain of the over-all comments (with particular reference to financial and accounting matters), and financial statements and schedules. The field examination was concluded in December 1946, and in general the report has been written as of that date, referring primarily to the period mentioned above. However, it makes note of progress since then in improving the quality of the accounting function and of a few significant subsequent events relating to the history and activities of the Corporation. The report also discloses the circumstances which caused us to be unable to render an opinion with regard to the financial statements of the Corporation and its affiliate.

GENERAL COMMENTS

1. General: Through its price-support activities the Corporation has contributed significantly to agricultural economic readjustment in the years since 1933. From inception of the Corporation to June 30, 1945, commodity loans in excess of $4,500,000,000 had been made by the Corporation or through its agents on approximately 30 different agricultural commodities. Most important dollarwise among these were loans on cotton, wheat, and corn, which totaled approximately $4,300,000,000. In 1939 the Corporation initiated direct-purchase programs as a means of providing agricultural price support.

During the war the Corporation assumed new responsibilities, with respect to many of which it had little or no experience. It participated in the acquisition, processing, and movement of huge stores of commodities essential to the war effort; it assisted in the stimulation of agriculture and related commercial activities; and it participated in programs designed to stabilize prices and encourage production and distribution. During this period the purchase operations of the Corporation were expanded tremendously, and the objective of supply, rather than price support, predominated.

The general commodities purchase program, the largest single wartime supply program, involved the acquisition and disposal of several hundred different commodities having a disposal value in excess of $6,000,000,000. In addition to domestic procurement during this period, the Corporation was assigned the responsibility of procuring over 90 foreign commodities, principally sugar, various fats and oils, Egyptian cotton, and tea. Also during the war period the Corporation financed and administered substantially all subsidy programs related to agricultural commodities. (Defense Supplies Corporation also allowed or paid subsidies relative to a few commodities but incurred a greater aggregate cost to June 30, 1945.) To June 30, 1945, subsidies aggregating nearly $1,300,000,000 had been allowed or paid by Commodity Credit Corporation on approximately 35 agricultural commodities.

2. THE CORPORATE ENTITY

The creation of Commodity Credit Corporation was directed by Executive Order 6340, dated October 16, 1933. The authority cited for the order was the National Industrial Recovery Act, which provided in section 2 (a) of title I for the creation of agencies necessary to effectuate the policies of the act. The Corporation was created under the laws of Delaware, as directed by the order, on October 17, 1933.

The Corporation, although nominally an independent agency of the United States, was managed and operated in close affiliation with Reconstruction Finance Corporation until July 1, 1939, when it was transferred, by Reorganization Plan No. 1, to the Department of Agriculture, to be administered under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

All the directors of the Corporation were officials of the Department of Agriculture, occupying positions which automatically placed them on the board. Their regular assignments made them subordinate to the Secretary, who exercised the ownership rights of the capital stock. Consequently, the Secretary was in a position to exercise complete authority over the management of the affairs of the Corporation. This, coupled with the requirement of reorganization plan No. 1 that the affairs of the Corporation be administered under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary, places the ultimate responsibility for the activities of the Corporation directly upon the latter. The Department considers this situation to be administratively desirable from the standpoint of the integration of the agricultural program. However, it practically precludes the exercise of the usual policy-making functions by the board of directors.

Furthermore, for several years the Corporation had been, in effect, merged with, or had carried out its operations through, the facilities and personnel of large unincorporated agencies within the Department of Agriculture. To a large extent this resulted in loss of a conception of the Corporation as an entity on the part of personnel engaged in affairs ostensibly carried on by the Corporation, except in certain cases where the distinction had to be maintained for legal or budgetary reasons. By Executive Order 9334, dated April 19, 1943, the Corporation was consolidated into the War Food Administration, under the direction and supervision of the Administrator who was independent of the Secretary of Agriculture. The order placed the War Food Administration in the Department of Agriculture but made the Administrator responsible only to the President of the United States. This disposition of the Corporation lasted until the War Food Administration was abolished June 30, 1945, when direct control of the Corporation was returned to the Secretary of Agriculture. On August 18, 1945, operations of the Corporation were merged with the newly created Production and Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture. By that date the Corporation, as such, had largely ceased to exist, except for certain legal powers, responsibilities, and other characteristics of the corporate body. The apparent reasons for the continued utilization of the Corporation are discussed in item 4 following.

3. Corporate management: Positions of responsibility in the Corporation, as to both directors and top-management officials (who in a number of cases serve in dual officer-director capacities), have been assigned, formerly as a matter of practice and more recently in accordance with the corporate bylaws, to occupants of certain positions within the Department of Agriculture. Duties and responsibilities of the positions so designated have not been limited to performance of functions relating only to Commodity Credit Corporation. The attainment of these positions has generally represented the culmination of a progression through various capacities within divisions of the Department engaged in nonbusiness-type activities, particularly the Bureau of Agricultural Economics and the Agricultural Adjustment Agency.

The tenure of office of many executives of the Corporation has been very short, and a number of persons have left positions of prominence with the Corporation to accept private employment. There seems to be little doubt that the Government salary ceiling, as in the case of many other Government agencies, was an important cause of many of the resignations. This turn-over of personnel has had an adverse effect on the management of the Corporation, particularly as its affairs are very complex and cover a multitude of activities. Early in the course of our examination it became apparent that the accounting function had not been utilized by the management as a control device and that satisfactory control had not been exercised over the Corporation's financial affairs. This matter was the subject of discussions with Corporation officials, and one of our recommendations was that the position of controller be established. A controller was appointed on April 28, 1947, and made an officer of the Corporation on May 12, 1947. The directive establishing the position of controller assigned to the position "technical authority and responsibility over all fiscal affairs of CCC and PMA." In the course of subsequent discussions relative to the functioning of the controller, we were informed by the President of the Corporation that the controller had been made responsible for, and given authority over and control of, the accounting, budgeting, and internal auditing with respect to CCC. On this basis, it appears that the controller is in a position to contribute in full measure to the management of CCC. Since August 1945 the Administrator of Production and Marketing Administration automatically has been the President of the Corporation.

To some extent during the existence of the War Food Administration, and to a much greater extent since the creation of Production and Marketing Administration, the officials of Commodity Credit Corporation have been required to devote time to noncorporate activities. Inasmuch as we believe the scope and complexity of CCC operations warrant the full-time services of high-level management personnel, we feel that this is detrimental to managerial effectiveness, the extent being directly proportional to the significance of, and time required for, the noncorporate responsibilities simultaneously assumed by members of the CCC management group.

An important feature in CCC operations has been the widespread utilization of agents, particularly banks, agricultural conservation program committees, and numerous cooperative associations for both record-keeping and operational purposes. The resulting broad decentralization of authority for direct administration was not, in a number of cases, accompanied by suitably precise operating and accounting controls or satisfactory assignments of record keeping and reporting responsibilities as between the Corporation and its agents. Although primary responsibility for the results of the programs was retained by the Corporation, the ability of the management to control the operations was impaired by these relationships, and accounting and auditing problems were created or augmented. In the selection of some of the agents, conflicting or unrelated local or primary interests of the agents apparently prevented the Corporation from obtaining fully satisfactory representation.

Operating responsibilities within the Corporation at times were not apportioned among the officials to any great extent according to the normal functional characteristics of their offices, and broad delegations of responsibility and authority were not made. As a result, the internal operation has been organized less effectively than would have been desirable. This is particularly true of the War Food Administration era (1943–45). During much of that period there was poor organization, lack of coordination, uncertainty of policies, constant confusion from frequent reorganizations, and extremely high turn-over in executive personnel.

Weaknesses in management, operations, or accounting were attributed in large part by the Corporation to the stresses and exigencies occasioned by the war. We believe that, while this is true to a certain extent, the effect would have been lessened if a more sound managerial control had existed at the time.

4. Purposes and activities of the enterprise: The development and operation of the farm program in an effort to obtain agricultural readjustment was an important part of plans to cope with the economic emergency which existed in 1933. Commodity Credit Corporation was but one of several agencies utilized.

Prior to 1933 a number of actions had been taken in the interest of agriculture. However, by 1933 the condition of the national economy was so acute that bold and extensive action was considered necessary.

In the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved in May 1933, the Congress declared its policy to be the assurance of a purchasing power to commodities which farmers sold, in relation to things which they bought, equivalent to the purchasing power that they enjoyed during a designated favorable period in the past, usually August 1909 through July 1914. This is often referred to as the parity formula. The act provided for accomplishing this objective through benefit payments to farmers who complied with certain requisites relative to farm production, acreage, etc. The act included a self-financing feature—the processing tax. In January 1936 the processing tax and acreage control provisions were declared unconstitutional. As a result, increased reliance was placed on the price-support principle, and consequently, on the commodity loan facilities of Commodity Credit Corporation.

In February 1936 the Congress enacted the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to achieve agricultural readjustment through payments to producers who restricted their plantings of soil-depleting crops, increased their plantings of soil-conservation crops, and carried out certain soil-building practices. This program failed to prevent the accumulation of surpluses, and the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 was therefore enacted. This act continued the conservation payments, provided parity payments, and under specified conditions authorized the use of marketing quotas and price support by commodity loans through CCC; such loans were made mandatory in the case of cotton, corn, and wheat, under certain conditions.

The approximate cost of a number of the more important of the above activities carried out by other Government agencies from 1933 to June 30, 1945, was $8,115,600,000. Of this total, adjustment or parity payments amounted to $6,200,000,000 and expenditures of so-called section 32 funds (percentage of customs revenues earmarked for the benefit of agriculture) amounted to $1,146,000,000. The latter have been used principally to finance the utilization of agricultural commodities for domestic relief purposes and, to a lesser extent, to encourage the exportation of such commodities by subsidizing their export. Because of the impact of the war emergency programs on the results of CCC price-support activities and the accounting policies then in effect, the cost of the Corporation's price-support activities cannot be stated, either to the outbreak of the war or cumulatively to June 30, 1945. (See comments beginning on page 45.)

The above-mentioned legislative acts had as one of their significant objectives the attainment of parity for the farmer. The very brief and nontechnical discussion of parity which follows is not limited to the operations of CCC. Parity is an item of basic consideration in the development of all phases of the farm program, of which the operations of the Corporation have been but a part. Parity for the farmer (under various names) has been the goal of agricultural advocates since the end of World War I, and since 1933 has been firmly woven into the fabric of the whole farm program.

The statement of policy relative to parity contained in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 was expressed in the following language: " * * * reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period."

In the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1148), this policy was restated in the following language: "* * * reestablishment, at as rapid a rate as the Secretary of Agriculture determines to be practicable and in the general public interest, of the ratio between the purchasing power of the net income per person on farms and that of the income per person not on farms that prevailed during the 5-year period August 1909–July 1914, inclusive, * * * and the maintenance of such ratio."

This policy was further developed in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, which included among its purposes assisting farmers to obtain, insofar as practicable, both parity as applied to prices and parity as applied to income as defined in the act (52 Stat. 38).

Equality of purchasing power, or parity of net income, as between farmers and nonfarmers, cannot be established and maintained by merely assuring parity prices for agricultural commodities, because consideration must be given to the number of units sold at the parity prices, and because in their natural parity prices do not take into consideration the relative income of nonfarmers.

There are obvious difficulties encountered in establishing parity, but statistics indicate that in general the application of the theory has not operated to the detriment of the farmer. This is illustrated by the following statistics prepared by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which show the parity income ratio, farmers to nonfarmers:

Later enactments by the Congress authorizing and directing Commodity Credit Corporation to support the prices of certain commodities under certain conditions at fixed or minimum percentages of the parity prices for such commodities have been administratively interpreted and applied as requiring price support, notwithstanding the fact that the prices of these commodities had risen substantially above parity.

The original function of Commodity Credit Corporation to extend financial aid to farmers during the economic emergency existing at the time of its creation in October 1933. The aid extended initially was in the form of nonrecourse commodity loans (in amounts based on parity prices) at low-interest rates. In 1939 the Corporation initiated direct-purchase programs as a means of bolstering depressed prices.

During the period of World War II and since, the Corporation has been used for several other significant purposes. It became the principal medium through which agricultural commodities were subsidized and it was used extensively to conduct price-support operations considered necessary in increasing or maintaining production and stabilizing prices of agricultural commodities. It was used also as agent for the Government in extensive operations, termed supply activities, involving the procurement and stock piling of food and food products for lend-lease, the Army, the Navy, and other Government agencies. The domestic wool program partook somewhat of the nature of a protective mechanism, in addition to the tariff, to maintain domestic wool prices which would otherwise have suffered because of the large volume of imported wool; in this case, support prices were in excess of parity and possible selling prices. (Although the programs had been carried on since April 1943, and extensive congressional hearings had been conducted relative to wool, the first specific statutory authority for the wool programs was Public Law 360, 80th Cong., approved August 5, 1947. It should be noted that this report does not contend that the programs were conducted without authority of law.)

An activity not relevant to the general purposes of the Corporation, but carried on in accordance with law, is the making of loans to the Secretary of Agriculture, in an aggregate amount not in excess of $50,000,000 per year, for the stated purpose of temporarily financing crop-insurance premiums, soil-conservation activities, etc. The statute under which these loans are made (the act of July 2, 1940; 54 Stat. 728) directs their repayment "during the succeeding fiscal year from the appropriation available for that year or from any unobligated balance of the appropriation for any other year." In making repayments as directed by this law, the Department has been authorized to use balances of appropriations which would not otherwise have been available, in the amount of $122,858,341 to June 30, 1947.

In carrying out its many functions, the Corporation initiated and conducted a number of programs with substantial differences in purposes to be accomplished and in methods of accomplishing the purposes. The objectives of the programs (which consist in general of the types discussed above) may be fitted roughly into four groups: (1) Price support, (2) supply, (3) export, and (4) foreign purchases. These objectives are attained through loan, trading,[1] pooling, and subsidy operations. Items 6, 7, 8, and 9 following contain a brief discussion of these operations, including financial results.

Because of the accounting policies in effect during the period under review, the fact that the purposes of some of the programs changed from time to time (e. g., from price support to supply), and the impact of the war, no representation could be made of the cost of price-support activities from the inception of the Corporation to the outbreak of the war, or of the cost of the activities relative to the objectives of price support, supply, export, and foreign purchases during the war or cumulatively to June 30, 1945.

The legal authority of the Corporation has been derived from two sources:

(a) Specific statutes authorizing or directing the Corporation to undertake activities and defining to some extent the manner in which the operations should be conducted. The loans on basic commodities since 1938 are within this category, as are the commodity export programs and a number of the subsidy programs. Another example is the act of August 5, 1947, previously cited, requiring continued price support for wool.

(b) The Corporation's Delaware charter as recognized by statutes continuing the Corporation as an agency of the United States, increasing the Corporation's borrowing power, authorizing expenditures for administrative expenses, and appropriating funds to restore losses.

In view of the broad authority conferred upon the Corporation by its Delaware charter, there have, of course, been questions concerning the precise limits of the authority of the Corporation in formulating and conducting Federal programs. The submission of annual budget programs for congressional approval for the fiscal years since 1947, as required by the Government Corporation Control Act, has required advance examination of proposed programs by the Congress.

[1] The term "trading" as used in this report denotes the operation involved in (a) the disposal of commodities acquired in settlement of loans (except cotton pooling) and through direct purchases, for price-support purposes, (b) voluntary purchases and sales in connection with supply activities, and (c) other acquisition activities. It does not imply that the Corporation customarily trades in commodities with the objective of gain.

Since the enactment of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act in June 1948, the Corporation has not relied upon its Delaware charter, and the Delaware corporation has been dissolved.

5. Sources of funds: Capital stock as originally authorized and issued provided Commodity Credit Corporation with capital in the amount of $3,000,000, which was allotted by the President from the appropriation made to carry out the National Industrial Recovery Act. An additional $97,000,000 was provided in April 1936 by Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This amount was borrowed by RFC from the United States Treasury, and the notes given to secure the loans were canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury when the capital stock was transferred to him in 1938. No interest was charged them for the $100,000,000 during the period under review.

The funds used to finance the Corporation's activities have been obtained, for the most part, by borrowing. The authority of the Corporation to borrow from the public debt fund of the Treasury or to issue obligations otherwise against the credit of the United States has been fixed by law since March 1938. Successive amendments have raised the limit of the Corporation's borrowings from $500,000,000, then established, to a limit of $4,750,000,000 established in April 1945. The Corporation's obligations outstanding at June 30, 1945, guaranteed by the United States are summarized as follows:

Borrowings from the United States Treasury	$1,591,000,000
Borrowings from private banks and other Government corporations ($21,256,279) to finance various commodity programs	451,728,125
Total	2,042,728,125

Included in the borrowings to finance commodity programs is an amount of $22,515,000 representing general borrowings not related to specific programs such as cotton, wool, sugar, etc. A small number of large commercial banks supplied these funds, on a demand basis, at an interest rate of one-half of 1 percent per annum. These borrowings appear to have been advantageous in that they bore this low rate of interest.

Besides funds obtained on the above basis, financing of some activities was provided by means which did not directly involve using the credit of the United States. Private lending agencies making loans to producers in connection with cotton loan programs were required to tender all notes to the Corporation for either purchase or pooling. At the election of the lending agency, the Corporation either purchased the notes for cash at their face value plus accrued interest or placed them in a pool and issued certificates of interest evidencing the deposit of notes therein by the lending agency. As provided in lending agency agreements, the Corporation followed the practice of also depositing in the note pool the notes which it acquires by purchase. Separate note pools were conducted in each Federal Reserve district, and the Federal Reserve bank for the district acted as custodian of the pool. The certificates of interest, bearing interest at the rate of 1½ percent per annum, are liquidated by periodic distributions of the proceeds of loan redemptions, or are redeemed by the Corporation at maturity of the loans or upon demand by the holders. At June 30, 1945, the Corporation's obligation with respect to certificates of interest amounted to $205,218,600. This amount is not included in the tabulation above, as it was not guaranteed by the United States.

Some of the Corporation's other activities, principally commodity loan programs, are financed in whole or in part under agreements obligating the Corporation either to purchase, at maturity or on demand, loans made by private lending agencies or, in the case of cotton cooperative associations, to make loans to the associations on eligible cotton delivered by producer-members. In consideration of these obligations, the Corporation shares in the interest received by the lending agencies and cooperatives. At June 30, 1945, the Corporation's obligation to purchase or make such loans was $86,035,259, which included $54,544,698 applicable to loans made by Farm Credit Administration corporations. (See schedule 5.)

In the past, extensive borrowings were made from Reconstruction Finance Corporation and through sale of obligations to the public. The last issue of the Corporation's collateral trust notes held by the public was redeemed during the fiscal year 1945.

The act of March 9, 1933 (52 Stat. 107), requires the Secretary of the Treasury to make an annual appraisal of the assets and liabilities of the Corporation. The net worth, determined by this appraisal, is restored to the amount of capital of $100,000,000, either by reimbursing the Corporation for the capital impairment through appropriation procedures or by payment of any surplus into the Treasury. The net capital impairment resulting from operations to June 30, 1945, as determined by appraisals, was $1,322,171,966; the capital impairment indicated by exhibit 1 was $1,180,283,540. The difference is caused chiefly by our restoration to income of $139,171,171 representing the portion of the apparent gain on the General Commodities Purchase Program shown as a special reserve by the Corporation at June 30, 1945. Of the capital impairment determined by the Treasury appraisals, the Corporation had been reimbursed through appropriations for previous years' impairments in the net amount of $400,715,405 at June 30, 1945; the remainder ($921,456,561) was reimbursed to the Corporation in July 1946. The latter, and the reimbursement of $641,832,081 for capital impairment as of June 30, 1946, were effected through the medium of note cancellations authorized by law.

Restoration of capital impairment after funds have been expended differs from the regular congressional procedures for appropriating public funds for expenditures. The use of borrowed funds in a manner certain to impair the ability of the Corporation to repay them (particularly to make subsidy payments) amounts, in effect, to withdrawal of funds from the Treasury and has been characterized as "a back door to the Treasury." Also, it unfairly burdens the Corporation with interest on expended borrowings until the Congress appropriates funds to make up the losses or authorizes the cancellation of the notes held by the Treasury. Permanent expenditure or loss of funds, it would logically be presumed, would require that the funds first be made available to the Corporation by the Congress for reimbursement under appropriation procedures. This also appears to be consistent with that part of section 4 of the act of March 8, 1938, which may be interpreted as requiring that the Corporation's assets be sufficient always to pay its debts whenever it borrows funds from any source. We believe that whenever the impairment of the Corporation's capital exceeds $100,000,000, this principle is defeated.

The difficulty of preparing estimates in advance for certain programs of CCC is recognized. However, the benefits of this procedure, or some similar method of obtaining closer congressional control, should warrant unusual efforts in attaining this result. Otherwise, the implication is that the Congress should authorize the conduct of specific activities without adequate means of limiting their aggregate cost.

The total amount of interest expense which has been allocated to specific programs through June 30, 1945, exclusive of interest paid to banks acting as fiscal agents, is summarized from schedule 22, as follows:

On borrowings from—
Public	$31,895,120
United States Treasury	28,085,080
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	15,860,274
Private lending agencies	621,651
Total	76,462,125

At June 30, 1945, the interest rate on loans being charged the Corporation by the Treasury was 1 percent, which was not correlated to the cost to the Treasury of obtaining funds. We are of the opinion that it would have been desirable that the interest rate result in a charge to the Corporation equal to the interest cost of such funds to the Treasury. Furthermore, the inclusion of an interest charge on the entire amount of the Government's investment in the Corporation would have resulted in a more adequate and complete presentation of the cost to the Government of the Corporation's activities.

6. Loan operations: Prior to passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, commodity loans were made without specific statutory authority and pursuant only to corporate charter powers. During that prior period, a large volume of loans on cotton and corn, and a relatively minor amount on wheat and a few other commodities, were made by the Corporation or through its lending agencies. By the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, the Corporation was authorized, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and approval by the President of the United States, to make loans on all agricultural commodities and was specifically directed to make loans available, under certain conditions, on cotton, corn, and wheat. Subsequent legislation added rice, tobacco, and peanuts to this group, and these six commodities became known and were legislatively recognized as the basic commodities.

Prior to the war, and during the war period as late as June 30, 1945, the Corporation visualized (and the Congress, in sec. 2 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, apparently recognized) its loan programs as having two fundamental functions—stabilizing farm prices and assuring adequate reserve supplies of farm products. To this last function, the term "ever-normal granary" has been applied by the Corporation as late as June 30, 1943.

Surpluses of some commodities, in excess of the needs of an ample ever-normal granary, were acquired as a result of commodity loans. The demands of the war for raw materials and food provided relief from large overstocks of cotton and wheat.

In some cases during the later war years and since, commodity loans at the rate of 90 percent of parity (higher in the case of cotton) have been made when the related market prices were in excess of parity. Officials of the Department of Agriculture point out that, in their opinion, under specific provisions of existing legislation, it was necessary to make loans available on basic commodities even though market prices were in excess of parity prices and without regard to the parity of net income concept.

However, loans by the Corporation on basic commodities have been closely related to production controls through acreage allotments and marketing quotas until such controls were suspended during the war. In those cases where production controls were in effect, loans were made available at maximum rates only to cooperating farmers.

Loans were made to noncooperators at reduced rates and on only so much of their commodity as would be subject to penalty if marketed.

Generally, commodity loans have been made at rates expressed as a percentage of the parity price for a unit of the commodity. The ratio of amounts of individual loans to commodity values (at parity prices) has varied as to both the kind of commodity and the time when the loans were made. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 required the rates of mandatory loans (basic commodities) to be not less than 52 nor more than 75 percent of the parity price for each unit of the commodity upon which a loan was made. In May 1941 the rates of these loans were fixed by law at 85 percent of the parity price, and since October 1942 they have been fixed by the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, at 90 percent of the parity price except in the case of cotton which has been at 92½ or 95 percent of the parity price. Under this latter act, loans at these rates were mandatory on basic commodities harvested prior to a date later specified as January 1, 1949.

Because of the nonrecourse feature, which has been contained in all commodity loans made by the Corporation, and the bases on which loans are generally made, a commodity loan, in practical effect, amounts to a purchase by the Corporation subject to an option on the part of the farmer to repurchase the commodity, if he desires, in event of favorable price relationships. In addition, when pooling is provided for by the terms of a commodity loan, and the loans are settled in this manner, the farmer shares ratably in the excess of sales proceeds, if any, over the Corporation's investment plus applicable charges. In general, such gains result from price increases during the disposal period after the collateral has been taken over in settlement of the loan. Losses resulting from these types of transactions, however, are all borne by the Corporation.

Interest rates bear no relation to the cost of making the loans, nor is the rate calculated to compensate for the risk inherent in making the loan. The interest is not payable unless the commodity is redeemed, in which event it may be considered as a redemption fee rather than interest income.

From inception of the Corporation to June 30, 1945, loans made by the Corporation or through lending agencies amounted to $4,580,322,000, distributed largely among three commodities, as follows:

	Amount	Percent
Cotton	$2,030,477,000	44.3
Wheat	1,603,953,000	35.0
Corn	692,200,000	15.1
22 commodities and 9 financing programs	253,692,000	5.6
Total	4,580,322,000	100.0

The total recorded interest income to June 30, 1945, was $54,607,369, and the total of losses recorded as applicable to loan operations was $47,629,894, leaving an apparent gain of $6,977,475. Losses reflected by the Corporation as losses on loans resulted principally from the release, in full settlement of the loans, of pledged collateral to borrowers at approximately market values, which were less than the redemption values, i. e., loans settled on a reduced basis without the taking over of the commodity by the Corporation; and, in the case of corn, the cancellation of storage advances related to the resealing program announced in the fall of 1940. Losses of the former type were incurred as a result of administrative determinations that it was more economical to permit the farmers to market the crop than to incur the expense that would have been involved in taking over, concentrating, and selling the commodities. When the Corporation acquired title to commodities pledged to secure loans in default, the unpaid balance of the loan advances was recorded in its accounts as the cost of acquisition. The gain or loss resulting from the disposal of these commodities was reflected in trading operations and requires consideration in determining the aggregate gain or loss in individual loan programs. It was not the Corporation's policy at the end of each fiscal year to make estimates of and provide reserves for the losses that ultimately might be sustained on commodity loan programs until the commodities pledged to secure loans in default were acquired. Subsequent to June 30, 1945, the Corporation adopted the policy of providing valuation reserves, based upon estimated realizable values, to reflect the estimated loss, if any, to be sustained during liquidation of the loans. The new procedure is more in accord with generally accepted accounting practice.

7. Trading operations: The Corporation became engaged in trading operations in 1937 when it became necessary to transport, store, and dispose of commodities acquired in settlement of loans. In the fall of 1939 the Corporation initiated direct-purchase programs as a means of accomplishing price support. During the war period trading operations were expanded considerably, although the objective generally was one of supply.

To June 30, 1945, trading operations conducted by the Corporation resulted in the acquisition and disposal of commodities having a disposal value of over $11,000,000,000. More than 300 separate programs have been conducted involving:

(a) Approximately 20 domestic farm commodities, principally wheat, cotton, corn, and tobacco (basic commodities), and wool.

(b) Approximately 90 foreign commodities, principally sugar, various fats and oils, Egyptian cotton, and tea.

(c) Programs designed to provide, for various purposes, a supply of approximately 10 different commodities, and the General Commodities Purchase Program which involved the acquisition of several hundred different commodities, chiefly for supply purposes.

(d) Exchange of domestic cotton for rubber owned by the United Kingdom.

(e) Operation through an affiliated company of a program to provide a domestic supply of hemp and related items.

(f) Purchase, erection, rental, sale, and maintenance of steel and prefabricated wooden bins for grain storage.

The recorded net gain from these operations was $200,494,693, which was, in general, exclusive of any portion of the Corporation's general overhead expenses and interest on borrowed funds which, though substantial, were not allocated on the books of the Corporation to individual programs or groups of programs. The two most significant program results were the gains of $122,394,806 attributed to cotton and $152,215,171 attributed to the general commodities purchase program. In the case of the general commodities purchase program the gain resulted, in general, from sales to other agencies of the Government, principally lend-lease. We are informed that, in line with general Corporation policy, the program was not carried on with the objective of gain and that the results are not considered unreasonable in relation to the gross dollar volume. We believe that the sales prices could have approximated total costs more closely, and that such profits were unrealistic and undesirable, and resulted in unwarrantedly augmenting the costs of the vendee agencies. This is particularly true in that the costs which probably arose from inefficient management, spoilage and waste, confused operating policies, etc. (as brought out in H. Rept. 816, 79th Cong., 1st sess., which resulted from an investigation of the War Food Administration conducted during 1944 and 1945 under authority of H. Res. 50), were passed on to those agencies, principally the Lend-Lease Administration. In the case of cotton, the gain resulted almost entirely from the high prices obtained in disposing, during the war period, of cotton acquired by the Corporation in 1939 from crops of the years 1934 and 1937. The largest single trading operation loss was that of the wool price-support programs. To June 30, 1945, the recorded loss was $25,583,113, including a provision for loss on realization of wool inventories in the amount of $23,930,000. The provision for loss was substantially inadequate, primarily because it was determined on the basis of the wool inventory as of June 30, 1945, as shown by the books, of approximately 319,000,000 pounds. More than 100,000,000 pounds of wool held for the account of the Corporation at June 30, 1945, were not reflected on the books of the Corporation at that date and were omitted from the basis of the computation of the provision for loss.

8. Pooling operations: The agreements used in certain of the commodity-loan programs authorize the Corporation to pool for the account of the producers any collateral unredeemed at maturity of the loans. Producers participating in pools share ratably in the excess of sales proceeds, if any, over the Corporation's investment in the pooled collateral plus a charge equivalent to interest at the rate of 3 percent thereon made by CCC for financing and conducting the pools. If pool operations result in losses, they are borne by the Corporation. Other than the more or less moral obligation of protecting any possible equity of producers, the pooling operation in itself imposes no restrictions on the Corporation as to disposal of the collateral.

The decision to pool unredeemed collateral is made by the Corporation's board of directors, and this determination appears to be influenced by a number of factors including the physical character of the commodities involved, administrative difficulty of determining any producers' equities at maturity, and the possibility of inequitable settlements among producers where the collateral is liquidated and settlements are made on an individual basis. Those pools which have been conducted appear to have been in consideration of these factors, but the main reason for this type of operation apparently has been for the purpose of distributing among producers the excess of sales proceeds, if any, over the Corporation's investment, plus applicable charges. Generally, such gains result from the higher price levels existing at the time of disposal over the prices in effect at the time the collateral was taken over in settlement of the loans.

Another aspect of the pooling process, in connection with mandatory loans on cotton, concerns the effect of pooling on the total benefits to farmers rendered by the Corporation. To the extent that producers participate in the gain from pooling operations, they receive benefit in excess of the guaranteed price support and potentially in excess of parity. It is the view of the Corporation that, with parity as the ultimate objective, and price support being fixed at less than parity, pooling does no violence to the intent of the Congress. It should be noted that pooling operations applied to cotton only.

The principal pools conducted by the Corporation have resulted from wheat and cotton loans. The proceeds from the disposition of wheat pooled from the 1938, 1939, and 1940 loans were insufficient to cover costs, and no equity remained for the producers. The cotton pooled from the 1938, 1939, and 1940 loan programs was disposed of prior to June 30, 1945, and resulted in a recorded gain of $1,277,083 (before deduction of applicable charges). Of this amount, approximately $700,000 had been distributed to participants in the pools by June 30, 1945. The remainder, representing the equity of unlocated participants and charges equivalent to interest on CCC's investment, was reflected as an account payable in the Corporation's accounts at that date. As the cumulative total net loss reported by the Corporation to June 30, 1945, did not reflect the operating results of these pools, they are not included in the summary of cotton pooling operations presented in schedule 21.

Of approximately 1,600,000 bales of cotton pooled from the 1941 and 1942 loan programs, some 411,000 bales were recorded as sold by June 30, 1945, at an over-all loss of $1,685,540. This is the net amount of the loss of $5,012,548 computed by Commodity Credit Corporation on sales to exporters less the recorded gain of $3,327,008 on domestic sales. As shown on schedule 21, export sales were made at a discount of approximately $5,000,000. The export loss was reflected by Commodity Credit Corporation at June 30, 1945, as a part of its loss on export activities. The computed gain of $3,327,008 on domestic sales was applied by Commodity Credit Corporation against its total net loss to June 30, 1945. Subsequent to June 30, 1945, the entire amount of the export discounts was credited to the pools, so that an apparent net gain existed as of June 30, 1945. However, because this apparent net gain was less than the charges made by CCC for financing and conducting the pools, as determined on the basis of interest at the rate of 3 percent on the Corporation's investment therein, no equity for participating producers appears to have existed at that date. During the fiscal year 1947, the remaining cotton in these pools was disposed of and settlements were effected which resulted in distributions to producers of approximately $5,000,000.

9. Subsidy operations: Broadly speaking, the net cost of any financial aid granted by Government to a private individual or enterprise for the purpose of promoting the public welfare may be termed a subsidy. By definition, and in a broad economic sense, all losses resulting from programs carried on by Commodity Credit Corporation can be classified as subsidies, except losses on a few programs from which only other departments and agencies of the Government benefited. The use of the term "subsidy" in statutes, congressional committee hearings, and Government agency releases indicates that substantial differences in meaning exist and that within the Department of Agriculture there has been no commonly accepted definition used consistently. For example, the discount and differentials granted or paid on commodities exported have been referred to frequently as subsidies, and the wool price-support program has been described as in effect a subsidy to producers. However, the Corporation did not so consider nor classify those costs in its financial statements.

A review of the programs classified as subsidies by the Corporation indicates that they consist of programs undertaken for the general purpose of enabling the maintenance of OPA ceiling prices, of disposal of surplus inventory (e. g., wheat for feed), of control of the end-use of commodities (e. g., peanuts and cotton linters), and of price support. A number of programs were multipurpose (e. g., the purchase of damaged 1942 wheat, for sale at reduced prices as feed, subsidized the buyers and supported prices to the sellers).

The dollar loss shown by the books at June 30, 1945, is attributed, for the most part, to those programs classified by the Corporation as subsidies.

Prior to the presentation of financial statements as of January 31, 1945, no segregation was made by the Corporation of the results of operations as between those attributable to subsidy programs and those attributable to other programs. While a segregation was made at that time and has been continued essentially unchanged, we believe this classification of programs and aggregates of programs as subsidies is unsatisfactory for the purpose of financial reporting, although we understand that it was made to comply with certain congressional requirements.

Several factors other than the ordinary wartime increases in costs, such as wages and supplies, appear to have necessitated a number of the programs undertaken for the general purpose of enabling the maintenance of OPA ceiling prices. The more important of these were increased prices to attain the production level considered by the Department or WFA to be necessary, the absorption of wholesale price increases occurring between the establishment of retail-price ceilings, and the establishment of wholesale-price ceilings, absorption of the relative inequity in the ceiling prices set on the end-use products of some commodities, and transportation cost absorption because ceiling prices, based on average shipping costs, failed to compensate adequately for the long freight haul in the distribution of far West products.

In general, the programs classified by the Corporation as subsidies were carried out in four ways:

(a) Direct subsidy payments.

(b) Loss sales of commodities in inventory at less than cost, for special purposes.

(c) Purchase of commodities and simultaneous or deferred sale to the original vendor at a reduced price.

(d) Cost absorption.

Promptness of payment, particularly when dealing directly with farmers, and minimizing of direct administration appear to have been important or controlling factors in the selection of methods for the operation of subsidy programs. Most of the programs were actually carried on by agents. The methods used frequently resulted in prompt payments, and in some cases reduced the Corporation's investment, but delegated authority for direct administration to persons or agencies outside of the Corporation, and, in a number of programs, outside of the Department. There was a corresponding need for increased planning and specification of records to be maintained and accounting and over-all controls; implicit in such arrangements was the necessity of relying heavily on the ability of the Corporation to undertake the necessary administrative audits of agents' records; the Corporation apparently failed to recognize the importance of the foregoing. The substantial arrearage in auditing will never be completely overcome. In fact, a considerable number of audits have been waived by the Corporation in order to concentrate on current activities. The problem of ascertaining and recovering overpayments, which were made more likely by the lack of control over payments when made, is augmented by the fact that most of the programs were terminated during 1946.

It appears that there was some overlapping of purpose and duplication of benefits between the fluid milk, hay for dairymen, and corn ceiling price-adjustment programs on the one hand and the dairy production subsidy on the other. The dairy production payment rates were distributed on a basis intended to equalize production cost increases throughout the county, but the rates determined apparently did not reflect the benefits of subsidy programs already in operation in some areas. The duplication of benefits was recognized by the Corporation at the time the dairy production payment program was initiated, and indications are that an adjustment of payments was made in the New York area for the months of October, November, and December 1943 in recognition of the duplication of the fluid-milk subsidy. However, after December 1943, apparently because of the administrative difficulty of determining the incidence of the benefits from the indirect fluid milk subsidy, no further adjustment of dairy production payments was made. No reductions were made for either the corn or hay subsidy programs.

Proposals to limit the authority of the Corporation to engage in subsidy programs were introduced in the Congress a number of times. However, no limitations became operative until April 12, 1945, when certain limitations were placed on these operations for the fiscal year 1946. Section 6 of the Price Control Extension Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 664) permitted the continuation of these operations within specified limits during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1947. These limitations appear related to the programs undertaken for the purpose of maintaining maximum price ceilings, and required the termination of programs then considered as being carried on for that purpose when ceiling prices were no longer in effect. It is not apparent that agricultural subsidies in the broader, over-all economic sense were prohibited by this legislation after the termination of price controls. Most of the programs classified by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, as subsidies were terminated with the expiration of price controls, chiefly during 1946. Those programs which had been classified as subsidies, and which were continued after the expiration of price controls, were reclassified to other activities, chiefly price support. Since the expiration of sugar price controls on October 31, 1947, the Corporation has not classified the results of any commodity program as a subsidy.

No funds were appropriated to the Corporation to cover the payment of subsidies, and no appropriations were authorized to be made with respect to periods prior to June 30, 1945. In general, funds borrowed from the Treasury of the United States, with interest, were used to cover the cost of programs classified as subsidies by the Corporation. Duty-free importations and the offsetting of certain gains against costs enables the Corporation to reduce substantially the borrowings required.

Commodity Credit Corporation financed and administered substantially all wartime subsidy programs relating to agricultural commodities. Defense Supplies Corporation of the RFC group allowed or paid subsidies relative to a few commodities (livestock, flour, butter, and sugar) but incurred a greater aggregate cost to June 30, 1945 ($1,296,528,148). The DSC livestock and butter subsidies, payments for which aggregated $1,097,714,119, were undertaken to effectuate reductions in retail prices in establishing retail price ceilings by OPA. The net recorded losses on programs classified as subsidies by Commodity Credit Corporation to June 30, 1945, amounted to $1,282,923,640, distributed as follows:

Milk and dairy products	$763,420,737
Grain and grain products	277,703,582
Fruits and vegetables	81,675,495
Oilseeds and products	82,319,634
Sugar	57,397,425
Beverages	5,758,692
Livestock production and meat	5,000,486
Miscellaneous (net gain)	−1,352,411
Total	1,282,923,640

The total of the above tabulation does not represent the real net cost to June 30, 1945, of the programs classified as subsidy operations, either to the Government or to the corporation, as it is exclusive, in general, of any portion of the corporation's general overhead expenses and interest on borrowed funds and does not take into account the fact that certain items were imported duty free. (See item 10 following.)

Furthermore, certain other factors affected the total recorded subsidy losses to June 30, 1945. These consist of the following:

(1) The corporation was obligated under subsidy agreements for substantial but undetermined amounts not reflected in the results of operations to June 30, 1945. Provisions were made for estimated obligations at that date only with respect to two programs, dairy production and beef production, in the amounts of $125,000,000 and $5,000,000, respectively.

(2) Profitable purchase or supply programs were commingled with subsidy programs. Because of this situation, the cocoa programs resulted in a net profit. The stated cost of the coffee programs was substantially reduced because the subsidy aspects were not segregated.

(3) The cost of the subsidies allowed on vegetable oils and meals was reduced to $6,670,180 by a profit of approximately $6,000,000 on meal produced from 1942 crop oilseeds carried forward and sold in 1943 at increased OPA ceiling prices. In a somewhat similar manner, the gain of approximately $1,315,000 on the purchase and sale of grapes and substandard or damaged raisins was offset against raisin subsidy payments.

(4) The cotton linters program, which had an accumulated profit of $1,441,755 to June 30, 1945, was included in the subsidy classification. Subsequent to June 30, 1945, this program was reclassified by the corporation to the nonsubsidy group.

(5) The loss on the Argentine corn importation program, which amounted to $2,106,398 to June 30, 1945, was excluded from subsidy costs by the corporation. Subsequently, the corporation classified this program as a subsidy.

(6) The substantial subsidy allowed to peanut crushers (for oil) was obscured by offsetting the profits derived from sales of peanuts allocated for edible purposes and from the Argentine peanut-purchase program. As the result of this grouping of program results, a net credit or "profit" of $1,316,839 was reflected in subsidy operations.

(7) Sufficient accounts were not maintained for the soybean program to permit of a suitable segregation of costs as between the subsidy and nonsubsidy aspects, and faulty procedures were used by the Corporation in allocating costs to the phases of the program for which accounts were maintained. Allowances for processing were reflected through discounts on sales; the amount of costs so recorded is not apparent in the accounts. As in the peanut subsidy (item 6), a profit in excess of $5,000,000 on crude soybean oil, as determined under Corporation accounting procedures, was offset against subsidy costs.

10. Restrictions on the disposal of commodities: In the past, limitations have been placed upon the Corporation, by legislation, with respect to the methods and terms of disposal of owned or controlled commodities. As an illustration, effective July 31, 1939, cotton sales were limited to 300,000 bales per month and 1,500,000 bales in any calendar year, and the recoupment of all related costs was required. Partly as a result of these restrictions, sales of the large inventory of cotton acquired in 1939 were curtailed during the early war period. These restrictions were suspended by the act of April 12, 1945. The large inventory of cotton accumulated during the effective period has been disposed of, in general, at war-induced high prices; the Corporation appears to have profited from its inability to dispose of the cotton during the earlier years at the much lower prices then obtainable. However, it appears that the reimposition of such limitations might cause the accumulation of another large surplus inventory of cotton.

Another significant restriction has been the prohibition, since 1943, of sales of commodities at less than parity or comparable prices. The act of April 12, 1945, continued this prohition to a date subsequently determined to be December 31, 1948. The effect of this prohibition has not been material, except in the case of wool, because the demands of the war or the supply programs operated by the Corporation have provided outlets for owned or controlled commodities at prices in excess of the related parity or comparable prices. A number of exceptions to this prohibition had been granted from time to time by the Congress between 1943 and June 30, 1945, the more important of which have permitted the sale of wheat at reduced prices for feed and alcohol (the cost of these subsidies to June 30, 1945, according to the Corporation, was $260,100,000), disposal abroad of surplus agricultural commodities, disposal for new or byproduct uses, and disposal to prevent deterioration. Other changes in this type of restriction are contained in legislation enacted subsequent to June 30, 1945.

Operational limitations of these types, while they give effect to the will of the Congress, necessarily limit the discretion of operating officials and reduce the extent to which the management of the Corporation can be held responsible for the results of operations.

11. Importations made free of duty: In considering the financial results of the various programs, it should be noted that the Corporation exercised the privilege of making importations free of duty.

The privilege of making importations free of duty originated in legislation enacted in 1914 in order to enable the Secretary of the Navy to avoid the payment of duties on repair parts or war materials purchased abroad to be brought to the United States for research or testing purposes. On May 30, 1942, the President, by Executive Order 9177, vested in certain other officials, including the Secretary of Agriculture, the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to make emergency purchases of war materials abroad and to import them free of duty. The Secretary of Agriculture, in turn, delegated this authority to Commodity Credit Corporation.

The Corporation has not exercised the privilege since January 1, 1947, and the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to make importations free of duty was terminated by Executive Order 9903, November 12, 1947.

The result of the exercise of this authority to make duty-free importations has been a saving in costs to the Corporation of an estimated $150,400,000 to June 30, 1945. These cost-savings either increased program gains or reduced program losses correspondingly, and likewise decreased the Corporation's borrowing requirements from the Treasury.

12. Accounting weaknesses and improvements: Our examination of the affairs of Commodity Credit Corporation was seriously impeded by major deficiencies in accounting policies and procedures and methods of financial reporting. In this connection, however, many improvements in accounting procedures have been put into effect subsequent to June 30, 1945, as commented on beginning on page 36.

To June 30, 1945, the Corporation had not developed adequate control over financial and operating responsibilities through accounting. The accounting records and the record-keeping procedures were not utilized by the management as an instrument of control over the assets and liabilities and over revenues and costs to the extent we believe to be desirable.

The primary causes of the failure of the accounting function were found in the manner in which the functions of the Corporation were intermingled with others of the Department of Agriculture, the apparent lack of appreciation by the management of the necessity for accurate financial reporting, and difficulties inherent in the operating characteristics of programs. These factors are commented upon previously, particularly in items 2, 3, and 4.

Another cause, largely corollary to the above, was the lack of accounting influence in the preparation of program plans, announcements, or contracts. We believe greater participation by accountants could have reduced operating, accounting, and auditing problems.

Many factors prevented a satisfactory audit of the affairs of Commodity Credit Corporation for the period ended June 30, 1945, among the more significant of which were:

(a) The basic records for the receipt and payment of cash funds maintained in the general ledger could not, in the aggregate, be reconciled with the records of the Corporation's treasurer as of June 30, 1945. (See p. 50.)

(b) The Corporation did not maintain adequate control over amounts recorded as being receivable or payable. It was not possible in many instances to determine who owed amounts purporting to be receivable or to whom amounts recorded as owing were due. It also was not possible to determine that all amounts owed to or by the Corporation were reflected in the accounts.

(c) A substantial portion of commodities owned by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, were assigned values based upon cumulative average unit costs. The use of this method resulted in an unsatisfactory evaluation of inventory on hand and misstatement of operating results.

(d) Accounting control exercised by the Corporation over inventories was generally unsatisfactory, particularly in the case of the general commodities purchase program. Procedures by which sales were recorded and arrearages in documentation prevented any effective control over the conversion of inventory to receivables and their subsequent liquidation by receipt of cash.

(e) Systematic cut-offs in the recording of purchases and sales for many of the programs were not observed at the end of each accounting period.

(f) The Corporation did not exercise satisfactory control over its investment in fixed assets, particularly grain bins and related equipment. Records were not maintained in such a way as to enable the Corporation (or us) to know the location or condition of such assets, whether, in fact, they were still owned by the Corporation, or whether all income resulting from rental or sale had been received.

(g) One of the results of accounting procedures followed was the excessive use of suspense accounts to record items whose final disposition could not be determined in a current routine manner. In many instances, no control was exercised over entries to such accounts; they were not reconciled nor were the items disposed of promptly.

(h) The Corporation made virtually no use of accounting mechanisms or procedures to effect control over its affairs internally, and to June 30, 1945, no significant use was made of internal auditing.

Contributing to the foregoing was the lack of a satisfactory chart of accounts and manual of accounting instructions; furthermore, there was no uniform means of promulgating such accounting instructions as were issued.

Financial statements submitted by the Corporation as at June 30, 1945, in many respects, were not informative. While they consisted, in general, of a balance sheet and a condensed statement of income supported by a summary of program results, no operating detail other than the net loss or gain by commodity programs, segregated as between subsidy and other, was provided. Interest income and provisions for inventory losses were excluded from the results of program operations as reported by the Corporation. Furthermore, as previously mentioned in connection with subsidy operations, the reported operating results of individual programs, in general, were exclusive of any portion of the Corporation's general overhead expenses and interest on borrowed funds, which, though substantial, were not allocated on the books of the Corporation to individual programs or groups of programs. We believe that the allocation of such expenses to individual programs is highly desirable, so that the reported operating results of individual programs may provide an indication of the effectiveness with which the programs were administered from year to year, and in order that they may reflect the net cost in relation to the accomplishment of the programs.

It should be noted that the Corporation is not in accord with these views. It states that it follows an accepted accounting practice by treating interest as an over-all financing charge, because, in its opinion, interest can only be distributed to programs by arbitrary assumptions of questionable validity. Furthermore, the Corporation deems that the allocation of overhead to individual programs is impractical because of the many programs and varied types of operations handled by one working group, which would require arbitrary estimates and prorations to such an extent that the result would be of little value and would require an elaborate cost system.

Besides this circumstance, the total amount of recorded overhead costs did not represent the full costs of administration of the Corporation's activities, because there were excluded from the accounts costs borne by other Government agencies. For example, during the fiscal year 1945 the cost of administering purchase and sale operations conducted on behalf of lend-lease was borne directly by lend-lease funds in the approximate amount of $6,531,000. In addition, expenses identical in character with operating expenses often were classified otherwise in the accounts.

To some extent the Corporation's financial statements were on a cash basis, transactions having been recognized in the underlying accounts only at the point in time when they resulted in the receipt or disbursement of cash. In addition, there were delays in the reporting of transactions, including cash transactions, and further delays in disposing of accounting data. The amounts of assets, liabilities, revenues, and expenses which were omitted from, or improperly classified in, the Corporation's financial statements as the result of these circumstances were not determinable. Unrecorded liabilities are known to have existed, but no representations can be made concerning either their aggregate amount, which we believe was substantial, or their effect upon the financial statements. Furthermore, there was an incomplete consolidation of the accounts of War Hemp Industries, Inc.

The financial statements included in this report were prepared by us from the books and records of the Corporation and represent an attempt to make as informative a presentation as possible. To the extent that we could identify items of interest and general overhead expenses, they have been allocated to individual programs. The remainder, in the amount of $108,159,076, is designated on exhibit 2 as general overhead and interest expense. However, it was not practicable to attempt correction of fundamental deficiencies, because to do so would have necessitated expanding the scope of our examination to a degree not practical and would have resulted in the unavoidable assumption of some of the responsibility of management. It is primarily the duty of auditors to review complete accounting data and no part of their duty to undertake accomplishment of the accounting function or otherwise relieve management of its responsibility therefor.

Our conclusions concerning the accounting situation existing in the Corporation at June 30, 1945, may be expressed, in general terms, as follows:

(a) The accounting procedures and financial reporting policies did not provide a satisfactory medium of control over the assets, liabilities, income, and expenses of the Corporation.

(b) The chief accounting officer was not required to furnish timely, reliable data helpful to operating officials.

(c) The Corporation had not adopted a body of sound accounting policy reflecting the application of recognized principles for the presentation of statements of its financial position or the operating results of its activities.

(d) Internal controls were generally lacking or were not utilized satisfactorily; internal audit activity was practically nonexistent.

However, even under these conditions, a presentation of financial statements with informative discussion is, in our opinion, of value in setting forth, to some extent, the results of activities of the Corporation and requirements for corrective measures. We are aware of numerous adjustments which could have been made; however, except for the treatment as income of $139,171,171 reserved by the Corporation for possible losses on the general commodities purchase program, no adjustments are reflected in the accompanying statements. Except for the adjustment noted, the "excess of subsidies and losses over net gains," as shown in exhibit 2, is equal to the "excess of expenses and other charges over income," as reflected by the Corporation's operating statement.

It should be pointed out that, notwithstanding the accounting deficiencies discussed, the officials of the Department of Agriculture and the Corporation recognized the desirability of having the General Accounting Office perform a so-called commercial-type audit of its financial transactions. Representatives of the Department, working jointly with those of the General Accounting Office, drafted legislative provisions enacted in the act of February 28, 1944 (58 Stat. 105), which contained a provision directing the Comptroller General to make such an audit for each fiscal year, commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. In February 1945 requirements for a similar audit were imposed with respect to all Government corporations, and in December 1945 the Government Corporation Control Act was approved, reaffirming the application, though broadening the definition, of the commercial-type audit principle.

Because of the lapse of time since the date as of which this examination was made, and in order to recognize corrective efforts by present officials, many of whom were not associated with the Corporation during the period covered by the examination, we believe it to be desirable to discuss, briefly, improvements in the accounting function subsequent to June 30, 1945.

The Corporation has given increased recognition to the importance of sound accounting policies and procedures, has augmented its accounting staff, and appointed a controller in April 1947, who was made an officer of the Corporation on May 12, 1947. In December 1945 the Office of Audit of PMA was established and assigned the responsibility for internal auditing relative to CCC. Since that date, substantial improvements have been noted in internal audits and examinations.

Procedure revisions have brought about greater coordination between field offices and Washington, the control over accounting matters has been improved, and the assignment of responsibility for record keeping as between the Corporation and its agents has been clarified considerably.

The use of agents has been curtailed considerably, chiefly because a number of programs in which they were used extensively have been terminated. Relative to remaining programs in which agents are utilized (still a large segment of corporate activities), considerable effort has been directed toward obtaining satisfactory control over their operations. Fiscal agreements, accounting methods, procedures, and forms are being reviewed and improved, and through field supervision their installation and operation more closely controlled. With the exception of current cotton-loan programs, the Federal Reserve banks have been made merely cash receiving and paying agents. Accounting procedures to be followed by State and county agricultural conservation committees are now being prescribed by corporate accounting officials.

Current accounting for program operations is on a fiscal-year basis, and it appears that considerable progress has been made in the application of the principles of accrual accounting, including the use of reserves. The Corporation has established a series of publications as a means of providing personnel with policy and procedure guides concerning account classification, detailed accounting procedures, and reporting instructions. In September 1947 the Corporation, after considerable study, issued a statement of accounting policies and practices which in the main establishes a body of sound accounting policy.

The Corporation took steps during the fiscal year 1946 to obtain control over the accounting for the receipt and disbursement of cash, and by June 30, 1947, had adjusted the differences arising from cash transactions prior to July 1, 1946. Cash balances arising from transactions subsequent to June 30, 1946, have been reconciled with records of the depositaries on a current basis.

During the fiscal year 1946 the "first-in, first-out" method of inventory pricing was adopted for a number of commodities, particularly grains. An individual lot-cost method is in use for some commodities, principally processed foods. This should result in a more acceptable assignment of costs to inventories and sales, insofar as those commodities are concerned. However, to June 30, 1947, the cumulative average unit cost method was still followed in connection with cotton.

Considerable progress has been made by the Corporation since June 30, 1945, in the proper accumulation of underlying accounting data to facilitate the preparation of informative financial statements. Continuing effort should result in further refinement and improvement, and financial statements in the future should be progressively more satisfactory.

In closing these general comments, the following observations appear to be pertinent:

The Corporation's organization was subjected to great strain as a result of the problems created by the war, the need to move swiftly in undertaking many programs, and the acute need for skilled and highly specialized personnel. The imperfections in organization, accounting, and operations which resulted became difficult to appraise in the light of these circumstances, and there is a tendency toward using hindsight too freely or undervaluating the circumstances which prevailed. We have attempted to weigh fairly these factors and, although some of our criticisms are severe, it is not our intention to undervaluate the responsibilities undertaken and carried out by the Corporation during the war or to cause the contribution made by the Corporation during peace and war to be overlooked or discounted.

In an endeavor of this nature it is unavoidable that certain operations or features deserving of commendation will escape specific treatment in order to make room for constructive criticism of others. All our efforts have been grounded on a desire to be helpful to the Congress and the Corporation in disclosing significant facts and conditions and suggesting remedies within the purview of our duty as professional auditors, and under the law.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Reference has been made earlier in this report to the integration of the activities of the Corporation with other programs of the Department of Agriculture. Department and Corporation representatives have stated that this commingling of activities is for the purpose of accomplishing the objectives of various statutes without overlapping or duplicating effort.

While this method of operating is a part of the Department's plan for conducting a coordinated agricultural program, it places the Corporation in an organizational pattern that is quite different from the position of Government corporations generally in carrying out their purposes.

With few exceptions, Government corporations have been so organized as to be independent units, either within or without the framework of other departments or agencies. In most instances, even when corporations are placed within departments, they exercise varying degrees of independence. This independence and separateness is there thought to be fundamental in order that the Board of Directors, acting independently for the Corporation, may conduct the affairs of the Corporation in an impartial manner and in the best interests of the objectives of the Corporation.

A corporation's entity is normally distinguishable. Its operating policies are independently formulated within the framework of the powers and authority; its cost of fulfilling its purposes (which is very significant) can be reasonably determined; its Board of Directors can be free to carry out its purposes and can be held strictly accountable for their stewardship and management of the affairs of the Corporation. Since, under these conditions, costs of conducting the activities of a corporation can be reasonably determined, budget presentations can be made significant and realistic, and under such conditions intelligent controls thus maintained by the Congress.

We feel that a corporation, even though it is placed within a department, should be in a position to operate in the most independent manner compatible with its mission, with complete management responsibilities (including the responsibility for policy making and general supervision) vested in its Board of Directors. The day-to-day operations of the Corporation should be placed in the hands of a full-time staff of executive officers, headed by the president as chief executive appointed by and responsible to the board.

We were requested to submit our recommendations to the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, and the House Banking and Currency Committee considering the new Federal charter required for Commodity Credit Corporation, on which hearings were held early in 1948. Our recommendations covered the powers, authority, responsibilities and duties, organization, financing, and control of the affairs of the Corporation.[2] The Charter Act (Public Law 806, 80th Cong., approved June 29, 1948) contains a number of provisions similar to or consistent with these recommendations; for example, those pertaining to the appointment and organization of the board of directors and the executive staff and the charging of interest on capital.

It can only be concluded at this time that the differences in the views of the General Accounting Office and those of the Corporation with respect to the manner in which the Corporation should be organized and managed stem from the basic fundamental concept of whether the activities conducted by the Corporation are the sole responsibility of the Secretary and whether the agricultural program of the country is to be recognized as the program of the Secretary.

If this be the desire of the Congress, then there is for consideration the need for the existence of the Corporation as such, and we would be in substantial agreement with the Department of Agriculture that the responsibility for the activities now carried on by the Corporation be vested in the Secretary.

Should the Congress, however, wish to have the usually desirable system of checks and balances govern the activities of the Corporation—and a need for its continuance is evident—then we recommend for the consideration of the Congress those attributes normally present in the corporate structure with respect to its organization, management, and financing.

It should be noted that the Corporation, under its broad charter authority, and in certain cases under specific provisions of existing laws, undertakes many different programs. We also recognize that under the provisions of Public Law 897, approved July 3, 1948, the Secretary of Agriculture will, on January 1, 1950, become responsible to a greater degree for an important segment of the activities of the Corporation. It should further be pointed out that in certain other laws it is the Corporation that is given the responsibility for carrying out certain programs, rather than the Secretary of Agriculture.

Thus, then, there may be some doubt as to where the real responsibility lies for carrying out the entire operating program of the Corporation. It is for the Congress to make this determination and then provide legislation that will insure that authority will conjoin responsibility in conducting all operations of the Corporation, which embrace such vast sums of public funds and affect so many millions of Americans, both within and without the agricultural sphere.

ORIGIN AND PURPOSE

The creation of Commodity Credit Corporation was directed by Executive Order 6340, dated October 16, 1933. As authority for this order, the President cited the National Industrial Recovery Act, dated June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195), which provided, in section 2 (a) of title I, for creation of the agencies necessary to effectuate the policies of the act. The Corporation was chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware on October 17, 1933.

The original purpose of the Corporation was indicated as the performance of functions and services aimed at benefiting the public welfare during the period of the emergency existing "by reason of widespread distress and unemployment, disorganization of industry, and the impairment of the agricultural assets supporting the national credit structure." The National Industrial Recovery Act was one of seven acts to which Executive Order 6340 referred in outlining the purposes of the Corporation. The certificate of incorporation cited as objects and purposes the doing of any or all things necessary to accomplish the purposes of these acts:

1. The Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933 (48 Stat. 31).

2. The National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195).

3. The Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933 (48 Stat. 55).

4. Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, approved January 22, 1932 (47 Stat. 5).

5. The Federal Farm Loan Act, approved July 17, 1916 (39 Stat. 360).

6. The Farm Credit Act of 1933, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 257).

7. The Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, approved July 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 709).

Almost immediately after its creation, the Corporation assumed an important role in the extension of financial aid to agriculture. This was done initially through the granting of commodity loans, later by outright purchases and direct payments.

The organization and operation of Commodity Credit Corporation was only one of a number of early actions in the interest of agriculture. In 1929 the Federal Farm Board, which came into being through the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1929 (46 Stat. 11), had been furnished operating funds and a revolving fund of $500,000,000 for the purpose of stabilizing prices of wheat and cotton. Stabilization efforts began with loans to cooperative associations and stabilization corporations, but prior to 1931 loans had been discarded in favor of direct purchases. The board soon owned enormous quantities of both wheat and cotton. However, the acquisition of these large supplies had checked only temporarily the downward plunge of prices, and it became apparent that effective maintenance of income and prices required more than the governmental acquisition of surpluses. Attention was therefore given to the feasibility of preventing crop surpluses through production control. This was pioneered and carried on through the Agricultural Adjustment Acts (48 Stat. 31; 52 Stat. 31) and the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (49 Stat. 1148). Pursuant to these acts, a number of acreage controls and farming practices have been prescribed or urged, and soil conservation payments and nonrecourse loans authorized or directed by the acts have been paid in whole or in part depending upon compliance therewith.

Many other aids to agriculture were made available, including those through—

1. Federal land banks and Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Mortgage loans were made available for long terms at low rates.

2. Production credit corporations. Intermediate credit was made available for financing the production and acquisition of livestock, equipment, and crops.

3. Cooperative marketing and processing associations. These associations, which were Government sponsored and in some cases Government financed, assisted in the production and orderly distribution of agricultural commodities.

4. Farm Security Administration. Loans were made available to tenants, share croppers, and farmers where conditions were such that normal credit risks would ordinarily bar the loans.

5. Rural Electrification Administration. Loans were made to farmers' cooperatives, permitting construction of rural electric lines and distribution systems.

6. Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. Insurance which could not be obtained from commercial companies was made available on certain crops under conditions and at rates highly beneficial to the farmer desiring protection against crop loss.

7. Programs authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, financed by funds provided under the provisions of section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 774). This section appropriated for the use of the Secretary funds equal to 30 percent of the annual customs receipts. Funds so appropriated are directed to be used to encourage exportation and domestic consumption of agricultural commodities and to assist in reestablishing the purchasing power of farmers.

The Delaware charter of Commodity Credit Corporation was much more comprehensive than the Executive order providing for its creation and included many broad clauses both as to purposes and powers. Among the most important of these were:

[2] See hearings on the Federal reincorporation of Commodity Credit Corporation (H. R. 6263, 80th Cong.) before the House Committee on Banking and Currency (pp. 194, 195), and on Commodity Credit Corporation Charter S. 1322, 80th Cong.) before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (particularly pp. 148 to 162, inclusive).

1. To purchase, or otherwise acquire, to hold, or otherwise to deal in, to sell or otherwise dispose of any and all agricultural and/or other commodities, and/or products thereof, and to loan and/or borrow money upon the same.

2. To enter into, and to encourage farmers, producers, and others to enter into, marketing plans and agreements and to cooperate in any plan which provides for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market of agricultural commodities.

3. In general, to have and to exercise all the powers and privileges conferred by the general corporation laws of Delaware upon corporations, and to do all and everything necessary, suitable, and proper for the accomplishment of any of the purposes or for the attainment of any of the objects or for the furtherance of any of the powers herein set forth, either alone or in association with other corporations, firms, agencies, or individuals, and to do every other act or thing lawfully incident or appurtenant to or growing out of or connected with any of the aforesaid objects, purposes, and/or powers.

The certificate of incorporation provided for perpetual existence of Commodity Credit Corporation, although the National Industrial Recovery Act provided that any agency established thereunder should cease to exist at the expiration of 2 years from the date of passage of the act. The continued operation of Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the Government was authorized from time to time by the Congress, its expiration date under the Delaware charter being June 30, 1948.[3] The act of January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), made the first extension, and all other continuances were amendments to this act.

With the coming of war, production control aims of the Department of Agriculture were supplanted to a great extent by new purposes. Commodity Credit Corporation was utilized by the War Food Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture in discharging many of their responsibilities for procurement of agricultural commodities for lend-lease and for the armed forces and for taking various actions deemed advisable to insure a sufficiency of production. This activity involved extensive use of subsidies and direct purchases.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT PRESENTATION

The financial statements included in this report were prepared by us from the books and records of the Corporation and its affiliate, War Hemp Industries, Inc.

The Corporation's accounting for program operations was not on a fiscal year basis but was cumulative for each program; furthermore, because transactions were not all recorded in the year in which they were consummated and because the accrual basis of accounting for losses and expenses was not fully observed, it has been impossible in the past to derive reasonably accurate data as to each fiscal year's operations; hence all operating statements included herein are presented on a cumulative basis. Furthermore, the underlying accounts from which financial statements were prepared contained substantial errors resulting from the adherence to unsound accounting policies and from faulty adherence to procedures.

Other factors have obscured the real costs of many of the Corporation's programs. Principal among these were the manner of recording the effect of the exercise of the free-of-duty importation privilege, the offsetting of gains against losses in reporting the apparent costs of several of the programs classified as subsidy, and the accounting policies then in effect relative to accruals, reserves, and inventory pricing. In addition, and in common with Government corporations generally, operating results of the Corporation from inception to June 30, 1945, as reflected in its books and records, are exclusive of the following costs:

1. Employees of the Corporation were covered by civil-service regulations and contributed to the United States Civil Service Retirement Fund, to which the Government also made substantial contributions. The Corporation made no contribution to the fund and therefore did not bear its proportionate share of the Government's costs for these purposes.

2. The Corporation did not bear the cost of any payments made on behalf of corporate employees from the United States Employees' Compensation Fund, Federal Security Agency.

Furthermore, by virtue of the act of March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 108), the Corporation is subject to taxation only on real property and is exempt from all other taxation by any taxing body.

Sufficient information was not available to permit the preparation of a consolidated statement of income showing sales, cost of sales, other income and expenses, and other items in the orthodox manner. Therefore, we have summarized in exhibit 2, "Statement of recorded gains, losses, and subsidies," the results of operations relative to each commodity. The primary consideration in the preparation of exhibit 2 was the desire to reflect the results of the Corporation's activities, first, by broad objectives (price support, supply, export, foreign purchase, etc.), and, second, operationally by the manner in which the attainment of these objectives was sought. To accomplish the latter, segregation by the four broad types of operation—lending, subsidy, trading, and pooling—was adopted. The segregation of programs by objectives used by the Corporation in the presentation of its budget for the fiscal year 1947 was utilized, with certain deviations. The budget presentation as then devised, and adhered to since, resulted in the display of considerably more financial data as well as a segregation of programs. In the retroactive application of this segregation to the cumulative results of operation to June 30, 1945, the following difficulties, among others, were encountered:

1. Virtually all programs of the Corporation had one or both of two principal objectives—price support or supply. Between these it was not always possible to distinguish the precise nature of the program, particularly during the war period.

2. Acquisition and disposal in price-support activities frequently accomplished the objective of supply.

3. Programs aimed at obtaining supplies through direct purchases frequently accomplished also the objective of price support.

4. Export activities designed to remove surplus agricultural commodities from domestic markets also accomplished the objective of price support.

5. Foreign purchase activities accomplished the objective of supply and appear to be but a phase of supply activities, except to the extent that they had as their principal objective the support of the agricultural economy of foreign nations. This was the stated purpose of some programs conducted in the Latin-American countries.

6. Subsidy programs may have resulted in the accomplishment of the objectives of either price support or supply.

7. At any point in time, the objective of a program may have changed from one of price support to supply or vice versa.

The above conditions also indicate the impossibility of distinguishing the results of the Corporation's activities between the periods of peace and war. This conclusion is strengthened when consideration is given to the effect of the war on the disposition of commodities acquired as the result of prewar operations (notably cotton), and the continuation through the war period of price-support programs both directly and as a result of supply programs.

In attempting to make the summary of program results (exhibit 2) informative and yet retain as great a degree of simplicity as possible, we have deviated from CCC statement presentation in some respects. Chief among these are:

1. Subsidies were eliminated as an objective of any group of programs. It is illogical to impute to subsidy activities an objective in themselves. A subsidy program, regardless of the manner of achieving the subsidy, can be only a method of attaining an objective beyond the granting of subsidy. As explained on page 24, it was not possible to provide a basis in the accounts for classification of these programs by objective according to usual accounting principles. For the sake of simplicity, the results of subsidy operations have been related generally to commodity programs already grouped among price-support activities. It should be recognized, however, that not all these operations had as their objective the support of commodity prices.

2. Loans to the Secretary of Agriculture have been eliminated as a major activity. Interest earned as a result of these loans was relatively insignificant and has been treated as a reduction of unallocated interest expense.

3. Programs relating only indirectly to a commodity or activity have been segregated under a separate caption indicating them to be only financing or servicing in nature.

Individual statements of income and expenses for significant programs or groups of programs, by commodity, by type of operation, were prepared where possible; when considered informative, summaries of program results were prepared. In the preparation of the individual statements of income and expenses, our effort was directed toward identifying and matching costs and revenues. This, among other considerations, was accomplished insofar as the character of underlying accounts would permit. To the extent that they are identifiable, items of interest income, interest expense, general overhead expenses, and provisions for inventory losses are reflected in the operating results of individual programs. It is recognized that inaccuracies probably still exist which would be removed only by analysis to an extent not considered practical. No adjustments have been applied to the accounts representing cumulative losses to June 30, 1945, except that we have treated the entire net income from the general commodities purchase program as a reduction of losses whereas the Corporation deferred recognition of a large portion of such income. This adjustment amounted to $139,171,171. (See p. 36.)

While many substantial errors were disclosed by our examination[4] that would require adjustment of the financial statements of the Corporation and the results of its operations, no adjustments, except that mentioned in the preceding paragraph, were made therefor because of the realization that only a part of the errors were disclosed as a result of our examination and that it was impracticable to expand the scope of the examination to reveal and adjust errors to the extent necessary to permit us to present financial statements concerning which we could express a definite opinion. In other words, it is a primary responsibility of the management to keep accurate and adequate accounts as a basis for audit, and it is both impracticable and undesirable to relieve the management of such responsibility through the audit process.

Comment relative to specific balance sheet items is contained in the following paragraphs.

Cash

The cash funds of the Corporation at June 30, 1945, are summarized as follows:

In checking accounts with the U. S. Treasury:
Capital funds	$29,503,829
Funds for the payment of administrative expenses	1,005,795
	30,509,624
On special deposit in the U. S. Treasury:
Employee deductions for the purchase of war bonds	21,872
Employee deductions for Federal income taxes	114,980
	136,852
In checking accounts with banks:
Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago	$706,432
Bank of Brazil, Rio de Janeiro	104,228
	810,660
Cash receipts not deposited	12,693,979
Total cash funds, as shown in exhibit 1	44,154,115

The amount shown above as available for the payment of administrative expenses was established from capital funds and disbursed only by the Division of Disbursement, United States Treasury. Any balance unexpended is returnable to capital funds after a period of 2 years following the close of the fiscal year for which made available.

The amount of capital funds, $29,503,829, was capable of being reconciled with the records of the Treasury at June 30, 1945; however, the program classification accounts in the general ledger, which reflected the receipt and payment of cash funds, could not be reconciled in the aggregate with the cash records of the Corporation maintained independently, based on advices received from the depositaries. This was due to the existence of a number of items, some of substantial amount, the nature of which was not known. In the balance sheet, exhibit 1, these have been included in the net amount of suspense items which is composed of numerous undistributed and unallocated charges and credits, many of which affected cash receipt and disbursement transactions. Some of these items came into existence in 1944, when records were taken over from the Federal Reserve banks, and represent differences between bank and Commodity Credit Corporation records which were never reconciled or adjusted. Corporation officials have stated that a complete reconciliation will never be made as, in their opinion, the time and effort would not be justified. A considerable portion of the cash difference, however, cannot be attributed to the transfer of records from the banks, but is a result of the unsatisfactory control exercised over the accounting for cash receipts and disbursements.

Accounts and notes receivable

The accounts and notes receivable owing to the Corporation at June 30, 1945, are summarized as follows:

Arising from sales:
General commodities purchase program	$366,643,129
Other	155,680,315
Claims and miscellaneous receivables	5,934,374
Peanut seed matured notes	869,212
Due from producers	92,681
Advances and deposits (hemp)	23,586
Total	529,268,297
Less reserve for losses on peanut seed notes	400,000
Total	528,868,297

This amount is presented in the balance sheet, exhibit 1, as follows:

Due from Government agencies	$369,837,332
Due from others	159,030,965
Total, as above	528,868,297

The segregation of receivables between those due from Government agencies and others was made by the use of data presented by the Corporation as a basis. The accounts maintained did not provide an adequate medium for such a segregation, and the segregation made by the Corporation could not be supported in full by analysis.

The amount of $366,643,129 recorded as due from sales made in the general commodities purchase program could not be supported nor verified. The recorded balances of individual accounts are subject to qualification as a result of faulty application of accounting policies and poorly devised procedures. Amounts recorded as owing from sales made in this program were recorded on the basis of quoted prices on the date of recordation, while billings to customers were based upon the quoted price as of the date of delivery. Adjustments frequently were not made. In a number of cases, entries for quantities sold (with associated values) were based upon representations made by the purchaser and could not be supported by documentary evidence. In the case of certain other programs, it was also impossible to support or verify recorded balances of receivables, particularly in the case of claims and miscellaneous receivables.

Loans to aid agriculture

Loans outstanding at June 30, 1945, are summarized from schedule 5, as follows:

Commodity loans:	Amount
Basic commodities:
Cotton (2,567,564 bales)	$251,654,330
Wheat (21,983,355 bushels)	30,808,073
Corn (18,753,218 bushels)	16,731,894
Tobacco (2,780,204 pounds)	856,919
Total	300,051,216
Steagall commodities	608,808
Other commodities	3,799,719
Total commodity loans	304,457,743
Loans for operating expenses, equipment, and facilities	4,114,320
Accrued interest and storage charges relating to loans held by private lending agencies	5,707,157
Loans outstanding as shown in exhibit 1	314,279,220

The total amount of loans outstanding as shown above includes $86,035,259 applicable to loans which were made by private lending agencies under CCC loan programs and which the Corporation was obligated to purchase at maturity in the event of default by the borrower or on demand by the holder. The Corporation followed the practice of reporting loans made and held by lending agencies under CCC loan programs as a part of total loans outstanding, and showing the corresponding obligation to purchase as a liability. Although, according to its attorneys, the various lending agencies participating in these loan programs were not legal agents of the Corporation, loans held by such agencies were regarded by the Corporation as loans of CCC for reporting purposes. These loans were made in connection with CCC loan programs under terms and conditions prescribed by the Corporation, primarily on the credit of the Corporation. In the interest of showing the extent of its various loan programs, the Corporation included them in total loans outstanding. While this classification may not be entirely satisfactory in the light of customary accounting practice, it does simplify the financial presentation of the activities of the commodity loan programs, and, as a matter of convenience and simplicity, it has been retained in the accompanying balance sheet.

Total cotton loans shown in the foregoing tabulation include $181,413,754 relating to certificates of interest issued to lending agencies covering loans made by them to producers, the notes for which were deposited in note pools conducted by the Corporation.

In connection with cotton loans held by CCC, the Corporation had made no effort to prove the accuracy of the total amount of loans by adding the individual loan account balances, and we were unable to reconcile the total amounts of loans reported by Federal Reserve banks, as custodians, with the records of the Corporation. In addition, a duplication of $2,329,483 between loans held by the Corporation and those held by private lending agencies was observed in connection with cotton loans. As a result of the above circumstances, the amount of cotton loans indicated in the above summary as outstanding at June 30, 1945, is presented from Corporation records without satisfactory verification.

The recorded balance of loans outstanding on wheat is known to be overstated by approximately $4,000,000 with a corresponding overstatement of accounts payable. This overstatement was caused by the inclusion in inventory of over 3,000,000 bushels of wheat surrendered by borrowers. Because of the time lag between the receipt of the wheat and documentation from points of origin adequate to serve as a basis for crediting loans receivable, the wheat was taken into inventory at an estimated value upon receipt, and the loans were canceled in a subsequent period. The same situation existed to a lesser degree relative to loans on other grains. As a result of our discussion of this subject with Corporation officials, we do not anticipate a similar situation at the close of subsequent fiscal years.

At June 30, 1945, the records of the Corporation reflected as a reserve for losses an amount of $1,095,961 which represented the accumulation of the Corporation's share of fees paid to AAA committees by farmers for assistance in filing applications for loans. The Corporation has represented this amount as being in the nature of self-insurance to offset losses from destruction of loan collateral. Losses of this type, though existing, were never charged against this reserve, and during the fiscal year 1947, the balance therein was transferred to income. In the balance sheet included in this report (exhibit 1), the amount of this reserve has been included in suspense items.

To June 30, 1945, the Corporation had not followed a policy of providing reserves for possible losses on realization of loans. The Corporation was prohibited from borrowing in excess of its assets or the assets to be acquired with the proceeds of borrowings. It appears that this prohibition must necessarily have contemplated the establishment in each fiscal period of reserves in an amount equal to the difference between the sum of loan advances and the estimated realizable value of the commodity pledged to secure the loan. Aside from this consideration, it is a generally recognized principle of sound financial accounting that losses should be reflected in financial statements at the point in time when they are sustained or become apparent. Subsequent to June 30, 1945, the Corporation adopted the policy of providing, in each accounting period, valuation reserves to reflect the estimated loss, if any, to be sustained during liquidation of the loans, based upon estimated realizable values.

The inventory of commodities owned by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, is summarized from exhibit 3, as follows:

To June 30, 1945, the Corporation did not follow the practice of taking periodic physical inventories of commodities under its own control nor did it request periodic confirmations from warehouses. On March 12, 1945, the president of the Corporation, pursuant to a resolution approved by the board of directors on March 10, 1945, requested the General Accounting Office to take a physical inventory of all commodities and to make recommendations relative to inventory control procedures and valuation bases. This request resulted from realization on the part of the Corporation that (1) its financial record of inventory was inaccurate, (2) its inventory control and accountability procedures were inadequate, and (3) large quantities of commodities were improperly stored and had deteriorated in quality, some to the point of being unfit for human consumption.

During March, April, and May 1945, representatives of the General Accounting Office, in collaboration with the Corporation and other agencies of the Department of Agriculture, examined into these points and endeavored to verify the inventory through correspondence with custodians, examination of documents, and inspection and test counts as deemed necessary.

The use of quantities thus determined to adjust corporate records was complicated by the difficulty in effecting reconciliations between the quantities determined on the dates of count and the quantities reflected in the Corporation's financial statements at March 31, 1945 (in the case of the General Commodities Purchase Program), and April 30, 1945 (in the case of commodities acquired under other programs). Considerable effort was devoted to this process, and many of the differences disclosed in the inventory, which were substantial in the aggregate, were adjusted prior to the closing of the books as of June 30, 1945. However, tests made as of the latter date revealed that it was still impossible to effect complete or satisfactory reconciliations between the quantities recorded by the Corporation and those reported to be held at that date by warehousemen, handlers, and others. Some of the unreconciled differences were substantial but were probably caused for the most part by delays in documentation and in recording transactions.

Included in the reports rendered to the Corporation concerning the physical inventory work performed by the General Accounting Office were many suggestions and recommendations directed at improving inventory control and accountability procedures and methods of establishing inventory values. As indicated elsewhere in this report, the Corporation has made substantial improvements since June 30, 1945, in inventory control procedures and methods of valuation.

The recorded value of inventories was computed by the Corporation, in general, on the basis of cumulative average unit costs. The use of this basis of pricing makes no allowance for differences in grade or quality, storage periods, transportation, or marketability. As sales are made of relatively better grades of a commodity, the remaining lower grades become progressively overpriced. We do not believe this basis to be consistent with sound accounting principles for the purpose of determining inventory costs. During the fiscal year 1946 the Corporation changed its method of pricing inventory and sales of some commodities, principally grains, to the first-in, first-out basis. Cotton, however, was still priced by the cumulative average unit cost method to June 30, 1947. In connection with certain other commodities, notably processed foods, the individual lot cost method has been used.

An effort was made by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, to reduce the recorded cost of wool, hemp, and miscellaneous seeds to market value by establishing reserves for losses. Experience subsequent to June 30, 1945, has indicated that the price reductions applied to the wool inventory were insufficient. Estimates of losses to be sustained as a result of reduced selling prices did not include losses to result from sale at reduced prices of approximately 100,000,000 pounds of wool delivered to the Corporation but not recorded in inventory until a subsequent period.

Advances on purchases of sugar were made under contracts with the Cuban Sugar Stabilization Institute. These contracts provided for advances to be made by the Corporation in an amount of 90 percent of the value of the crop remaining unshipped on June 1 of each year covered by the contract.

Equipment, leasehold improvements, etc.

The recorded gross cost of equipment, leasehold improvements, and other fixed assets owned by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, was $20,997,053. Depreciation accumulated to that date in the amount of $14,968,850 reduced this investment to a net amount of $6,028,203.

The most significant of these assets were grain bins and related equipment which, at June 30, 1945, had a net book value of $3,914,871. Regional office records were not maintained on a basis such as to enable a satisfactory independent verification of the quantity or cost of grain bins owned by the Corporation. In addition, depreciation reserves and operating losses were overstated in a substantial amount. The overstatement resulted from the failure of the Corporation to relieve the reserve accounts for accrued depreciation applicable to bins sold. As a result, wooden bins were recorded as fully depreciated at June 30, 1945 (only 3 years after their acquisition), but the Corporation realized a net gain of almost $5,700,000 on the disposition of bins and equipment in the year ended June 30, 1946, resulting principally from the sales of wooden bins.

The natural-cooler storage facility is a natural cave located on the site of a limestone quarry near Atchison, Kans. Its recorded cost to June 30, 1945, was $1,772,009. The facility is said to provide 7,000,000 cubic feet of storage space, sufficient to store 2,800 carloads of commodities. The site is not owned but is occupied under the terms of a 5-year lease negotiated on May 3, 1945, but running from July 10, 1944. The facility was being operated at June 30, 1945, by a private contractor under a cost-plus-a-management-fee contract. This contract was subsequently canceled, and the operation was assumed by the Shipping and Storage Branch of Production and Marketing Administration. No commodities were stored in the facility until December 1945, and no depreciation or amortization thereon was recorded at June 30, 1945.

Other equipment, consisting almost entirely of furniture and fixtures owned by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, was recorded in a net amount of $341,323, as shown in the balance sheet, exhibit 1. The Corporation maintained inadequate control over furniture and fixtures. No detailed record could be furnished to support the recorded value of furniture and fixtures owned.

Accounts payable, advances, and accrued liabilities

Accounts payable, advances, and accrued liabilities recorded as owed by the Corporation at June 30, 1945, amounted to $494,598,691. The items composing this balance are summarized as follows:

Accounts payable:
Due on purchases:
General commodities purchase program	$203,186,263
Other programs	49,021,962
Total	252,208,225
Estimated subsidy program obligations:
Dairy production payments	125,000,000
Beef production payments	5,000,000
Total	130,000,000
Other payables	8,519,596
Total accounts payable	390,727,821
Advances:
From Foreign Economic Administration to apply on purchases for lend-lease ($78,308,487) and for construction of the natural-cooler storage facility	79,756,155
From the Government of Great Britain to apply on purchases of tobacco	5,283,611
Total advances	85,039,766
Accrued liabilities:
Interest	$3,667,143
Carrying charges on commodities owned or pooled	14,690,168
Carrying charges on loans	473,793
Total accrued liabilities	18,831,104
Total	494,598,691

This amount is reflected in the balance sheet, exhibit 1, as follows:

Due to Government agencies	$132,286,284
Due to others	362,312,407
Total, as above	494,598,691

The segregation of payables between those due to Government agencies and others was made by the use of data presented by the Corporation. The accounts maintained provided no adequate basis for such a segregation, and the segregation made by the Corporation could not be supported in full by analysis.

The amount of $203,186,263 indicated as owed on purchases made in the General Commodities Purchase program could not be verified. No detail listing of individual creditors' balances could be obtained. We are aware of an overstatement of approximately $18,500,000 resulting from the failure to record cash disbursements of that amount on regional office records. Numerous errors, omissions, and inadequacies in the application of accounting policies and procedures in the conduct of this program necessarily had an effect on the recorded balance of accounts payable.

The preceding comment is applicable equally to the amount recorded as advance deposits from the Foreign Economic Administration on sales made through the General Commodities Purchase program ($78,308,487).

No adequate record was kept of outstanding dairy or beef production payment program drafts, and no determination could be made as to the accuracy of the amount of $130,000,000 shown above as estimated program obligations at June 30, 1945.

Other items of this group are subject, though to a lesser degree, to the same general comment as that contained above relative to the General Commodities Purchase program.

Unrecorded liabilities

It is customary for independent public accountants, when reporting upon the results of a commercial audit, to determine that all liabilities are believed to be recorded in the books of the company being audited, if an unqualified opinion is to be rendered. We cannot assume that responsibility in this case. We are aware of a number of liabilities, some of which were of considerable amount, which were not recorded at June 30, 1945, and believe, as a result of our survey of accounting policies and procedures, that numerous substantial liabilities of which we are unaware probably existed. Further, we do not believe that Corporation officials can make any accurate representations concerning the extent of the unrecorded liabilities of the Corporation as of June 30, 1945.

GENERAL OVERHEAD EXPENSES AND INTEREST ON BORROWED FUNDS

Commodity Credit Corporation did not maintain its accounting records prior to June 30, 1945, in a way which would make it possible to ascertain the real costs of administering and financing the Corporation's various activities, because it had devised no method by which its general overhead expenses and interest on borrowed funds might be distributed equitably to individual programs or groups of programs.

Good accounting procedures normally provide for the allocation in the accounts of all possible items of income, cost, and expense to the activities in which they were incurred. Accounting procedures are unsatisfactory when they do not provide for the break-down of operating results by organizational responsibilities and functional activities. The allocation of cost to individual activities is an aid in determining the selling prices of commodities. It also permits better management control of costs and assists in eliminating waste. If all costs and the net results of each activity cannot be shown, it is not possible to consider the costs in relation to the accomplishments or to demonstrate the effectiveness with which the responsibilities assigned to individuals in charge of activities have been carried out from year to year.

Schedule 22 of this report reflects the net remainder of all interest and general overhead expenses after assignment to specific programs of identifiable items of such expenses aggregating $6,795,448. The principal components of the remainder, as indicated in schedule 22, unallocated to program activities, are:

Interest paid to—
Public, on collateral trust notes	$31,895,120
U. S. Treasury, on borrowings	28,085,080
Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on borrowings (net of $4,876,590 earned on cash deposited with RFC)	10,983,683
Total	70,963,883
General overhead expenses:
Salaries	14,199,210
Expenses of Federal Reserve banks and others as custodians and fiscal agents	14,999,673
Total	29,198,883
All other expenses, net	7,996,310
Combined	108,159,076

The above amount represents approximately 90 percent of the Corporation's total recorded general overhead expense and interest on borrowed funds. In a number of cases, expenses which were identical in character with expenses otherwise classified as administrative have been reflected by the Corporation directly in the results of program operations. The aggregate of such expenses so reflected was relatively minor, being less than 5 percent of the total overhead and interest expenses incurred to June 30, 1945. For the most part, such expenses were incurred on a cost-reimbursable basis by agents utilized in conducting various programs. Congressional limitations on administrative expenses, which exclude expenses of this type, need not prevent the informative reflection of the aggregate costs of administering the Corporation's activities.

No provision was made by the Corporation in its accounts at June 30, 1945, for general overhead expense accrued but unliquidated. A liability in the approximate amount of $500,000 existed at that date.

The costs of administration of the Corporation's activities have been obscured by the exclusion of costs borne by other agencies. During the fiscal year 1945 the Corporation conducted a large volume of purchase and sale operations on behalf of lend-lease. The cost of administering these activities was defrayed directly from lend-lease funds in the approximate amount of $6,531,000. Omission of these expenses from financial statements indicates a lower cost of administration of the activities than was the case. Subsequent to June 30, 1945, the Corporation has adopted the practice of presenting such expenses, and the amount by which they are reduced by reimbursement from other agencies, by means of a supplementary schedule to the income statement. We are of the opinion that it would be more desirable to reflect the total of administrative expenses related to the Corporation's activities and the revenue resulting from reimbursement directly in the income statement.

The last issue of the Corporation's collateral trust notes held by the public was called for redemption in February 1945. The principal source of borrowed funds since that date has been the United States Treasury. The Corporation's obligations to the Treasury at June 30, 1945, bore interest at the rate of 1 percent per annum; no interest to that date was paid on the capital of $100,000,000. The Corporation paid interest on funds borrowed from the Treasury for the purpose of making direct subsidy payments. Such interest was payable until the Congress authorized reimbursement to the Corporation for the impairment of capital resulting from the subsidy payments; inasmuch as direct subsidy payments represent immediate expenditure of the Government's funds, it would appear that interest on these amounts should not be paid to the Treasury by the Corporation for any period.

Each fiscal year since June 30, 1937, the Congress has limited or prescribed to some extent the expenses of administering the Corporation's affairs by placing a limitation on the amount of the Corporation's own funds which it was permitted to use for this purpose. The budget language through which this limitation was made was coordinated to some extent with the Corporation's expense accounting practices. The control accomplished in this manner has been impaired by a classification of expenditures producing a total of administrative expenses which reasonably could not be designated as the total of the actual costs of administration for any period. However, it appears that the cost of administration borne by the Corporation and reflected in its accounts as such did not exceed during the fiscal year 1945 the amount specified by the Congress.

COSTS OF OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AFFECTING, OR RELATIVE TO, THE SUPPORT OF AGRICULTURAL PRICES

As pointed out earlier in this report, Commodity Credit Corporation's costs with respect to its normal purposes of price support or in connection with the ever-normal granary could not be determined because of the effects of the war on the disposal of inventories and the effect of supply and other activities on the requirements for price supports. Furthermore, the Corporation's costs for normal activities, if determinable, could not be interpreted or regarded as the total costs of the Government's endeavors relative to the support of farm prices or in connection with the ever-normal granary. Substantial disbursements have been made by other agencies of the Government for the same general purposes or for purposes the carrying out of which was accompanied by a material effect on the activities of Commodity Credit Corporation. Among the more important approximate costs of this nature incurred or payments made during the life of the Corporation to June 30, 1945, and the pertinent legislation or agency are the following:

	Amount
Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act—1936–45 (49 Stat. 153)	$3,896,300,000
Agricultural Adjustment Acts—1934–45 (48 Stat. 31; 52 Stat. 31)	2,748,000,000
Sec. 32 of the act of Aug. 24, 1935 — exportation and domestic consumption of agricultural commodities—1936–45 (49 Stat. 774)	1,146,000,000
Sugar Act—1938–45 (50 Stat. 903) — excise taxes on manufactured sugar collected by the Treasury Department pursuant to the Sugar Act amounted to $502,828,842 during this period	351,700,000
Removal of surplus cattle and dairy products — 1934–37 (48 Stat. 805)	$116,300,000
Federal Crop Insurance Corporation—1939–45 (52 Stat. 72)	70,800,000
Farm Labor Program—1943–45 (57 Stat. 70; 58 Stat. 11)	56,500,000
Total	8,115,600,000

In addition to the above, Reconstruction Finance Corporation paid subsidies amounting to $1,271,500,000 to processors or producers of livestock, flour, and butter in connection with maximum price regulations.

EXCEPTIONS

We have found no programs or activities which, in our opinion, were carried on clearly without authority of law. However, certain of the Corporation's activities and transactions were undertaken on the basis of legal interpretations with respect to which there can be differences of opinion. Some of the more significant of such undertakings are listed below:

1. Indications of uncertainty concerning interpretations of the Corporation's authority under its charter (and consequently the authority for programs undertaken without specific statutory authority).

2. The undertaking of the domestic wool program without specific authority of law.

3. The sale of commodities acquired under the general commodities purchase program to Army and Navy upon conditions raising a possible question as to the application of section 4 of the act of July 16, 1943, which required the Corporation to recover full costs on sales to such agencies.

Also, in connection with the importation of wheat from Canada for use in the feed wheat program, we believe that formal authorization of the War Food Administrator was required under the law, though not obtained, for quantities imported in excess of 50,000,000 bushels originally authorized by him. However, because the Corporation had been consolidated into the War Food Administration, and because the War Food Administrator, reporting directly to the President, was chairman of the board of directors and exercised the rights of the United States as stockholders of the Corporation, it does not appear realistic to report such transactions as being without authority of law merely because formal authorization was not obtained from the War Food Administrator.

INTERNAL AUDITING

Prior to June 30, 1945, the need for internal auditing appears to have been virtually unrecognized by officials of the Corporation. Available auditors were, in general, assigned and made administratively responsible to the treasurer's office or to various operational branches. They apparently were used to assist branch personnel in the performance of their duties, to clear up documentary backlogs, to make special investigations relative to operating problems, and otherwise to assist in the administration of corporate activities.

In our opinion, internal auditors should examine completed records and, through appropriate tests of the records and other evidence, verify the correctness of the recording of the transactions and balances, observe the adherence to prescribed procedures, and evaluate the procedures from the standpoint of economy, simplicity, internal check, and conformity with accepted principles and the plans approved by the board of directors; the reports should reveal errors noted and contain recommendations relative to any changes considered desirable. The internal auditor should not participate in the preparation or recordation of accounting data.

On December 17, 1945, the Office of Audit of the Production and Marketing Administration was established. The direction of audit and examining activities of the Administration, its agents, and others financed with PMA funds, and of the preparation of cost analyses for use in the termination or renegotiation of contracts was assigned to the Office of Audit. Reports and recommendations were to be made to the Administrator of PMA. This assignment naturally represents far more than the responsibility for conducting internal audits relative to Commodity Credit Corporation. For example, it includes the responsibility for auditing hundreds of schools participating in the school-lunch program and for auditing the accounts of numerous agent cashiers and labor camps in connection with the labor programs.

During the course of our examination, we have made the greatest possible use of the work of the Office of Audit of PMA. In so doing, we have observed certain activities, procedures, and omissions which we believe should be changed or corrected in order that full advantage may be derived by the Corporation from that organization. These deficiencies have been called to the attention of the chief auditor, who has cooperated fully in taking steps to correct those which are within his scope of authority. Our major observations follow:

1. A disproportionate amount of time was devoted to the mechanical verification of routine transactions. Audits were limited, in general, to the examination of records of agents involved in the administration of price-support, supply, or subsidy programs of prior as well as current years. This was not primarily due to a lack of good judgment on the part of those responsible for administration of the office but was the result of assignment to the Office of Audit of functions which we believe are administrative in nature. Had the fiscal organizaiton originally required sufficient supporting data and adequately verified claims for subsidy payments, the need for such audits would have been materially reduced. In no case should the disbursing procedures depend almost entirely upon internal audits for the determination of the validity of the amounts being paid, even when those audits are being made currently.

2. As a result of the extensive use, for the purposes mentioned above, of the limited number of auditors available, too little emphasis was placed on the study of operating and accounting procedures and the system of internal control to determine that they were workable and satisfactory. The determination that program activities were being carried out in accordance with the intent of the board of directors likewise received scant attention.

3. Internal audit review of contracts, agreements, and instructions was limited almost entirely to those connected with the supply programs. Reports, programs, and working papers pertaining to the individual audits which we reviewed indicated insufficient concern over vague provisions, omissions, and other contractual weaknesses which we have noted.

4. In connection with our review of audit reports and discussion thereof with the various branches, we have noted an apparent failure to make maximum use of such reports. Improvement has been made in this respect since the establishment, in March 1946, of a procedure requiring reports of action taken on exceptions set forth in audit reports. However, report narratives sometimes contained comments and suggestions which often went unnoticed by the branches involved. More careful study of reports and closer cooperation with respect to audit matters between the fiscal and operating branches and between these branches and the Office of Audit would have increased the effectiveness of the internal auditing.

5. Despite the fact that inventories consistently constituted a substantial portion of the assets of the Corporation, tests of inventory quantities were extremely limited.

6. Certain contracts with, or instructions to, processors and agents provided that records would be available to the Corporation for audit for a limited period—usually 2 years. We noted that audits were being made of the records of many small processors involving small amounts or more recent periods, while the period of access to the records of much larger and more significant processors was close to its expiration. The chief auditor is of the opinion that the practice of auditing a greater proportion of the smaller concerns would result in greater recoveries, because internal controls and more adequate accounting supervision exist among the larger organizations.

We appreciate that consideration must be given to the relatively recent creation of the Office of Audit and the magnitude of its task. The administrators of the office are acquiring a more complete conception of its purposes, and, while less than full effectiveness of internal auditing has yet been realized, indications are that it will materialize.

As a result of the lack of internal auditing, we were forced to expand considerably the scope of our examination for the period ended June 30, 1945, although there were practical limits beyond which we could not undertake to assume additional responsibility.

In connection with the general subject of internal control, consideration should be given to the question of whether the surety bonds furnished by employees are adequate in amount. In the case of certifying officers, who are bonded for $5,000 each and whose duties include the approval of vouchers for payment, this amount seems inadequate in relation to the aggregate amounts which they certify for payment and in relation to the amounts for which employees of industrial and commercial enterprises having similar responsibilities are bonded. United States Treasury Circular No. 680, prescribing standards for fixing the amounts of surety bonds, contains the following:

"The penal sum of each certifying officer's bond shall be fixed by the head of the department, establishment, or agency concerned in accordance with the degree of the officer's responsibility, taking into consideration the character and estimated amount of vouchers to be certified for payment during the ensuing 12-months period. Such penal sum should be sufficient to protect the interests of the United States under the circumstances."

Inasmuch as employees are required to pay the bond premiums, the management, it is said, has not felt that it could insist upon bonds in more substantial amounts. It is suggested that consideration be given to the question of whether in such situation, authority should be sought to cover all employees, or all of certain groups of employees, under a blanket bond of an amount sufficient to protect the interests of the United States.

INTERNAL CONTROL OVER GRAIN PURCHASES

Grains and related products have been acquired by the Corporation:

1. In settlement of nonrecourse loans.

2. As a result of open announcement that all grain offered would be purchased at specified prices.

3. By negotiated purchase. The Washington office notified the regional office representative to get in touch with one or more grain firms and negotiate the transaction on a basis favorable to the Government.

4. As a result of sealed bids filed in response to public notice or as a result of bid invitations to specific grain dealers.

Criticism has been leveled at the Corporation relative to methods (3) and (4), it being contended that favoritism was shown certain dealers and that others rarely were given an opportunity to participate. Even when sealed bids were publicly requested or obtained as a result of bid invitations to specific dealers, it was claimed that the specifications eliminated all but favored operators. In most cases the invitations would indicate that specific quantities of certain quality were desired at stated geographic locations. This was an advantage to any grain owner who had such described commodity near the stipulated location but did not necessarily indicate favoritism; we do not have any reason to conclude that locations were selected with that in mind. However, the selection of the successful bidder generally could be predetermined by the knowledge of location of quantities of grain.

As a result of this criticism of the purchasing practices of the Corporation, the board of directors established a policy providing for the utilization of competitive bid procedures. A few days later, on May 2, 1945, this procedure was amended by providing for exceptions to the competitive-bid policy when its use was clearly impractical, would not be in the best interests of the Government, or when the approved program provided for a different procedure.

We were informed that all sizable wheat purchases from July 1 to September 30, 1945, for example, were made without competitive bidding on the grounds that the use of the bid procedure clearly was impractical. As the consideration of this matter by the board of directors resulted from criticism of this practice, it appears that the general policy formulated by the board was negated. However, the Corporation's president assured us on June 3, 1946, that it was the board's intention to allow the administrative officers to retain the responsibility for applying the policy and the exceptions to the policy in their purchase activities. Further, he stated that the board of directors was kept informed of the activities of the grain branch and that no move was made or proposed to alter the procedure. Thus it could be inferred that the purchase of grain on a negotiated basis had the sanction of the board and was not in conflict with its policy.

In the spring of 1947, an investigation was conducted by the Division of Investigations of the Department of Agriculture concerning alleged favoritism shown by the Corporation to a grain dealer in Kansas City. In the course of this investigation, rather widespread criticisms of the Corporation's grain-trading practice and release of related information was encountered, particularly among members of the grain trade. As a result, the scope of the investigation was expanded considerably. In the reports on the investigation, it was indicated that considerable basis appeared to exist for the criticisms and allegations made. In a report dated June 10, 1947, an investigator stated that, while the facts and circumstances developed were not conclusive, it appeared that further inquiry should be made and that effort should be directed at establishing control adequate to insure that advance information concerning the Corporation's buying plans would not be made available to unauthorized persons. Based upon our review of the related reports, we agree that this entire field warrants further administrative inquiry.

In connection with purchases on a negotiated basis, the Corporation has stated that the acquisitions were more advantageous as to price than would have been the case under a competitive-bid procedure. Generally, in public operations, competitive bidding has been relied upon to assure the best price obtainable. Of course, when the Corporation engages in a program that provides for purchase at fixed prices from all persons who may offer the commodity, competitive bidding would serve no useful purpose insofar as prevention of favoritism is concerned. Public criticism might be allayed, without hampering operations, by the issuance, after a suitable interval, of announcements relative to consummated negotiated purchases, disclosing the purchase areas and dates, prices paid, and quantities purchased.

SCOPE OF EXAMINATION AND OPINION

We were unable to make our examination of the Commodity Credit Corporation and its affiliated corporation, War Hemp Industries, Inc., for the period ended June 30, 1945, in accordance with accepted procedures of auditing employed by public accounting firms in the examinations of commercial enterprises, as is contemplated by section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945 (59 Stat. 6).[1] Ordinarily in the audit of commercial enterprises, the audit procedures can be augmented and the scope of audit expanded to the extent that deficiencies encountered can be overcome sufficiently to permit of a satisfactory audit. In the case of CCC, however, we found the deviation from sound accounting practices so pronounced, the errors and arrearages in record keeping so substantial, and the internal auditing activities and internal controls so deficient that such expansions were not a practical possibility and would have been, even if possible, unjustifiable economically. Moreover, the expansion necessary in this case would, because of its nature, have constituted unavoidable participation in the administrative responsibilities of the CCC management.

An early survey of the Corporation's various accounting offices in the field disclosed many of the difficulties to be encountered in the examination. With these facts in mind, a program was designed so that we could concentrate our efforts toward disclosing deficiencies in currently active programs, with more limited concern for completed operations.

The six regional offices, which conducted and accounted for operations in wheat, corn, cotton, soybeans, barley, oats, and rye, were visited. Audit work was carried on in New York City on foreign purchases and on the general commodities purchase program. Visits were made to the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Va., in connection with the tobacco programs and to the offices of Dairy Products Marketing Association, Inc., in Chicago, Ill., relative to the butter and cheese programs. Records of area offices in Chicago, New York, and San Francisco were examined. Records of the hemp program were examined at one of the plants and in the Chicago office of War Hemp Industries, Inc. A comprehensive coverage of wool activities was provided through visits to banks, handlers, and warehouses in a number of cities in various States.

We have omitted a description of the steps by which the verification of assets, liabilities, and operating results were attempted. Such description would be highly technical in nature, extremely lengthy, and would add little of significance to the report. Some of the results of our attempted verification are set forth briefly in the section of the report devoted to comments on financial position, and, as mentioned in the footnote on page 48, many other instances of faulty accounting were disclosed during the course of our examination.

[1] A commercial audit generally contemplates using as a starting point reliable financial statements prepared by the organization, or at least statements which it will contend are reliable. The treasurer of the Corporation made substantial qualifications as to the correctness of the Corporation's own financial statements as well as the books and records from which they were prepared.

The accounting deficiencies encountered were so substantial and the inaccuracies cited in this report so material that we cannot express an opinion that the financial statements prepared by the Corporation present fairly the financial position of Commodity Credit Corporation and its affiliate, War Hemp Industries, Inc., at June 30, 1945, or the results of their operations for the period ended on that date. Therefore, for the reasons stated on page 35, we prepared the financial statements accompanying this report from the books and records of the Corporation. We are aware of numerous adjustments which could have been made; however, except for the treatment as income of $139,171,171 reserved by the Corporation for possible losses on the general commodities purchase program, no adjustments are reflected in the accompanying statements. Except for the adjustment noted, the excess of subsidies and losses over net gains as shown in exhibit 2 is equal to the excess of expenses and other charges over income as reflected by the Corporation's operating statement.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on the pending conference report. I regard it as a very vitally important matter. We are discussing the management and control of the second largest banking institution in the world, because the Commodity Credit Corporation is in actual practice a banking corporation. The first largest banking institution is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation is the second. Its total assets and capacity to borrow are greater than those of several of the largest banking institutions in America.

What is being proposed to be done here today is to take away the safeguards and controls which were placed in the charter of this Corporation a year ago and to take them away in such a manner as to remove the checks and balances which the Senate should require in the administration of this fund. I think the Members of the Senate should clearly understand what they are doing before they vote for the conference report.

Mr. President, the so-called Byrd-Butler bill has been referred to in the debate. That bill, as Members of the Senate will recall, was passed after some years of effort, for the purpose of reorganizing the various Government corporations. Among its provisions it required that each of these corporations should obtain a new charter by June 30, 1948, otherwise they would be forced to cease doing business. In accordance with that law, which contained other provisions making these corporations more responsible to the Congress, a new charter was adopted for the Commodity Credit Corporation, last June, as I recall. That charter provided for a board of directors to be appointed by the President. Who can object to the Board of Directors being appointed by the President of the United States? It was provided that the members of the board should be confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation was not the only corporation with respect to which such a requirement was made in the new charters. It was made with respect to every single corporation charged with the handling of large sums of money and the responsibility therefor. The same provision was made with respect to the Export-Import Bank. The same provision was made with respect to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The same provision was made with respect to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. The same provision was made with respect to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The same provision was made with respect to the Tennessee Valley Corporation.

These six major corporations, which handle large sums of money under the authority of Congress to borrow, with the backing and the guarantee of the United States Government, were selected to have their directors appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

It is now proposed, after 1 year's trial to make a change, and yet not one single real reason has been given on the floor of the Senate why the change should be made.

I asked the distinguished Senator from New Mexico several weeks ago why it was desired that the change be made? I asked what there was in the operation of the present law that made it desirable to change it, and give to the Secretary of Agriculture a private bank—for that is what it would be under the proposed change—with resources of $5,000,000,000, greater, as I have said, than the combined resources of some of the largest banks in America today, and second only to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its assets and resources.

Mr. President, this is a serious matter. The Congress deliberately enacted the provision I refer to last year. It was done after full and free discussion. Congress did it to protect the resources of the United States. Congress did it to see that the $5,000,000,000 was handled in an orderly and proper manner by requiring that the President appoint the board and that the Senate confirm its members.

Now, what is proposed to be done? Let me read the section of the existing law so Senators can compare it with what is now proposed to be done. The existing law provides:

> The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"). The Board shall consist of five members. The Secretary of Agriculture, or his nominee, shall be a member of the Board and the remaining members shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Chairman of the Board shall be selected by the Board. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present. The appointed directors shall serve for a period of 5 years, except that the terms of the first Board shall be shortened to provide for replacement or reappointment of its members in number as nearly equal as practicable in each year. The power of removal shall be vested in the President of the United States.

What does the new proposal do? It says that in addition to the Secretary, 6 members shall be appointed by, and hold office at the pleasure of, the Secretary. In other words, he can appoint whomever he pleases; and if at any time any single member of the board does not do as the Secretary desires him to do, the Secretary can demand his resignation and appoint someone else. There are no terms of office, whereas under the present law there is a term of 5 years.

> In addition to their duties as members of the Board, appointed members shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary. Each appointed member of the Board shall receive compensation at such rate not in excess of the maximum then payable under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as may be fixed by the Secretary. * * * A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum of the Board and action shall be taken only by a majority vote of those present.

The power of the President to remove any of the directors is taken away. The power of confirmation by the Senate is taken away, and the Secretary of Agriculture is given the right to appoint whomever he pleases, at his pleasure, without term. He can change the whole board overnight. The bill does not even provide that any reports be made to the Congress. Let us again remember that we are dealing with a corporation which is in effect a banking corporation, with $5,000,000,000 of assets.

We have heard a great deal of talk about the advisory board. This is what the conference report says with respect to the advisory board. It is a new board:

> In addition to the Board of Directors there shall be an Advisory Board reflecting broad agricultural and business experience in its membership and consisting of five members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Not more than three of such members shall belong to the same political party. The Advisory Board shall meet at the call of the Secretary, who shall require it to meet not less often than once each 90 days; shall survey the general policies of the Corporation, including its policies in connection with the purchase, storage, and sale of commodities, and the operation of lending and price-support programs; and shall advise the Secretary with respect thereto.

All they can do is "advise the Secretary with respect thereto." They have not one particle of executive power. They can take no action. They can only recommend to the Secretary what they think he should do, and the Secretary can disregard the advice, or change it, or do anything he pleases.

The remarkable thing is that the advisory board is confirmed by the Senate; yet the board which actually has the power to make great loans, to lend money here and there, and buy things here and there, to the extent of $5,000,000,000, is not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia if it is not the general understanding that policy-making officers of the Government are subject to confirmation by the Senate, but inferior officers are not so confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator which of these bodies, in his judgment, is the policy-making body of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. BYRD. It is very obvious that the board of directors is the policy-making body. It has the power to act. The advisory board simply has the power to recommend to the Secretary.

Mr. KEM. Has the Senator, in his discussion, or reading or colloquy in regard to this matter, encountered any reason why the inferior body should have been selected for confirmation by the Senate, and the policy-making body should be permitted to bypass the Senate?

Mr. BYRD. I have heard of no reason that appeared to the Senator from Virginia to be logical. Reasons may have been given. Furthermore, I have heard no reason stated by any proponent of the legislation why this change should be made. Wherein has the present board failed? It has been in operation for a year. It is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In what way has it failed to discharge its duties?

It has been said on the floor of the Senate that the two public members appointed by the President did not attend the meeting. Mr. President, they receive a salary of $10,000 as members of the board of directors; and if they do not attend the meetings someone should see that they are discharged. They should be compelled to do their duty.

As a matter of fact, all the talk on the floor of the Senate to the effect that a quorum could not be obtained is perfectly absurd. The Secretary of Agriculture is a member of the board. He can designate someone in his place if he is not present. Two members of the board come from the Department of Agriculture. That gives a quorum of the board. So there is no force whatever in the argument that they could not obtain a quorum. If they cannot obtain a quorum by paying a salary of $10,000 a year to attend the meetings, someone is grossly derelict in not demanding the resignation of such persons.

That is the only argument I have heard as to why the organization of the board shall be changed. I cannot understand it. This is one of the Corporations which was selected by the Congress to have a board appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The directors of all the other Corporations which deal with funds—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and others—are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I should like to have someone tell me why this Corporation is singled out for special treatment. Why, with respect to this single Corporation, should we give the Secretary the power to appoint whomever he pleases, dismiss them at his pleasure, and absolutely control the operations of this vast banking institution?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. KEM. In looking at some of the authorities on this subject I encountered this text, as to what officers of the Government should be confirmed. The text writer says:

> The test is responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders.

I ask the Senator from Virginia which of these bodies, under the organization provided in the bill, has the "responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders."

Mr. BYRD. The board of directors.

This bill gives still greater power to the Secretary in other sections. For example, section 2 of the present law provides that this agency shall be operated "subject to the general direction and control of its Board of Directors." That has been changed to "supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is an unreasonable and unnecessary concentration of power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. I think the Senate would be derelict in its duty of safeguarding the interests of the people of America if it permitted the bill as drafted in the conference report to become a law, and thereby give these appointments to the Secretary of Agriculture, without confirmation, and without term of office, instead of giving them to the President for a 5-year term, subject to the confirmation of the Senate. The bill even strikes out the provision that the directors may be removed by the President of the United States. Is it possible that we do not trust the President of the United States to make these appointments? I cannot conceive the reason for the desire to change the present provisions. No reason has been given to the Senate. I challenge any proponent of the legislation to point to a single logical reason for making this change.

As Senators know, the Senate refused to adopt this pending proposal when it was advanced in the Senate a few weeks ago. We refused to make this change. I do not know why, but our conferees yielded to the House. In my opinion they should not have done so, because this is a vital question. They should not have done so unless they came back to the Senate for instructions. This provision strikes at the very heart of the legislation. The Senate adopted what it regarded as a proper provision, and the conferees agreed to change it in accordance with the desires of the House, so as to give the Secretary of Agriculture power to make the appointments without restriction, without confirmation, and entirely as he pleases.

Mr. President, I shall not speak longer. I merely wish to register my unequivocal and unqualified protest against this action. We are gradually chipping away the protections which we have had in this democracy of ours. As soon as we establish something to protect the people the bureaucrats start to tear it down, because they want to control the affairs of the Government. This is one example.

It has been said that the Commodity Credit Corporation is a bureau of the Department of Agriculture. I deny that emphatically. The Commodity Credit Corporation, which is chartered as a corporation, is in no sense a creature absolutely under the control of the Department of Agriculture.

It may be that the Secretary of Agriculture has certain duties to perform as directed by the Congress, but this Corporation is not a bureau of the Department of Agriculture, because a Government corporation cannot be a bureau of one of the executive branches of our Government. This Corporation has a charter which is approved by the Congress. To my mind, it is ridiculous to say that the Commodity Credit Corporation is a bureau, and that, as a bureau, the Secretary of Agriculture should have absolute control of it. If such a line of argument is logical, why was it that a year ago the Congress adopted as a safeguard the provision that the appointments of members of the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation must be made by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. President, I protest the appointment of members of the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture. I have never heard of a business corporation or any other kind of corporation which had appointment to its board of directors made at the pleasure of any certain person. The directors of a business organization or corporation are supposed to represent the stockholders. The stockholders of the Commodity Credit Corporation are the people of the United States of America. They are the ones who put up the money with which the Corporation operates; that money comes from the taxation of our citizens. If losses occur as a result of the operations of the Corporation, those who make up the losses are, not the directors of the Corporation, but the taxpayers, who must pay such losses by means of the payment of taxes imposed upon them.

So why should the directors of the Corporation be appointed at the pleasure of the Secretary of Agriculture, and without a definite term of office? Under such an arrangement, the Secretary of Agriculture could, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, ask the directors to agree to make a great loan for the purchase of a large amount of commodities; and if the members of the board of directors refused to do so, the Secretary of Agriculture could make new appointments to the board, effective the next day, and he would not have to make a report of that matter to the Congress. He could thus place on the board of directors men of his own choosing, who would do exactly what he wanted done.

Under the law now proposed, there would be nothing to prevent such an occurrence or to permit the Congress to remove such directors if they were appointed, whereas the old law provides that the power of removal of the directors shall be vested in the President of the United States. However, in the law now proposed, that provision is stricken out. Evidently the framers of the present proposal were not even willing to trust the President of the United States to make the appointments to the board of directors or to remove the appointees.

I, for one, sincerely hope the Senate will vote against the conference report, so that the measure will go back to conference and have its objectionable features removed.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the Commodity Credit Corporation. I think it is a good organization of our Government, and under present conditions I think it is necessary. However, it is our duty to safeguard the operations of this gigantic Corporation, so that the people of the United States, who pay the taxes, shall be protected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, so far as I know we are ready to vote upon the question, and I hope to have a yea-and-nay vote. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is my understanding correct that it is impossible to present a motion to accomplish the purpose of the distinguished Senator from Delaware, which is to request a conference, with instructions that the directors be confirmed by the Senate. In order that the Senator from Delaware may accomplish his purpose, the conference report must first be voted down, and then the Senator from Delaware can present his motion. Am I correct in that understanding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. The conference report must be voted down before the Chair could entertain such a motion as is proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the House should not grant a further conference, the bill would be dead. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I think it has been pretty well established that under the Constitution of the United States and the traditions of this body the power of confirmation is exercised in the case of officers who have policy-making functions, but not in the case of what the Constitution calls inferior officers. It is perfectly clear that in this instance the policy-making body is the board of directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The Senate, in the case of that board, has been completely bypassed. Another board is established to be called the advisory council. The Senate is to be accorded the privilege of confirmation of the members of that council.

I think there can be no question that under the bill the board of directors has responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, and orders. The responsibility for determining the policies of this $5,000,000,000 corporation is, therefore, clearly placed in the board.

Mr. President, I should like to say one more thing. I wish to quote the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on an occasion when a somewhat similar question was before the Senate in the year 1943. The Senator from Michigan referred to it as one of the few ways in which Congress "can reach back in the implementing of its delegated power."

Then he said:

> This is a case in which the Senate has something to say and do by way of limitation of the sprawling bureaucracy which is the curse of our present-day democracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are absent on public business.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], who is detained on official business, is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], who is also detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is detained on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is absent because of illness. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

So the report was not agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there were very few Senators on the floor when the debate was had on the conference report. The conference report bill is one which provides for the acquisition of storage for farm commodities. Now that the bill has been killed temporarily, there is bound to be a delay, but in order that we may still try to salvage the opportunity of providing storage for farm commodities so that farmers may have somewhere to place their grain preliminary to getting a loan, I now move that the Senate ask the House of Representatives for a further conference on the bill, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the Senate ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to amend the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma by providing for instructions to the conferees to insist——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment would not be in order until the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma was passed upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not a motion to modify or amend the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not to instruct the conferees. The appointment of conferees must first be authorized.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate instruct its conferees to insist on the provision of the Senate bill under which the Board of Directors would be subject to confirmation of the Senate, after being appointed by the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the conferees be instructed to insist on the Senate provision in regard to the Board of Directors.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the Senate the same conferees, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senate realizes fully the action it has just taken, and realizes that a crop of wheat will shortly be coming into the market, that it will not be long before that wheat will be on the ground in Oklahoma, and that there will be no facilities for storage.

Mr. President, in a campaign not too long ago a great deal was said about whether or not the Senate had known it was not providing storage facilities. There can be no question this time. The Senate has decided it is not going to provide storage by the vote it has just taken. Storage cannot be ready in time for this year's harvest if the bill is to be taken up for consideration again. So we will have the spectacle of Members of Congress going back and trying to explain to the farmers in Illinois, to the farmers in Iowa, in Indiana, and in Ohio, why they have no storage for their corn. I suggest to the Senate that the most important roll call, so far as farmers will be concerned for a long time to come, was the roll call that was just had.

I further suggest that the action just taken in instructing the Senate conferees to insist upon its desire for confirmation of Board members by the Senate will further impede the possibility of any sort of agreement. I have no objection to abiding by majority rule, but I hope that at no time in the future, and particularly not in the fall of 1950, will we hear the assertion that Senators did not know exactly what they were doing in denying storage to the farmers of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to answer the distinguished Senator from New Mexico in this manner: The question of providing storage was not involved in the vote we took in the Senate. Had that been the only issue involved, the bill would have been passed 3 or 4 months ago.

During the recent campaign the Secretary of Agriculture and many other prominent men in the administration went all over this country bewailing the fact that there were not adequate storage facilities. They charged that to the Eightieth Congress. They deliberately refused to tell the people, or failed to tell them that they were at the same time selling their storage. They did not tell the farmers that at one time they had owned twice as much capacity as they now claim essential, and that even while the Secretary was making his speech pitying the poor farmer, his assistants were in Washington selling and disposing of storage facilities. As late as February 23, this year, the Secretary, in a letter notified me that he had finally arrived at a decision regarding storage facilities.

As one of the New Deal bureaucrats, he was so determined to take charge of the shortage of storage in this country and use the popularity of this bill, that he attached a rider to it whereby he could gain control, as the Senator from Virginia pointed out, of the second largest banking corporation in the world. He wanted sole control over this $5,000,000,000 banking institution. To achieve this power he placed a rider on the storage bill. Repeatedly I asked the Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, to separate those items and end the controversial provisions of the bill; in which event we could have passed long ago by practically unanimous consent, the storage provisions of the bill. The only reason the farmers in America will not have storage facilities this year is because the Secretary of Agriculture is such a power-mad maniac that he is determined he is going to have his power regardless of what happens to the American farmers.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. MUNDT asked and obtained consent to be absent from the sessions of the Senate until June 7.

Mr. BUTLER asked and obtained consent to be absent from the session of the Senate tomorrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and it was signed by the Vice President.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1950

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and myself, I introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read. Then I shall ask that it be appropriately referred, and shall also ask unanimous consent that I may address the Senate for a few moments.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. What is the pending business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending business is consideration of Senate bill 1843. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, numbered 2.

Mr. MORSE. I ask my good friend the minority leader when he thinks it will be possible to proceed to consideration of the pending business.

Mr. WHERRY. I am going to speak on the subject of the unification bill as part of my remarks, and I hope that we can have a vote on the bill and on the amendments to the bill before we conclude the session of the Senate tonight.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) to reduce Government expenditures for the fiscal year 1950, balance the budget, avert an increase in taxes or rise in the national debt, and maintain a sound national fiscal policy as a basis for the security and economic well-being of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the resolution may be printed at this point in my remarks, and that it may be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) to reduce Government expenditures for the fiscal year 1950, balance the budget, avert an increase in taxes or rise in the national debt, and maintain a sound national fiscal policy as a basis for the security and economic well-being of the United States, introduced by Mr. WHERRY (for himself, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. FERGUSON), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to balance the budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, the President is authorized and directed to make, prior to October 15, 1949, such reduction in the amounts to be expended from any and all appropriations made for expenditures in such fiscal year, regardless of fiscal year for which the appropriations were originally enacted, as will in the aggregate equal not less than 5 percent nor more than 10 percent of the total amounts so appropriated for expenditure in such year; provided that expenditures for interest on the public debt shall not be subject to any such reduction.

SEC. 2. Each such reduction shall be made in a manner calculated to accomplish the most efficient operation of the Government and thereby balance the budget, avert an increase in taxes or rise in the national debt, and maintain a sound national fiscal policy as a basis for the security and economic well-being of the United States.

SEC. 3. No reduction of expenditures authorized herein shall have the effect of reducing any item of appropriation for such fiscal year more than 20 percent.

SEC. 4. The President shall cause the reduction in each appropriation account to be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Committees on Appropriations and the Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the Senate and House of Representatives. The amounts so certified shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

SEC. 5. The President shall include in the annual budget for the year ending June 30, 1951, a statement of each reduction made in accordance with this act.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we all hope and believe that the Army and Navy unification bill, now before the Senate, will become law and strengthen our national security at less cost and with greater operating efficiency.

Efforts to unify, coordinate, synchronize, integrate and otherwise weld the several arms of national defense into a compact, hard-hitting force for the security of our country in event of national emergency, have been under way for many years, as was brought out very forcefully in the addresses delivered by the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and other Senators who discussed the so-called Morse-Lodge amendment yesterday in a lengthy debate. I should like to say here and now that if it were not for the fact that I feel the bill now before the Senate is the only kind of legislation on the subject which it is likely can be passed, I would have supported the Morse amendment. I predict now that the day will come when we will see the terms of the Morse amendment become a reality so far as unification is concerned.

There are Members of this body who were battling for unification of the armed services long before I came to the Senate. Gradually, and notwithstanding many obstacles, they are seeing their vision become reality. I believe that some of the amendments which may not be adopted now will be adopted at a later date. Since the junior Senator from Nebraska has been a Member of this body he has contributed, as best he could, toward achieving greater efficiency and economy in the armed services while strengthening our defenses.

We all want an adequate, effective national defense. And we all want to see that the taxpayers receive a dollar's worth of defense for every dollar they provide.

In looking to national defense, there is no room for partisan political considerations; at least I feel that way about it. Anyone who attempts to drag national defense into the political arena does a disservice to his country.

Happily, there is no party line in our Armed Services Committee and I am sure that situation prevails on our Appropriations Committee and in the consideration of national defense problems on the Senate floor.

As the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has so well told the Senate, and as other Members have also stated, the pending unification bill does not meet the views of every individual in every provision. There are sharp differences of opinion on some features, and they are honest differences of opinion. But as a whole, it is a good bill, and I am confident that it will be passed by the Senate with overwhelming support from both sides of the aisle.

In these uneasy times, I am sure that the thought which is uppermost in the minds of Senators is to do in national defense what is best for our country.

But with all our labor to improve and strengthen our national defenses, we will have failed unless we also do our utmost to establish a wholesome economic climate to keep America strong economically, strong financially, and strong spiritually.

Behind our Army and Navy and Air Force there must be a strong nation, because it is from a strong nation that our Military Establishment obtains the sinews of defense.

Members of the Senate are familiar with the fiscal situation that confronts our Government today. We all know that at the rate we are appropriating and authorizing expenditures, we are building for a staggering deficit in the Federal Treasury. There can now be no doubt about it.

The Federal Treasury today is operating in the red. I am informed by the Treasury Department that as of May 23—last Monday—the actual deficit for the current fiscal year was $1,273,955,547. It is estimated that the Treasury deficit for the fiscal year ending next June 30 will be $599,706,231. The estimate of the Treasury as of last Monday, taking into consideration the current receipts that will come in, is that there will be a deficit at the end of this fiscal year of nearly $600,000,000.

Think of it! The handsome Treasury surplus in the banner year 1948 that made possible the much-needed tax reduction voted by the Eightieth Congress has been entirely wiped out.

The simple arithmetic of the situation that confronts us as we look to the next fiscal year is known to every Member of this body. There is no escape from the fact that unless we reduce budgeted expenditures for fiscal 1950—the 12 months beginning next July 1—there will be a Treasury deficit of more than $3,000,000,000. Those are the figures which were given to us by the distinguished Senator from Virginia and by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] in the early days of the present session. Similar figures have been given the Senate by Members on this side of the aisle. They have called attention to the deficit we shall have for the next fiscal year, which has been estimated to be as high as three and a half billion dollars.

The signs are multiplying that national income, from which taxes are derived, is declining. Obviously, prudence dictates that we deal with the situation.

There are some persons who contend that we should increase Government expenditures. They have the fallacious notion that the more the Government spends, the greater the deficit, and the higher the taxes, the more prosperous will be our country.

They believe that we can spend ourselves out of debt; that the way to level off the debt is to spend more for public works.

Competent authorities, including many Members of this body, have warned that such a course leads only to national disaster. Indeed, it would be a betrayal of the American people if Congress fails to bring expenditures into balance with current receipts.

The only alternatives are a return to sky-high wartime taxes, or deficit financing. Simply elevating the brackets does not mean that we shall get the money. The other alternative is deficit financing.

Higher taxes at a time of declining national income could only result in stifling commerce and industry. If Senators do not think so, let them read the letters which I am receiving from small-business men all over the country, asking relief not only from the taxes which they now pay, but from higher taxes for 1950. One of the most disturbing influences upon business today is the uncertainty over whether there is to be a tax increase. It is stopping business expansion in many instances. Confronted by this menace, businessmen naturally are reluctant to make long-range programs for new plants and plant expansions, which would mean more jobs and more national income.

Some of us in this body have been trying to reduce appropriation bills as they come before us. Mr. President, we confront a condition, and not a theory. Nothing is to be gained by moaning over the lack of information to guide us in making appropriations item by item. Congress simply is not equipped at present to make the thorough studies which are essential to obtain justifications for the countless items which appear in all the appropriation bills.

It is my earnest hope that, out of the present chaotic, antiquated procedure of dribbling appropriation bills through the Congress we shall find the incentive to make improvements before the present session of Congress ends.

I believe Congress should provide for its own year-around study of Government expenditures, with a joint Senate and House committee keeping close tab, supported by information kept constantly current by an adequate staff of specialists.

This morning before a subcommittee of the Committee on Rules and Administration, which is now considering Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, known as the Byrd resolution for a single appropriation, I presented Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 38. I joined in sponsoring the Byrd measure, and I am for it; but I joined in submitting another resolution, which provides for an organization in the Senate similar to the personnel of the Bureau of the Budget—not great in numbers, but adequate to provide the Senate at all times with sound advice not only as to expenditures, but as to receipts, so that Members of the Senate can work in a practical way under the provisions of the Byrd resolution. If that can be done, we shall not have to take a figure out of the air to comply with the legislative budget requirement. We shall know what our receipts are, and what we can spend. That procedure will make the single appropriation bill a reality. I hope Members of the Senate will give that resolution the utmost consideration, because it would make the Byrd resolution practical in every sense of the word. Unless we have our own personnel watching receipts and expenditures, and fully informed as to what appropriations should be made, those which need priority, and those which can be eliminated, then we as Members of the Senate, and especially the Appropriations Committee, cannot justify the appropriations.

It is my hope that we shall establish such a system, so that it can be in operation immediately after the next fiscal year begins. That is July 1, 1949.

Thus, we can prepare to deal with new understanding of the spending picture in the next session of Congress, and have before us a fund of information upon which we can act.

But all of that is looking to the future. Meanwhile, we are up against the real problem of what to do about the deficit presently at hand—today, next week, this fiscal year.

Some of us have tried to send appropriation bills back to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the over-all totals by 5 percent. That course is a direct, immediate approach to the problem. That effort has been resisted. I think many Senators who would like to see a cut voted against it because they believe it is a sort of meat-ax provision, to which they cannot agree. Personally, I look at it differently. In any event, we have not been successful in recommitting appropriation bills in the hope that we might get a 5-percent cut in appropriations. It is my feeling that any one of the departments—I care not which one—can cut its general appropriation bill 5 percent and not in anyway cripple or destroy its efficiency. Other Senators do not agree. They have a perfect right to vote against that kind of procedure. But that does not deter us from continuing in our efforts. That is one way to try to meet the problem emergently at hand.

In proposing to scale down all appropriations we do not reflect upon the very capable Committee on Appropriations or its distinguished chairman, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I also am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I believe that the Senator from Tennessee would be among the first to agree that it is virtually impossible for the Appropriations Committee to sift each and every item of appropriations in a budget that calls for more than $40,000,000,000, and weigh it against the over-all spending program.

Information to support the thousands upon thousands of items is possessed by the executive branch. All of us know that, as a practical matter, heads of departments, boards, and bureaus are supposed to offer testimony in support of recommended appropriations, and not come before Congress with arguments to whittle away the President's budget.

I have been a Member of this body for 7 years. I have yet to see representatives of a department come before the Appropriations Committee of which I am a member, or a subcommittee thereof, and say, "Won't you please reduce this appropriation?" Yet the only fact-finding body we have consists of the employees of the agencies or of the Budget Bureau, who come before us seeking to justify an increase in the cost of government. They do not come before the Congress with arguments in favor of reductions. They come to the Congress with arguments to support an increase in the figures presented to the Congress. Whenever we try to reduce appropriations, those who are interested come before us and plead that the budget estimates be reinstated; and, of course, they have the support of that executive agency. Perhaps such practice can be justified in the name of orderly procedure.

But the budget estimates we are now passing upon were made last November and December, before present declines in national income were noticeable. We all know that the decline has been gaining momentum since the turn of the year. Certainly that is true of agricultural production. I know what cattle brought last November. I know what was said about cattle prices in Illinois last November, especially before November 2. I know what cattle prices are today. I know what hog prices are, and what grain prices are. So it cannot be disputed that when the budgets were prepared by the bureaus they were based upon prices of last November and December. Since that time there has been a considerable leveling off in all lines, but especially in agriculture. The facts fly at us from every issue of the press that business is slowing down.

It may be only a temporary lull; and I sincerely hope that it is only temporary. But we cannot afford to take chances and open the way to fiscal policies which would hasten depression or inflation leading to economic collapse.

In view of this sudden reversal in the national economic situation—a reversal since the spending budget was prepared, and even since the several appropriation bills got far along in the legislative mill—we should resort to extraordinary methods, methods that we can use immediately to avert this catastrophe. Congress has the wisdom to meet the challenge which now faces it. I am sure that every Member of this body stands ready to do what is best in the emergency.

Senators on both sides of the aisle are alert to the present critical situation. I know that I speak for the minority when I say that we are eager and willing to join with our friends on the other side of the aisle in solving this situation, working hand-in-hand to maintain a sound national economy.

Plainly, the first requisite is a reconsideration of appropriations, item by item. The President, through all his budget personnel and department and bureau heads, is best equipped to act to give that reconsideration, provided, of course, Congress prescribes the authorization and direction for what is to be done.

I am not advocating the abdication of the power of Congress to appropriate. I am advocating a formula which can be enacted by the Congress, requiring the President administratively to carry out our instructions. In so doing, I think the joint resolution meets every constitutional question which might be raised as to that particular power.

It is the intention of some of us to continue making motions to send appropriation bills back to the Appropriations Committee, on the ground that the committee can do the job, in cooperation with department heads and bureau chiefs, handling each appropriation separately as the bills come through the legislative mill. Such procedure is based on the principle that a bird in the hand is better than two in the bush.

But we also want the Senate to be armed to do the job of reducing expenditures for the fiscal year 1950, regardless of the results of our efforts to make cuts in each appropriation bill as it comes along. In other words, if we are not able to make a 5-percent cut in each appropriation bill, the least we can do is to prescribe a means by which the President of the United States can carry out a mandate of the Congress to effect such savings or reductions in the appropriations for the coming fiscal year which already have been made.

We do not want the Congress to adjourn and leave a certain deficit facing the people. That would invoke continuing doubt and worry by all citizens as to whether their presently back-breaking taxes would be increased, or whether the Treasury Department would return to deficit-financing, manufactured currency, printing-press money.

So, Mr. President, some of us have joined in drafting a joint resolution which we believe comprehensively and effectively deals with the rising threat of a Treasury deficit. I shall be glad to have Senators on both sides of the aisle join in supporting the joint resolution.

I now read its title:

To reduce Government expenditures for the fiscal year 1950, balance the budget, avert an increase in taxes or rise in the national debt, and maintain a sound national fiscal policy as a basis for the security and economic well-being of the United States.

Certainly that covers the situation. I am addressing myself to a joint resolution which would provide for balancing the budget. The joint resolution prescribes a formula which we can easily establish as a basis upon which the President can act in this connection.

Section 1 of the joint resolution provides:

That in order to balance the budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, the President is authorized and directed to make prior to October 15, 1949—

That is 15 days after the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year, which gives us 6 months more time to review the appropriations which have been made or to restore to the appropriations any cuts which we might feel would constitute a violation of the mandate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In the joint resolution, does the Senator use the language "the President is directed"?

Mr. WHERRY. That is exactly the language I have used in the joint resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, such language is not in conformity with the ordinary legislative language.

Mr. WHERRY. At any rate, it is in conformity with my intention in the matter, because the joint resolution will establish a formula to be used; and under the act of the Congress the President would be directed to carry out the mandate thus established, and in that way the Congress would be exercising its power in regard to the making of appropriations.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Congress does not have any power to direct the President. I wish the Senator from Nebraska would change the language of the joint resolution if he expects to obtain votes for it.

Mr. WHERRY. At this time I am simply making my speech about the joint resolution. If the Senator from Texas, for whom I have great admiration and respect, thinks other language would be preferable, I shall be glad to have him suggest other language to be used. But under the joint resolution, we would be prescribing the formula under which the President would be directed to act. If we do that, we shall not be dumping into the President's lap the congressional power to make appropriations, as was contended the other day in connection with another resolution proposing to reduce appropriations.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Texas for his observation; and if the word "directed" is offensive and should be changed, I shall certainly give the Senator's suggestion the utmost consideration, for I want his undivided support. I am delighted that this proposal is receiving his consideration. Not only is it an honor at any time to have one's proposal receive the consideration of the distinguished Senator from Texas, but his support is particularly appreciated in this connection, at this time, because the distinguished Senator from Texas, who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has many most important matters which require his time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that I did not mean to say that I was pledging myself to support the proposal. I was simply suggesting that it is not within the power of the Congress to direct the President of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, after being here 7 years, I have found that the Congress can do virtually anything it wishes to do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then, why does not the Congress do something?

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I am trying to have done. If the Senator from Texas will support the joint resolution, we shall make, for the coming fiscal year, savings in appropriations sufficient to balance the budget, prevent increases in taxes, and keep us from having to resort to deficit spending. Certainly there is no proposal which should receive greater support or command greater interest.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is a very comprehensive and ambitious program. I wonder why the Senator from Nebraska did not put it into effect in the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. We did; the Eightieth Congress, for the first time in 16 years, balanced the budget and reduced taxes. That is exactly what we are trying to do now.

But instead of that, some Members of the Senate make statements to the effect that they wish to have taxes increased $4,000,000,000 and wish to have that money spent on public works—with the idea, apparently, that that is the way to conduct the economy of our country.

Mr. President, increasing taxes $4,000,000,000 might not even tax all the income. How can we know? No one knows. On the contrary, instead of taxing all the income, higher levels of taxation might dry up the income.

So I say to the distinguished Senator from Texas that we are making a bipartisan effort to obtain this very necessary result. There is no Member of the Senate whom I would rather have join me in supporting the joint resolution than the distinguished senior Senator from Texas, because I know in what high regard he is held by all Members of this body.

Let me say that I have approached this matter in a bipartisan way; and I so stated at the beginning of my remarks. I have said that the situation is critical, and that the committee itself is not divided regarding what should be done. It is certainly true that the Appropriations Committee is not divided regarding the action which necessarily must be taken. Apparently the committee is seeking some procedure whereby this saving can be effected in a bipartisan way, so as to accomplish the purpose of the economy drive which is being made, and yet meet all appropriation requirements which Senators apparently have in mind.

I realize that the task is a very difficult one to perform, but at the same time I think it can be performed.

I sincerely hope the joint resolution will be passed by the Congress, so that we shall at least pursue this method. Let us try it. If it does not succeed, of course we shall try something else.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in addressing a question to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] who has been ably presenting his arguments in favor of passage of the joint resolution—in which I join—asked why that method was not used by the Eightieth Congress. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska answered that question, saying, very appropriately, that it was not needed in the Eightieth Congress, because that Congress did the job.

I hold in my hand a list of appropriations made by the Eightieth Congress in both the first and second sessions. The list shows the budget estimates, the amounts of the appropriations actually made, and whether the appropriations as made constituted an increase or a decrease as compared to the budget estimates. Let me say that the record shows that the regular appropriation bills passed during the first session of the Eightieth Congress constituted a decrease from the budget estimates in the amount of $2,361,889,749.

From the supplemental appropriations, the decrease from the budget estimate was $402,041,986, or a total of $3,163,672,303, in the first session. In the second session of the Eightieth Congress the reduction from the budget estimates in the bills which finally became law amounted to $2,741,481,291.92. That is the reason why such a resolution as the one introduced today was not necessary in the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator for his observation.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I should like to ask unanimous consent to present a resolution and to have it read, and I should also like to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration if that is not out of order.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not know the Senator wanted the resolution considered. Reserving the right to object, what is the resolution?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The resolution is in reference to the recent criminal attack in the city of Detroit on one Mr. Victor Reuther.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator does not mind, I shall be through in about 10 minutes, and I shall be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I shall be very happy to wait.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have just stated that the joint resolution provides the formula, first authorizing and then directing the President "to make, prior to October 15, 1949, such reductions in the amounts to be expended from any and all appropriations made for expenditures in such fiscal year, regardless of fiscal year for which the appropriations were originally enacted, as will in the aggregate equal not less than 5 percent nor more than 10 percent of the total amounts so appropriated for expenditure in such year; provided that expenditures for interest on the public debt shall not be subject to any such reduction."

That clears one hurdle raised by a resolution offered the other day by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. It also permits a sliding scale of from 5 to 10 percent, so there is a latitude given for the administration of the act. I think it should be spelled out, in order that appropriations may not be handicapped, but at the same time there is a latitude in connection with 12 appropriation bills covering an expenditure budget of nearly $42,000,000,000.

Thus, it will be noted, section 1 authorizes and directs the President to make an over-all reduction in expenditures of not less than 5 percent nor more than 10 percent.

The reduction, of course, would not apply to interest on the public debt. For obvious reasons, we would not want to impair the service on the obligations of the United States. There is no suggestion that the President would authorize a default on interest on the public debt, but in order to draft the joint resolution in legal form it was found necessary to insert that language on the public debt.

Mr. President, there is a difference between an expenditure budget and an appropriation budget, and I wonder sometimes whether Members of the Senate always keep that in mind. I am reliably informed, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, that the overall budget—that is, the appropriation budget—this year is about $48,000,000,000. If it follows the pattern of former years, about 85 percent of it will be spent in the fiscal year for which the money is appropriated. Some of the money will be expended in the next year, of course. I am now talking only about the expenditure budget, and that is the one that takes the money; that is the one that takes the cash. Subtract $5,500,000,000 for interest on the public debt from the $42,000,000,000 spending budget, and the remainder is $36,500,000,000. I have the figures as to the interest on the public debt from the Treasury, also the figure of $42,000,000,000, the spending budget to be used for the fiscal year 1950. The amount is $41,858,419,000, which of course is nearly $42,000,000,000. Subtracting from that the sum of $5,500,000,000 leaves a balance of $36,500,000,000.

Five percent of $36,500,000,000, the saving to be effected if the President should use the minimum figure, represent a saving of $1,825,000,000. If the President should exercise the formula and go to the maximum amount, 10 percent of $36,500,000,000 is $3,650,000,000.

Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that the 5- to 10-percent range for expenditures reduction provided in the joint resolution is adequate to balance the budget and meet the fiscal situation that has developed recently, since Congress began moving appropriation bills based upon outdated estimates.

Every Member of this body knows 5 percent can be wrung out of a spending budget of $42,000,000,000 without impairing any useful function of Government. I mean it can be taken out of those items that are not untouchable without impairing the efficiency of the Government. That, as I said, would save $1,825,000,000, or nearly $2,000,000,000. It might represent the difference between an increase in taxes and no increase in taxes. But, if we go to the 10-percent figure, we can save over $3,500,000,000, which would certainly be assurance against an increase in taxes.

Every Member of the Senate knows there is room for tremendous savings in the Military Establishment. In fact, if the unification bill receives favorable consideration, and we take the word of the distinguished chairman in his opening remarks, we have a right to expect a considerable saving through the unification of the military functions. That is one place where we can effect a saving. There is room for a saving in connection with ECA. I am not saying what the proper amount is, but I believe that all those who support the ECA program feel that, with reduced prices, some saving can be effected there. There is also room for savings in other large-scale activities of the Government, provided the virtue of thrift again becomes a part of the language used in the Senate.

Passage of the joint resolution, with the ensuing orders by the President to all department heads and bureau chiefs to get out their pencils and think in terms of economy, would have a wholesome effect all along the line. With the President and Congress working hand in hand to get the Government out of the red, the job can be done. Let us give the world another demonstration that a republican form of government can meet its emergencies in war and can meet them at this time in peace.

The purpose in authorizing and directing a range of from 5 to 10 percent in expenditures is to give the President leeway to meet possible change in the fiscal situation in order to accomplish a balanced budget. That will lock the door against deficit financing.

Section 2 reads:

> Each such reduction shall be made in a manner calculated to accomplish the most efficient operation of the Government and thereby balance the budget, avert an increase in taxes or rise in the national debt, and maintain a sound national fiscal policy as a basis for the security and economic well-being of the United States.

Section 2 needs no elaboration. It is self-explanatory.

Section 3 reads:

> No reduction of expenditures authorized herein shall have the effect of reducing any item of appropriation for such fiscal year more than 20 percent.

In other words, the President could not make a reduction on any item of more than 20 percent. This limitation is prescribed in order to prevent elimination of any function or activity made lawful by act of the Congress.

It is an essential limitation, in order to prescribe a definite formula. In this joint resolution, Congress exercises its constitutional responsibility and prerogative over making appropriations, and gives to the President administrative duties to carry out the will of the Congress.

As Senators know, the joint resolution, to become law, must be signed by the President, or be passed over his veto. The legal procedure is similar to the process of reapportioning seats in the House of Representatives, as required by the Constitution. The Constitution provides that Congress may reapportion seats in the House of Representatives every 10 years, based upon the growth and shift of population. Congress has provided the formula for such reapportionment. The ministerial or administrative duties are carried out pursuant to the formula prescribed by Congress. We can do so in this case.

Section 4 reads as follows:

> The President shall cause the reduction in each appropriation account to be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the Committees on Appropriations and the Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments of the Senate and House of Representatives. The amount so certified shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

Section 5 reads:

> The President shall include in the annual budget for the year ending June 30, 1951, a statement of each reduction made in accordance with this act.

Sections 4 and 5, it will be observed, simply provide for reports back to the Congress and its appropriate committees on the accomplishment of the authorization and directions in the act.

Mr. President, we who have drafted the joint resolution believe that it adequately covers the problem that demands solution. We are not jealous of its provisions. It may be that other Senators can offer amendments that will make more certain that the job is done effectively, and thereby protect the people against return to wartime taxes or deficit financing.

In setting the date of October 15, 1949, for the President to complete his duties under the joint resolution, we believe ample time has been given for a thorough reexamination of the impending expenditures, in the light of changed conditions. The first quarter of the fiscal year 1950 will have been passed, and he will have up to 15 days in the second quarter to complete his task. October 15 carries us well into the autumn, when sights can be readjusted to whatever the economic situation is at that time.

Eighty days later, Congress again will be in session and on hand to deal with whatever situation may then exist.

Such procedure will restore public confidence. Certainly it will restore the confidence of labor; certainly it will restore the confidence of business; it will restore confidence all along the line; it will restore confidence that the Federal budget is to be taken out of the red and put into the black; confidence that industries can go forward with their plans for new construction, for plant expansion, and for providing jobs for the unemployed, now numbering approximately 3,500,000 persons.

This restoration of confidence based on the knowledge that Congress has done something effective to get the constantly expanding and mounting cost of Government down to size, is the best tonic I know of to reverse the present downward trend of business and upward trend in unemployment.

Mr. President, I have introduced the resolution. I wanted to have it read, but in order to save time I shall forego that.

I appeal to the Members of the Senate to give favorable consideration to the joint resolution. It prescribes a formula which will surmount the hurdle of Congress endeavoring to cut by 5 percent all appropriations. It provides a formula which is constitutionally sound. It permits the President sufficient latitude, and if he will accept the formula we can make a saving of $3,000,000,000, possibly $3,500,000,000, including national defense, ECA, and all the other large items provided for in appropriation bills. It simply means the difference between increased taxes and no increase in taxes. It means the difference between expanding business and curtailing business expansion, deficit spending, high prices, and the imposition of controls.

I hope the Senate will go along with the joint resolution or with some similar resolution. This one may be perfected by amendments which will accomplish the results desired by those who introduce it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, because I believe there is necessity for economy, I have offered various motions to reduce expenditures in connection with practically every appropriation bill which has been before the committee. I have supported others directed to the same end. We have offered amendments to various appropriation bills before the Senate to provide for reductions in various ways. One was the method offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and myself. Another was the method offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. Another was the method offered by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and another was the one offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Those efforts commanded the support of many thoughtful Senators who realized the trend in this country. Up to this time such motions on the floor have not been successful. In one instance a motion of this kind was agreed to, and then the vote was reconsidered. I think it is essential that Senators who believe in economy and who have been voting for economy should offer some sort of an over-all resolution. The joint resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, and other Senators, may not be the complete answer, but it is a very intelligent approach and is a very sound one. As the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has said, it may need amendment. It may be the basis for a little different approach in the end, but it seeks the correct objective and is a sound method of procedure. The Senator from Nebraska has very ably presented the case, and I join with him and other Senators because I believe it is very essential that we return to a sound fiscal reality in this country. The objective of the resolution is abundantly clear. It is designed to insure that, regardless of previous or current spending authorizations, the Federal Government will end the fiscal year 1950 in balance.

In order to accomplish this thoroughly worthy objective, the responsibility and the authority are vested in the Chief Executive, within a range calculated to provide him the maximum flexibility to reduce the total spending program for the fiscal year 1950 by a sufficient amount to avoid any imbalance in the total budget. Such a reduction would be made sufficiently in advance to inform the proper committees of the Congress as to their effect on specific items in the budget. The safeguard against complete elimination of essential functions or programs is provided by prohibiting a reduction of more than 20 percent in any one appropriation item.

Naturally and obviously, the joint resolution specifically prevents any reduction whatsoever in the payment of interest on the public debt, since this is one obligation which the Federal Government must meet. A default on the national debt, in any degree, would be unthinkable.

I believe the joint resolution should receive the active support of all Members of this body who believe in the principle of a balanced national budget. This does not mean, so far as I am concerned, that I shall not offer motions to make reductions in individual appropriation bills as they are considered.

Yesterday I sat in a committee where a whole series of motions were offered for reductions in specific items. Some were successful, some were not. Again this afternoon I sat in another committee where the same thing has been taking place. So, in supporting the objective of the joint resolution which has been introduced, I want it distinctly understood that it does not mean that the individual efforts on specific appropriations bills and particular items, in the committee and later on the floor, will not be continued.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDRICKSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2 offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish the Senator would ask unanimous consent that I might be permitted to make a statement without his losing the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the statement a long one?

Mr. GILLETTE. It is not too long.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have no objection to yielding.

PRACTICE OF LAW BEFORE GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, this morning I introduced a bill in the Senate, and the statement I am about to make is in connection with the purport of the bill. It could not be made at the time of the introduction of the bill, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. President, the bill I have introduced is presented to the Senate for the reasons set forth in its title, "to protect the public with respect to the practice of the law, by those other than duly licensed attorneys and counselors at law, before the United States Government departments, bureaus, commissions, and agencies and in the United States tax courts."

Fundamental to a democracy are the laws upon which it is constituted. The acts and statutes promulgated within this body determine the welfare of our Nation. The obligation by and to our citizens of such laws is the safeguard of our heritage.

The various States of this country, as has every civilized nation in the world, established and set up standards and criteria by which it has said that only those persons specially trained, qualified, and highly recommended shall be the guardians of this most important inheritance.

The guaranty of impartial justice, the most valued possession of each person, has made our country the greatest of all nations. This guaranty is the keystone of our Constitution. We call it due process of law. It has been, and always will be, just so long as every American legislator worthy of his constituents and his oath of office sees to it that the administration of the law is entrusted only to such persons as by training and character are worthy of being entrusted with this sacred obligation.

Who but the American lawyer, after years of proper academic training and specialized study and research, and who has proven himself by submission to examination as to his ability, character, and fitness, is qualified to carry on this high trust? All during his years of practice he is subject to the rigid code of ethics to further guarantee to the members of the public that he will practice his profession in the interest of proper and ethical administration of justice. The attorney is obligated, without reservation, to all our people in all our courts and in every place wherein the administration of justice is practiced to secure to the members of the public the proper and full protection of their rights.

The Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut has taken up and advanced this most needed proposed legislation for the primary reason of protecting the general public against being represented by anyone other than a duly licensed attorney, for it is to the attorney that the general public will turn after having been mulcted by unscrupulous imposters. However, often it is too late to cure the harm already done.

It is my purpose, therefore, in sponsoring this bill to protect the general public from the commercialized practice of law by unqualified persons. Just as legislation was needed to prevent the public from being mulcted by the quack doctor, the patent medicine man, the nature faker, and all those who would assert that they can cure the ills of man, so today, as there has been permitted to grow up the so-called expert and counselor in all our branches of administrative justice, men and women who practice law before these departments and bureaus who have not the proper qualifications, fitness, and character necessary to represent the general public. Legislation is needed to see to it that only duly licensed attorneys are permitted to represent the public and their interests in certain of these fields.

We all know that there have grown up over the past 20 years ever-increasing regulations and methods of enforcement of regulations by administrative agencies of the Government. Our Federal departments, bureaus, and agencies have grown to such an extent today because of the complexity of Government, that they are equal in number of our courts throughout the land. As the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] aptly stated in his explanation of his administrative law court bill:

> Nowadays more laws are made by administrative agencies than by Congress except that we call those laws regulations instead of statutes. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars every year merely publishing those regulations in the Federal Register and the Code of Federal Regulations. Similarly, bureaus and commissions decide far more specific cases than the courts except that we call those decisions orders instead of judgments. Some are published in vast sets of law books but the greater part of them never see the light of publicity.

And, continuing, he said:

> In great part the courts serve merely as appellate agencies designed or deeming themselves designed to exercise their powers only to correct abuses of the grossest nature.

Speaking of administrative agencies, the late Honorable Charles Evans Hughes, Chief Justice of the United States, stated on May 12, 1938, right here in Washington:

> Administrative agencies, which we earnestly desire to succeed in discharging their independent tasks according to the basic requirements of their authority, will achieve that end to the extent that they perform their work with the recognized responsibility which attaches to judges and with the impartiality and independence which is associated with the judicial office.
>
> Deliberation, fairness, conscientious appraisal of evidence, determination according to the facts, and the impartial application of the law, whether the controversies are decided in the courts or in administrative tribunals—these are the safeguards of society.
> For the law is naught but words, save as the law is administered.

Following the thought of our honorable Chief Justice, we must be ever mindful that the law can only be administered in direct relationship to the qualities of those persons who administer it.

Let us consider how manifold our Government bureaus and departments are today and how wide the scope of the rights which they affect. May I be permitted to name but a few of such agencies: Treasury Department; Immigration and Naturalization Service; Agricultural Department; Patent Office; Wage and Hour and Public Contract Divisions of the Department of Labor; Federal Power Commission; Food and Drug Administration; Employees' Compensation Commission; Social Security Administration; and Interstate Commerce Commission.

In considering this bill and our problem before us, may I say that Congress has not been entirely neglectful of demanding that only qualified persons practice before administrative bodies. For instance, Congress took a step in the right direction when it adopted the Administrative Procedure Act of June 11, 1946, when under sections 7 (b), 7 (c) and 8 of that act, it provided that examiners who sit at hearings and determine administrative questions of law and fact must do so judicially and must take an important and judicial part in rendering decisions on cases before them.

Under the Administrative Procedure Act, the United States Civil Service Commission has insisted that those who are to preside over these administrative judicial hearings shall have not less than 6 years active experience as members of the bar of this country.

Unfortunately for the general public, however, our legislative branches of government have not gone far enough. Let me tell of a few agencies and departments which permit laymen to practice: The Patent Office; Department of Immigration and Naturalization; Customs Department; Social Security Administration Interstate Commerce Commission; National Labor Relations Board; Treasury Department.

In the Treasury Department, certified public accountants are admitted to general practice as agents. Although customhouse brokers are regulated by statute (19 U. S. C. sec. 1641), under the Secretary of the Treasury, even corporations, associations, and partnerships may be admitted to practice. Under the Federal Power Commission neither good standing, citizenship, ability nor character need be established nor proof of admission to the bar (18 C. F. R. 1). Before the Social Security Administration there is no distrinction between attorneys and other representatives except an attorney may charge a fee up to $10 without approval whereas others must have their fees fixed by petition. The Administration of Veterans' Affairs authorized representation by agents, who need not be lawyers. These are a few examples of the many instances that might be cited.

MORE THAN MERE EXPERTNESS SHOULD BE NECESSARY TO PRACTICE LAW BEFORE THESE HIGH ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNALS

When you examine the rules and regulations of the various departments and bureaus that admit laymen to practice administrative justice, you will find that one of their outstanding reasons for permitting laymen to so practice, as Federal practitioners, is based on so-called "expert knowledge" and "experience." Laymen formerly holding jobs in bureaus are licensed to practice law. Laymen claiming to have expert knowledge in the operation of a railroad, freight rates, laymen who claim to have a knowledge of how a patent works or what constitutes an invention, are admitted to practice law. Character and reputation are supposed to be carefully examined.

The test that expertness and experience are the primary qualifications for the practice of law is on its face ridiculous. It has no more place as a test before an administrative body which challenges the constitutional and statutory rights of a citizen than it would have before any Federal court or State court where that same type of expertness or experience is needed.

For hundreds of years in courts of justice when expert testimony is needed or an expert is required to guide the hand of the court, they are summoned by contestants as experts for the purpose of guiding the judge and jury on matters of particular moment to the issues involved. They are never permitted to take over a proceeding in a court and try the case. In fact the testimony of experts in courts is always received by judges and juries with caution.

I do not for a moment intend to disparage or belittle the expert or the experienced person but I do insist, with the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut that they are not qualified in knowledge of the rules of evidence, they are not qualified to make a record on appeal or for appeal, they are not qualified under any sensible argument to act as practitioners and to maintain administrative justice before our Federal bureaus and agencies.

Now I shall discuss briefly the proposed bill section by section, as to whether it accomplishes what we seek, and whether there are conditions which the specific provisions of the bill seek to remedy.

May I make something definitely clear at the outset. It is not the intention of this bill to forbid any person, association, or group of persons to assist any other person, group, or association in matters pending before any Government department or bureau, nor is it the purpose of the bill to in any way interfere with any one whether it be corporation or unincorporated association to appear before legislative bodies.

This bill is primarily aimed at those cases where a claim is made by the Government or to the Government or in those cases where a complaint may issue and an answer may be filed, or where a trial or hearing is to be had and the practice of law is defined and in those cases, for example, where a Government agency notifies a person or a corporation that it is likely to begin a proceeding involving the rights of the one who received the notification. No person shall hold himself out as qualified or competent to advise a person with respect to his rights in such matters because in those instances the likelihood of a complaint is apparent.

A reading of the first section is self-explanatory.

Section 2 is likewise self-explanatory. Only persons licensed to practice before the court of last resort of the District of Columbia or a State or Territory shall practice as the term "practice of law" is defined.

Section 3 is conceived with the thought of preventing persons from imposing themselves on the public generally through the medium of advertising and publicity as being capable of substituting themselves in the place of duly qualified attorneys.

Of course, it is a matter of common knowledge to every citizen that no lawyer has a right under the code of ethics to make public representation that he has superior or expert ability in any branch of his profession. He may under no circumstances advertise for law practice, the reason being that the dignity of the profession forbids such quackery.

Permit me to call your attention to some flagrant cases. I have here before me an instance of an accountant who advertises in the New York papers that by the purchasing of a dollar book you will find the panacea of all tax exemptions and he will save you money if you take his advice on tax law. Here is an instance where over 9,000,000 copies were sold.

One State of these United States has taken positive steps to stop this practice. Many Senators are probably familiar with the well-known Bercu case in the State of New York. There the question of unlawful practice of law by accountants was an issue. In that case, an accountant submitted a brief concerning a tax law for which he made a charge of $500, although he was not the accountant for the party he represented nor had he anything to do with the preparation of the income-tax returns for that company. He was called in solely for the purpose of giving advice on legal propositions involving the tax law. As this case is now pending before the court of appeals in the State of New York, the highest court in that State, no further comment will be made except to state that the lower courts in that case held that he was illegally practicing law.

The Bercu case was recently cited as indicating the impropriety of an accountant giving legal advice, by the Tax Court of the United States in Hermax Co., Inc. v. Commissioner (11 Tax Court No. 55). In that case a family corporation in Newark, N. J., was penalized for failure to file certain tax returns as a personal holding company. An accountant had advised the stockholders that the company was not a personal holding company. The Tax Court stated that the fact that the accountant had read only section 502 (g) in considering the question as to a personal holding company indicated that he was not a person qualified to give advice to others on questions of law involving the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Finding Bercu guilty of unlawful practice of the law, the appellate division held him in contempt of court, fined him, and restrained him from "practicing or assuming to practice law in any manner, and in particular, from engaging in and charging for the giving of legal opinions in relation to the tax laws, and in rendering legal service in respect thereto for compensation and for the same purposes, from holding himself out or assuming, using or advertising himself as a tax counselor or tax consultant, or by any equivalent designation."

Please do not misconstrue my references to accountants. The accountancy profession is a very honorable one and the accountants are very reputable men. They are highly qualified to keep books and to fill out tax returns but they should stay within their field of knowledge. When they branch out into the field of law they are beyond their depths be they ever so reputable and qualified as accountants. Accountancy is one thing but knowledge of law is another.

An accountant permitted to practice before the Treasury Department, knowing he cannot appeal to higher courts, has the natural tendency, be he ever so high-minded, to prefer to settle the matter rather than fight it out on its merits. On the other hand, a duly licensed attorney is interested, before the Treasury Department, in demanding that his client's rights are properly safeguarded, and if they are not he has no hesitancy in refusing a settlement, well knowing that he is qualified to carry the matter through to the highest court in the land if necessary.

It may be well anticipated that the greatest opposition to the bill perhaps will be the accountants and they will probably claim, as they have claimed in the past, that they are the only ones with sufficient expertness and knowledge because of their familiarity with figures to practice before the Treasury Department and the tax courts in tax matters, and that in any event the lawyer has for years neglected this field.

It is submitted, however, that this argument is fallacious. It is far easier for an attorney to become acquainted with numbers and figures and methods of bookkeeping than it is for an accountant to spend years of study in the various branches of the law with its various rules of evidence, and so forth. Furthermore, there are thousands of attorneys throughout the land who practice tax law, exclusively, and if they wish to engage an expert for the accounting end strictly, they do so without hesitancy.

As stated before, mere expertness in a particular line should not be the criterion for admission to practice before our administrative tribunals.

The obnoxious practice of advertising by laymen, of course, is not confined to accountants. It branches out into various subjects. For instance, in one of the New York papers a person advertises himself as giving immigration and naturalization assistance; another as trade counselor; others advertise profusely and extensively in magazines soliciting the inventor to bring his business to them although they are not attorneys. In this instance, they even practice under a firm name. For instance, I read from one such ad which states that the inventor "is advised to employ a competent registered patent attorney, as the value of patents depends largely upon the skillful preparation of the specifications and claims."

Although this party is only admitted to practice in the Patent Office, he attempts to give the impression and to hold himself out as a generally qualified attorney specializing in the practice of patents.

It is very important that only persons having the highest qualifications, such as duly licensed patent attorneys, be permitted to practice before the Patent Office. The mere obtaining of a piece of paper with a beautiful ribbon and seal on it and called "letters patent" gives the poor inventor nothing if it is not based on the proper requirements of the patent law. The inventor never knows the value of his patent until it is tested in the fires of litigation in a court where only duly licensed attorneys are permitted to practice. He then may find to his sorrow and loss that because the claims of the patent were drawn either too broad or too narrow or more was claimed than is shown that the patent is invalid. He might have spent years on his invention; he might have spent thousands of dollars developing it and even in exploiting it only to find later that it is only a piece of paper.

How much better off would he have been if in the first instance only a qualified, duly licensed attorney prepared his patent papers, one who had the fundamental knowledge of patent law, not primarily from the standpoint of getting a patent but from the standpoint of its withstanding the scrutiny of a judge in the district court, several judges in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and our Honorable Justices in the Supreme Court.

Section 4 also applies to the tax courts. Need I digress on the necessity of preventing laymen from practicing before tax courts? Yet this obnoxious practice is being permitted by the Treasury Department this very day. Laymen may practice before certain of the tax courts.

Section 5 of the bill is designed to cover every possible type of deceptive title that is used by the unscrupulous laymen to make the public believe that he is a duly admitted and licensed attorney and counsellor at law. To say that you are a compensation law expert or a compensation law agent and with that title to represent injured workingmen in opposition to skilled insurance company lawyers is a fraud and a sham on injured workingmen. The skilled insurance company lawyer's business, and rightly so, is to minimize the amount of the award and in the event of an award being made that is unsatisfactory to the insurance company lawyer or to the employer to lay such a record before the administration and to appeal from the decision to a court in the event the administrative decision is not satisfactory. What a helpless and hopeless situation does the workingman find himself in when it comes to the preparation of an appeal? The intention of this section is to wipe out forever and to make it a crime to use such titles as appear in that section in order to induce the public to obtain and employ the person using such titles as one skilled in legal practice.

In the majority of the States of these United States, corporations are by statute prevented from practicing law. Why then should they not be stopped from practicing before our administrative agencies? For instance, in the State of New York there is a section of the penal law, section 280, which states:

> 1. No corporation or voluntary association shall (a) practice or appear as an attorney-at-law for any person in any court in this State or before any judicial body.

This section was construed by Justice Rippey of the court of appeals in the State of New York in the case of People v. Lawyers Title Corporation (282 N. Y. 513), and Justice Rippey distinctly and emphatically stated:

> It is imperative that the public be protected from the unskillful preparation of legal documents and the unskillful handling of legal transactions.

Under some of our Government agencies, however, corporations are permitted to practice. I call your attention to the Custom House brokers, where corporations are permitted to represent and render such services to importers and exporters.

Section 6: It is hoped through section 6, that no other means or devices or tricks will be used by those who practice law because the trick or device is not set out in section 5. Section 6 is designed to forbid any lawyer from becoming a partner with anyone who practices law or who has practiced law as defined in this bill and who is not himself a lawyer. It is a well-known fact that accountants and certified public accountants have as partners and have as employees members of the bar who practice their profession at the will and dominance of the accountants.

Section 7: This section seeks to eliminate and to make unlawful any attempt by subterfuge on the part of any person or firm who is prohibited from practicing under this law from so doing through the medium of a dummy association. I have cited instances of this by reading you an advertisement in the New York Times by a New York accountant and I am sorry to say that same accountant heads the Law Tax Symposium Division of the New York State University and is permitted to do so by the subterfuge of engaging licensed attorneys to deliver the lectures for him and is further permitted to deceive the public because he is not a licensed attorney.

In respect to the accountants, one frequently sees advertisements appearing in the daily press where an accountant offers to sell his clients to some other accountant because he is going out of business. Accountants are permitted to sell their business as others buy and sell potatoes. The licensed attorney is never permitted to sell his client or his business to someone else. His is a profession that demands that the close relationship of client and attorney remain inviolate and not be peddled in the open market.

Furthermore, accountants are permitted to do business under fictitious names and as a matter of fact it is a matter of common knowledge that accountancy firms do business under fictitious names and titles by registering in the various county clerks' offices. For instance, A. B. C. & Co. can be registered. This is something that would never be tolerated in the legal profession. When a complaint or petition is drawn, the name of the lawyer must appear on it. Under our Federal rules of practice in our Federal courts, the lawyer who is to bear the responsibility of the suit must sign the complaint.

Should laymen therefore who can sell the business and who can practice under fictitious titles be permitted to practice before our Federal bureaus and departments? It is my contention that they should not be and that is what this bill seeks to stop.

Section 8 is intended to protect the public against suspended and debarred lawyers or those who claim they are lawyers and who are not. It will be seen by this section that the notice of appearance and certification of qualifications is designed to protect the public and the department or bureau before whom the lawyer intends to appear when he is properly and duly licensed to practice law.

Section 9: The purpose of section 9 is apparent. It is well recognized that the rights which may subsequently be secured for an individual on appeal, stem from the assertion and protection of the right which he seeks to pursue from the Federal department or bureau or agency into the higher tribunal for review and it may well happen that in this higher tribunal his complaint, application, petition or hearing may not be received in the fullest light so as to properly secure for the individual that which he seeks or deserves because the foundation and framework were improperly laid and prepared by a person incompetent and not qualified and by one who had not the slightest knowledge of the value of collating and presenting material facts for appeal.

Section 10: As I stated in the beginning, it is not the purpose of this bill to prevent any person or persons or group or association, labor organization, or veterans' association or charitable association from assisting any other person, persons, group or association of any kind in any matter relating to any legislation pending or to be initiated before the United States Senate or the House of Representatives or before any committee or committees thereof. Thus section 10 is inserted which specifically so states.

Sections 11, 12, and 13 speak for themselves.

It is possible that a certain selfish few will oppose this proposed legislation because their nests are feathered at the expense of the unsuspecting general public but it is our duty to protect our citizenry. That is the function of our branch of government.

May I say in closing that it was necessary to legislate to protect the public in the medical profession, the dental profession and a host of others. Even the psychologists today are seeking legislation to protect the public from the practice of quackery by unqualified persons holding themselves out to be able to treat the disturbed mind. It is sincerely believed that it is now imperatively necessary to protect the public with respect to the practice by those other than duly licensed attorneys and counsellors at law before our very important and numerous Government departments, bureaus, commissions, and agencies.

With the rising judicial power of our Government commissions and departments, it is imperative that only those trained in the law should be permitted to advise members of the public, keeping in mind always that our Government departments are manned by lawyers trained to represent the phases of administrative law. Consequently, we must never forget this fundamental law:

No free man shall be arrested or detained in prison or deprived of his freehold or outlawed, or banished or in any way molested, and we will not set forth against him nor send against him, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers and by the law of the land" (Magna Carta, ch. 39 (1215)).

Mr. President, I ask that the bill which I introduced this morning be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks as they appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1944) to protect the public with respect to the practice of the law, by those other than duly licensed attorneys and counsellors at law, before the United States Government departments, bureaus, commissions, and agencies and in the United States tax courts, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and I think it is numbered 2. Does the Senator from Oregon wish me to yield while he speaks?

Mr. MORSE. No. I shall be glad to hear the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was going to say that my recollection is that the Senator from Oregon spoke to the amendment yesterday. I should be glad to try to give the committee's point of view, but in view of the fact that there are so few Members of the Senate present at the moment I should like to suggest, without, I hope, being immodest, that some Senator make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

COOPERATION BY FEDERAL OFFICIALS IN INVESTIGATING ASSAULTS ON VICTOR G. REUTHER AND WALTER P. REUTHER

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to present a resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum for a moment?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I submit on behalf of myself, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON]. I send the resolution to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair). The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 120), as follows:

Whereas requests have been made by the Detroit Common Council, the mayor of Detroit, and the Governor of Michigan for the immediate assistance of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the apprehension of the assailants who attempted the assassination of Victor G. Reuther and, earlier of his brother, Walter P. Reuther: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that all law-enforcement facilities of the Department of Justice be made available immediately to investigate and cooperate with the local authorities in apprehending the criminals who attempted the assassination of Victor G. Reuther, and earlier of his brother, Walter P. Reuther.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, some Senators are not on the floor at the present time. Under those circumstances, I wonder if we should not have a quorum call.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, almost everything has been taken up for consideration today except the pending amendment. Former President Hoover estimates that if the bill is passed it will mean the saving of from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 a year. If that were to be placed on a day-to-day basis it would mean a saving of four or five million dollars a day. Therefore, every day action on the bill is delayed—if the bill is as good as we hope it is—there will be that much of a loss to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not anticipate that the resolution of the Senator from Minnesota will cause any delay. However, in view of the absence of many Senators, including the Senator from Michigan, I think we should have a quorum call.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from Minnesota with the understanding that this matter would not cause undue delay. I ask him if he will be good enough, if it requires more than 5 minutes after the quorum call, to withdraw his request.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, rather than ask for immediate consideration of the resolution, I submit it for appropriate reference.

I should like to state that this action is in concurrence with the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] yesterday.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks copies of telegrams which have been received from the Governor of the State of Michigan, the president of the Detroit City Council, and the Common Council of the City of Detroit, as certified by the city clerk, together with this morning's editorial from the Washington Post.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1949.

Attorney General TOM CLARK,
Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.:

I was shocked to learn of the criminal attack upon the life of Victor Reuther, leading official of the United Automobile Workers, CIO. This attack transcend local issues and is of national significance. It parallels in many ways the attack made against his distinguished brother, Mr. Walter Reuther, president of the United Automobile Workers, CIO. This is a matter of great national concern. I urge you to order an FBI investigation of this attack immediately. It is important that the criminals involved be apprehended at the soonest possible moment. The attacks are clearly a conspiracy to endanger and frighten the liberal, democratic labor movement in America. All Americans are profoundly angered by this incident. Your immediate action is urgently requested.

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY.

MAY 25, 1949.

To the President:

The people of Michigan are profoundly shocked and angered by the brutal shooting of Victor G. Reuther under the same circumstances as surrounded the attempted assassination of his brother, Walter Reuther, president, UAW-CIO. There are indications that shooting may transcend local interest and I have already ordered all police agencies in the State of Michigan to devote their best efforts to the case. I join with the Common Council and Mayor of Detroit to urge you, Mr. President, to put all facilities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other appropriate Federal agencies on this case. That the perpetrators against decency and law may be swiftly caught and public order and confidence restored.

GOV. MENNEN WILLIAMS.

DETROIT, MICH., May 25, 1949.

Hon. HUBERT HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building:

I am sure you are as concerned as I am about the Victor Reuther shooting with its identical details to the Walter Reuther shooting of 13 months ago. Mayor and council of the city of Detroit have officially urged FBI to cooperate in this case to investigate all possible national and international angles of it and I am informed that Governor G. Mennen Williams is making a similar request on behalf of State of Michigan. Feel we can afford to leave no stone unturned in attempt to track down would-be assassins of these two magnificently prodemocratic American labor leaders. You'll recall that Victor Reuther recently returned from an official mission as representative of the United States Government in the ECA program from Europe where as chairman of the labor subcommittee he met with pro-democratic European trade-unionists to aid in a fight for European democracy.

GEORGE EDWARDS,
President of Detroit City Council.

MAY 25, 1949.

The Detroit Common Council by resolution urges the President of the United States, the Governor, G. Mennen Williams, of Michigan, and J. Edgar Hoover to order the FBI and the Michigan State Police, respectively, to join with the Detroit Police Department in making a thorough investigation of the brutal shooting of Victor Reuther on Tuesday night. Council President George Edwards suggested international motivations might be behind the shooting.

THOMAS D. LEADBETTER, City Clerk.

[From the Washington Post of May 26, 1949]

TERRORISM

The methods of the would-be assassin who shot Walter Reuther more than a year ago and the assailant of his brother Victor are so similar as to suggest that both these cowardly attacks were the work of the same criminal. But even if the assault on Victor Reuther was the work of an imitator, it was undoubtedly encouraged by the failure of the authorities to bring to trial the man who tried to murder his more famous brother. The fact that this earlier assault remains shrouded in mystery is a serious reflection on the competence of the Detroit police force to deal with the turbulent elements of that great industrial city.

Walter Reuther now believes that both attacks were the work of hired assassins directed against "pro-American and pro-democratic trade unionism." That might be true, since Mr. Reuther in his rise to power in the UAW made bitter enemies among left-wing radical elements and was responsible for a purge of numerous UAW jobholders after his election to the presidency of the union. His anti-Communist drive inevitably gives rise to a suspicion that Communist plotting was responsible for both assaults. However, this is mere assumption, without a vestige of direct proof. To jump to conclusions about the motivation of these crimes might, indeed, hamper police efforts to apprehend the guilty man or men. For it is also quite possible, as Walter Reuther himself once suggested, that the shots were fired by a crackpot who had some personal grievance, real or fancied, against the labor leader and members of his family. Or in the present instance it may be that one, or more, of the Ford strikers, some of whom are said to be bitterly opposed to Walter Reuther's latest arbitration proposals, decided to emulate the terroristic tactics of the unknown assailant who struck last year.

These and other possibilities that will occur to anyone with even a slight knowledge of the hatred engendered by the factional rivalries that rend trade unions emphasize the importance of running down the criminal instead of indulging in speculation about the motives behind the attacks. Unfortunately these assaults are not "un-American tricks," as Walter Reuther charges. They are characteristic forms of violence only too common in our great cities where crime, organized and unorganized, takes a heavy toll of life and property. And they are crimes that can only be suppressed by vigorous work on the part of law-enforcement officers in apprehending and punishing the guilty.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I will withhold any further comment so that we may proceed with the business which is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 120), submitted by Mr. HUMPHREY, for himself and other Senators, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2 offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this amendment will not be adopted. It is an important amendment, and should not be viewed lightly by those who are genuinely interested in the establishment of the most efficient military we can devise. Senators who would be guided by the opinion of General Bradley, Admiral Denfeld, and General Vandenberg will find in the testimony, at about page 110, that all three of them opposed this amendment.

The amendment would place one man in charge of the Chiefs of Staff. He would have more rank than General Bradley, General Vandenberg, or Admiral Denfeld. He would literally command them. We think that would be bad.

Inasmuch as this amendment deals with a military function, I do not believe that we should disregard the combined and unanimous advice of Admiral Denfeld, General Bradley, and General Vandenberg. I therefore hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the chairman of the committee state his position in regard to my amendment. I most respectfully disagree with the conclusion he has expressed here in regard to my amendment. My amendment does not and could not possibly give to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs any such authority or jurisdiction as my good friend the Senator from Maryland indicates would be the case.

Mr. President, my amendment makes perfectly clear that the Joint Chiefs shall not function as a voting staff, but shall function as an advisory staff. That is what I have always taken for granted was the contemplation of the other members of the Armed Services Committee concerning the functioning of the Joint Chiefs. But by my amendment we made it perfectly clear because we eliminate all reference to voting.

Mark you, Mr. President, in this bill the committee does not say that the Joint Chiefs shall vote, but it does say that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs shall not vote. The conclusion I draw is that indirectly the committee is establishing in this bill a procedure whereby the other members of the Joint Chiefs shall vote, but would deny a vote to the Chairman.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I did not hear a great deal of the Senator's argument on his amendment. Normally I am inclined to go along with the committee recommendations, because the committees study all these matters.

I wish to ask whether I am correct in believing that the committee considered the amendment which the Senator from Oregon now proposes. If so, I wonder whether the Senator from Oregon can tell me by what vote his amendment was rejected in the committee.

Mr. MORSE. In the committee we did not consider the amendment in the sense that we put it to a vote.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the record will show that substantially all members of the committee were in attendance at that time—not all of them, but substantially all of them, and much more than a quorum. I think the record also will show that the proposal now set forth in the bill was adopted at that time, that it had the support of General Bradley, General Vandenberg, and Admiral Denfeld—that, with their support, and that the language now contained in the bill was adopted by the committee.

Mr. MORSE. I may say that this particular matter—as in the case of most of the matters discussed in the committee—was not the subject of a formal vote. In the committee we discussed all these matters. The Senator from Maryland is correct in saying that in the committee the consensus of opinion was that the bill should include the provision which now appears in it.

Of course, I had already notified the members of the committee that I would disapprove this section of the bill unless my amendment was accepted.

The point I wish to make to the Senator from Wisconsin is that what the amendment does, on page 8, in line 10, in reference to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, is to strike out the language "shall have no vote but," and in line 17 strikes out the word "two," and inserts in lieu thereof the word "four." In other words, because in my opinion the man the President would appoint as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs would be an exceedingly able person, I think he should be allowed to serve 4 years instead of 2 and then should be eligible for reappointment by the President, if the President wished to reappoint him.

Let me make clear—because this point was stressed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] in his remarks in the Senate the other day—that there is no danger that the Joint Chiefs will become handicapped by an inefficient Chairman, because the language of the bill provides that he shall serve at the pleasure of the President, the Commander in Chief. So it will not be mandatory that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs serve his full term.

Last of all, beginning in line 25 on page 8, I propose to strike out the proviso, because it is surplusage. Under the organic act, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs could not possibly exercise any military command. Thus, I say it is a reflection upon him to insert such a proviso in the bill, for it would have the effect of lessening his stature; and inasmuch as it is surplusage, I think it should be stricken out.

That is what the amendment does.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to know whether the Senator's amendments were considered in the committee and were rejected by a substantial majority. Of course, I do not take the position that merely because the committee rejected the Senator's amendments, we should not consider them on the floor of the Senate, for some of the things the Armed Services Committee has done rather recently I have not been too enthusiastic about, as the Senator knows.

However, inasmuch as all of us are so busy in different kinds of legislative work, and inasmuch as all of us are to a greater or lesser degree specializing in certain types of such work, I think we must rely to a considerable extent upon the committees, so long as we have competent committees.

For that reason, I wish to have the RECORD clear as to whether the Armed Services Committee as a whole considered the suggestions made by the Senator from Oregon and rejected them.

I now understand that although there may not have been a formal vote in the committee on the Senator's suggestions, nevertheless all of them were considered and all of them were rejected.

Mr. MORSE. I wish the chairman of the committee to follow my remarks closely as I explain that matter now, because I wish the RECORD to be entirely factual and accurate. The junior Senator from Oregon did not submit the amendments to the committee in the form in which he has submitted them on the floor of the Senate. It was quite unnecessary for that to be done, because early in the discussion in the committee it became clear that the Senator from Oregon was in the minority in the committee in his point of view regarding these amendments. Therefore, I said in the committee, in effect, "Gentlemen, we part company on these issues. I shall offer my amendments on the floor of the Senate."

In the committee we did discuss in detail my amendment No. 5; and at one time the committee decided, upon the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], as I recall, to postpone final action on my proposal to reduce the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force to Under Secretary of Defense for Army, Under Secretary of Defense for Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for Air Force until all other sections of the bill were considered. But it is correct to say that the amendments, in the language in which I have submitted them on the floor of the Senate, were not submitted to the committee, because in the committee I served notice that I would submit them on the floor of the Senate. I did that because once I discovered that I was at such variance with my colleagues in the committee as to the subject matter of the amendments I saw no sense in engaging in prolonged discussion in the committee.

I ask the chairman of the committee whether the statement I have just made is a fair one.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is a fair statement. The Senator from Oregon is very sincere in his point of view. Of course, I think he is in error, but I always allow to the other man the right to think I am in error.

I am enforced in my judgment by eminent military men in the person of Admiral Denfeld, General Vandenberg, and General Bradley; and when one has such support, he does not care to attempt to ride over any opposition.

But I think the Senator from Oregon has presented his side of the case very clearly and ably.

Mr. President, I hope we can reach a vote on the amendment very promptly.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, in order that he may specifically answer the Senator from Wisconsin. In the committee, in executive session, did not we specifically consider the question of a 2-year or a 4-year term, and the question of giving the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs a vote, and the question of including the proviso in order to make clear that the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs should have no authority over military commands?

Mr. TYDINGS. I remember that in executive session in the committee we considered the term of the Chairman, and I remember that in executive session in the committee we considered the question of giving the Chairman a vote. I think—although I am not sure about it—that we considered the other matter referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts. I remember that we were very active in regard to that matter. My impression is that in the committee, when the vote was taken, it was unanimous.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am satisfied that all these matters were considered in executive session.

However, it is also true that I made clear to the committee that I would press for action on my amendments when the bill was being considered on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I close by saying to my good friend the Senator from Maryland that he has set forth very well our differences of opinion.

In making an approach to this job, I think he and my other colleagues on the committee are much more impressed and influenced by the views of present-day military leaders as to what language should be included in the bill in order to accomplish what those present-day military leaders would like to accomplish in order to protect, as I see it, their present vested jurisdictional interests, than is the junior Senator from Oregon.

I am interested in building a unification bill in terms of future Generals X, Y, and Z and future Admirals A, B, and C, so to speak. I am willing to take the views of present-day military leaders, but my difference with the committee—and I say this not as criticism but as a statement of fact, as to the basis of my judgment—my difference with the committee is that I did not give, and I think for good reason, as much weight to the views of the present-day military leaders as did the other members of the committee. I think their testimony needed to be checked very carefully for special pleading. I gave much more weight to some of the great civilian leaders who testified before the committee, such as Bob Patterson and Mr. Eberstadt, as to various provisions of the bill, because when it comes to determining how unification should be brought about, I should much rather have the judgment of Patterson and Eberstadt than all the present-day military leaders combined. Patterson and Eberstadt had no basis for special pleading before the committee, but I submit that the military leaders had many selfish interests which I think must be taken into account in evaluating their judgment.

I close by saying that if this section of the bill is allowed to stand without my amendment, whether we will it or not, we are indirectly putting the Secretary of Defense in the position where for the first time it will be claimed that by law the members of the Joint Chiefs, except the Chairman, shall vote on the various issues presented for consideration to the Secretary of Defense. The moment they are put in a position where they formally vote, then I say the position of the Secretary of Defense is weakened, because immediately, if he does not agree with them, he is placed in such an attitude that he must veto their formal action. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, I submit, should be advisory Joint Chiefs of Staff, not voting Joint Chiefs of Staff, and if we are hereby to authorize voting, then by all means we ought to give a vote to the Chairman. Why take the vote away from him?

So, Mr. President, if we look at this from the standpoint of providing for a vote, the bill is wrong, because it discriminates unwarrantedly against the Chairman. If one looks at it from the standpoint of whether a voting procedure is being established, it will be seen that it is clearly established when the bill says the Chairman shall not vote. The conclusion is the others shall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to say to my good friend from Maryland that so far as my personal pleasure in regard to this particular amendment is concerned, it was not my expectation to ask for the yeas and nays, but a request has been made of me by some supporters of the amendment that they be given an opportunity to vote on it by yeas and nays, and I think we can speed it up if we have the roll called.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays, if the Senator from Oregon would like to have them.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MILLER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are absent on public business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained on official business.

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. MCGRATH] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], who is detained on official business. If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut would vote "nay" and the Senator from Maine would vote "yea."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. ECTON] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 63, as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF ASSAULT ON VICTOR G. REUTHER

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, there has been offered and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary Senate Resolution 120, requesting Federal assistance in the effort to bring about the apprehension of the assailants who attempted the assassination of Victor G. Reuther and, early last year, his brother Walter P. Reuther. A request has been made by the Detroit Common Council, the mayor of Detroit, and the Governor of Michigan for the immediate assistance of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas requests have been made by the Detroit Common Council, the mayor of Detroit, and the Governor of Michigan for the immediate assistance of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the apprehension of the assailants who attempted the assassination of Victor G. Reuther and, earlier of his brother, Walter P. Reuther: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that all law-enforcement facilities of the Department of Justice be made available immediately to investigate and cooperate with the local authorities in apprehending the criminals who attempted the assassination of Victor G. Reuther, and earlier of his brother, Walter P. Reuther.

In yesterday's session the junior Senator from Michigan made a statement on the floor of the Senate urging that the Federal Bureau of Investigation take immediate steps in this matter. Following that statement he talked to representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and was assured that full cooperation would be had. Further, a telegram was sent to the police commissioner of the city of Detroit and to the commissioner of the State police of Michigan urging that they seek the cooperation of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

I want to associate myself with the resolution which has been offered. I am informed that it has been referred to the Judiciary Committee. Since timely assistance by the FBI is of utmost importance, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the resolution be withdrawn from the Judiciary Committee and immediately agreed to, so that there can be no question that the Senate of the United States does ask immediate and full cooperation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I presented that resolution in behalf of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and myself. I should like at this time to have included as a sponsor of the resolution the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan. It is entirely fitting and proper that he should be a participant in the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. I request that I may be joined as a cosponsor of the resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not apprehend that there will be any lengthy debate on this question. We have been waiting all day to have action on one or more amendments to the unification bill, and I hope we shall not be sidetracked again. So I ask, in a spirit of cooperation, that there may not be any extended discussion of this question.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to know why a special exception is sought to be made in this particular matter.

Mr. FERGUSON. Coming from the State of Michigan and from the city of Detroit—and I may say that the senior Senator from Michigan joins me in my statement—I feel that in the investigation of this crime, following a similar crime committed on the brother of Victor Reuther, full cooperation should be had with the Department of Justice in connection with lending any facilities it may have for the solution of the case, in order that there may be no question that everything is being done to solve the crimes and to bring to justice and the full penalty of the law those who are responsible for these atrocious attempts at murder.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. Why is there any difference between this case and one in which a farmer is shot through a window, or someone is murdered in Georgia, for instance?

Mr. FERGUSON. To be frank with the Senator, the question of subversive activity is involved in connection with those who are opposing the Reuther brothers in the union, namely, Communist activity. The Department of Justice can help to solve the crime.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in response to the perfectly logical inquiry of the Senator from North Dakota, I should like to add this suggestion: Mr. Victor Reuther has only recently returned from Paris, where he was acting as a representative of the Government of the United States, one of the most effective representatives it has had in connection with the work of the ECA in anti-Communist labor circles of western Europe. I think the implication is obvious that there is a Federal responsibility, at least to the extent of determining that Mr. Reuther is not being sacrificed to his loyal services to his Government.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank my colleague very much for bringing that fact to the attention of the Senate, which fact has also been placed before the Department of Justice by the junior Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the resolution has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is now asking——

Mr. FERGUSON. I am asking unanimous consent that the order referring the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary be reconsidered, and that the resolution be immediately considered. I ask unanimous consent for both those actions.

Mr. LUCAS. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], is not present at the moment. Has the Senator discussed this with him?

Mr. FERGUSON. I have not been able to see the Senator from Nevada, and I did not want the matter to go over.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Michigan is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, is he not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I am a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not going to make any objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution, because I cannot think of a more dastardly crime than has been attempted upon the life of Victor Reuther. In view of what the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan has said, a matter with which I am familiar, it seems to me that there may be subversive elements involved in the attempted murder in Detroit of this loyal and patriotic American citizen, and if so I am inclined to believe that Federal intervention is permissible.

I agree with the Senator from North Dakota, however, that some may believe this would be setting a precedent, and I do not want the Senate or the country to feel that the FBI is going to move in on every attempted murder throughout the country. This case seems to me to be the exception to the rule, and I wholeheartedly agree to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan had reason to believe that the matter involved something more than an ordinary assault, that it involved a Federal question and an international question. That was the basis for this extraordinary request.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from Minnesota, whoever can answer it. When the resolution was read, I noted that it recited that certain State and local officials had requested this assistance, this intervention, by the Federal Government. Can the Senator state just what local or State officials have made that request?

Mr. FERGUSON. The president of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, in behalf of the city council and the mayor of the city of Detroit, together with the Governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Am I correct in my understanding that it is upon the strength of the fact that the chief executive of the State of Michigan, the chief executive of the city of Detroit, and the city council which was mentioned by the Senator, have recognized the need for the assistance of this Federal investigatory body, and have requested that assistance, that the distinguished Senator feels that Federal action would be appropriate?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill which is pending before the Senate has been estimated by Mr. Hoover, Mr. Forrestal, and others, as likely to save the Government about a billion dollars a year. That means about three or four million dollars a day. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, provided the debate is not to continue longer, but I feel that I owe it to my committee and to the country to save $3,000,000 a day by insisting that we either pass or reject the bill and the amendments. It is a vital matter. The expense of the Military Establishment is tremendous, and it has been said, as I have stated, that it will save us a billion dollars a year if we put the bill on the statute books. I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 170. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I merely desire to make an inquiry. I do not care to debate or discuss the matter at any length, but I want to know if there is any precedent for the action the Senate is about take.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan is not familiar with any precedent, but he thinks the facts warrant the action being taken.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am merely inquiring. It this a new venture we are undertaking? Are we establishing a precedent following which, if a murder is attempted anywhere in the country, the FBI might be called in?

Mr. FERGUSON. No. I would say this was no precedent, because of the facts of this particular case.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. I cannot help referring to the fact that in adopting this resolution, to which I have no objection, and for which I shall vote upon another theory, the Senate will be in the position of asking the executive department of the Government to do something which it has been asked to do for the Senate in connection with the investigation of appointees to the Atomic Energy Commission and has declined to comply, to the extent of the measure making that provision having been vetoed. In addition the veto was upheld by the Senate. I am agreeable to bringing up the resolution and to voting for it, but solely upon one understanding, namely, that the request of the Governor of the State of Michigan, the mayor of the great city of Detroit, and the executive body of that city, all show what is tantamount to an admitted insufficiency of the State and local law-enforcement agencies, and a request for help from the Federal Government, and from that agency of the Federal Government which is recognized as having the finest abilities in this field. I do call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the Senate in adopting this action will be asking, suggesting, and recommending that the executive department do something in this matter which the executive department has not been willing to do for the Senate.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I was not on the floor and did not hear all the resolution, but I think I understand what the purpose is. It is to have the FBI assist in the investigation of the crime which has been committed.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct, to cooperate with the law enforcement officers of Michigan.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator gives us the assurance, as I understand, that this request has come from the three officials whom he has named, including the Governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct; and I may ask the Senator from Minnesota, who offered the resolution, if that is not the fact.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am not questioning the Senator's statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall conclude immediately.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to cut anybody off, I am not trying to do that, but there is an amendment pending to the important measure now the unfinished business, which has been laid aside on the assumption this other matter would take only two or three minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator withhold his request for the regular order?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not care to delay, but I have some responsibility, and I want to know what is back of this, and I desire to be sure that the request comes from State officials.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I merely wish to make the comment that I do not assent to the hypothesis submitted by the Senator from Florida that this action is predicated upon a breakdown in the law-enforcement agencies of Detroit and the State of Michigan. It is predicated upon the fact that the Reuther case probably involves anti-Communist activities which stretch into Federal jurisdiction, and may have resulted from the recent services rendered by Mr. Victor Reuther in behalf of the Government of the United States. The sole purpose of the resolution is to ask the Federal Bureau of Investigation to inquire into these phases of the matter, to determine whether or not it is not possible for them, within their legitimate jurisdiction, to cooperate in helping run down those responsible for this unspeakable crime. I do not think we are conceding any break-down in our legal process, but I think we have a right to direct the Federal attention to the recently attempted murder of a Federal official who was engaged abroad in anti-Communist activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 120) was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION FOR STOPPAGE OF WORK ON CERTAIN COMBATANT VESSELS

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, there has been some controversy as to whether or not the Congress last year passed a bill authorizing the construction of the large flush-deck aircraft carrier. To settle that argument, and to present the evidence so everyone can see exactly what action was taken, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of Public Law 690, Eightieth Congress, which is very short, and also the report by the Committee on Armed Services on Senate bill 2400 authorizing the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels.

There being no objection, the law and the report (No. 1449, 80th Cong.) were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Public Law 690—80th Cong.]

[Chap. 521—2d sess.]

[S. 2400]

An act to authorize the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso of title III of the Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946, under the heading "Increase and replacement of naval vessels" (60 Stat. 227), in the discretion of the President shall not apply to the following vessels: Kentucky (BB66), Hawaii (CB3), Wagner (DE539), Vandiver (DE540), Castle (DD720), Woodrow R. Thompson (DD721), Lansdale (DD766), Seymour D. Owens (DD767), Hoel (DD768), Abner Read (DD769), Seaman (DD791), Unicorn (SS436), and Walrus (SS437).

Approved June 19, 1948.

The Committee on Armed Services, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2400) to authorize the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

Under a provision of the Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act of 1946 those combatant vessels which were more than 20 percent complete as of March 1, 1946, are required to be completed. The purpose of this bill is to provide the President with authority to remove from the mandatory operation of that act, which necessitates their completion, 13 named vessels consisting of 1 battleship, 1 cruiser, 2 destroyer escorts, 7 destroyers, and 2 submarines. The cessation of construction will suspend present obligations against the Treasury to an extent of over $300,000,000. It is intended that a portion of this sum will be used if appropriated to institute a new shipbuilding and conversion program of advance-design ships.

EXPLANATION AND JUSTIFICATION OF BILL

The enactment of this bill would have a dual effect both of which are considered highly desirable. First, it would enable the conservation, against any future emergency, of the ships included under its terms in a partially completed status. By suspending their construction at this time they will be of greater value in the future as they will be completed, if and when needed, with weapons not as yet fully perfected. The hulls of these vessels will be useful as stand-by units which may be readily adapted to such new techniques and armaments as may be originated or perfected in the future. An analogy may be found in cases of the Lexington and Saratoga. Both were originally laid down as battle cruisers, but could not be completed, as such, under the terms of the treaty limiting naval armaments, signed at Washington in 1922. They thereafter emerged as aircraft carriers and proved themselves to be useful and active components of the Pacific Fleet during World War II.

The second and very important function of the bill is to permit, by the deferment of construction of the 13 vessels affected, the employment of funds, which are otherwise obligated to complete them, for the construction and conversion of prototype ships which will be required to keep our Navy abreast of the trends of ship construction and naval operations currently being developed. Enactment of this bill will have no effect on the authorized tonnage strength of naval vessels and new construction of prototype ships is within the presently existing authorized tonnage of combatant vessels.

Included in the contemplated program of new construction is one new, large, flush-deck carrier, the size of which is determined by the dimensions and characteristics of the advance-type aircraft which it is designed to carry. It is not intended that units of this type will engage in strategic or saturation-type bombing attacks, but will be employed in naval functions such as controlling the air over the sea and over hostile beaches, ports, and coastal regions by destroying or neutralizing targets which would otherwise jeopardize the success of naval support for our armed forces. The new-type carrier will assist the Navy in maintaining surveillance over the earth's large expanse of water and insure the uninterrupted use of the sea lanes which are vital to the continued existence of the United States.

By letter to the chairman, Committee on Armed Services, the Secretary of the Navy requested enactment of this bill, and his letter dated March 25, 1948, is appended hereto and is made a part of this report.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, March 25, 1948.

Hon. CHAN GURNEY,
Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: There is transmitted herewith a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the President, in his discretion, to permit the stoppage of work on certain combatant vessels.

A proviso of the Second Supplemental Surplus Appropriation Rescission Act, 1946, under the heading "Increase and replacement of naval vessels," provides that combatant vessels under construction on March 1, 1946, whose percentage of construction exceeded 20 percent on that date will be completed. The proposed legislation would authorize the President, in his discretion, to except from that proviso the following vessels: Kentucky (BB66); Hawaii (CB3); Wagner (DE539); Vandiver (DE540); Castle (DD720); Woodrow R. Thompson (DD721); Lansdale (DD766); Seymour D. Owens (DD767); Hoel (DD768); Abner Read (DD769); Seamen (DD791); Unicorn (SS436); and Walrus (SS437).

If the proposed legislation is enacted, work will not be resumed on these vessels and they will be retained in their present condition for eventual completion if a future emergency requires. Thus, the present investment in these vessels will be preserved against a future emergency. Although no funds are currently being expended on the building of these vessels, enactment of the proposed legislation will result in removing future obligations of funds against the United States Treasury in excess of $300,000,000. This will allow the obligation of funds for the construction and conversion of other vessels pursuant to the modified Navy shipbuilding program without increasing eventual Treasury withdrawals. The vessels embraced in the modified Navy shipbuilding program are considered essential in order that the Navy may keep pace with modern ship construction.

Enactment of the proposed legislation will not result in any additional cost to the Government.

For the foregoing reasons, the Navy Department recommends enactment of the proposed bill.

An identical report has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives this date.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress for its consideration as the enactment thereof would not be in conflict with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

W. JOHN KENNEY,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1843) to convert the National Military Establishment into an executive department of the Government, to be known as the Department of Defense; to provide the Secretary of Defense with appropriate responsibility and authority, and with civilian and military assistance adequate to fulfill the enlarged responsibility; and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon, as I understand, has another amendment he wants to offer at this time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I now call up the amendment No. 3, offered by me on behalf of myself and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, lines 11 and 12, it is proposed to strike out "to consist of not to exceed 210 officers and."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may make an announcement?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator from Maryland respecting the importance of the bill. In view of the fact that so much time has been taken away from its consideration this afternoon by other matters, I hope Members of the Senate will stay until action on the bill is completed today.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for not more than two minutes, I should like to say a word about my third amendment, because I think it is an amendment which the individual Senators will have great difficulty in justifying a vote against, in view of what the chairman of the committee has already said in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD respecting the amendment. I refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 24, page 6715, to a statement occurring in a colloquy between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]:

Mr. LODGE. In order to perfect the RECORD I point out that on yesterday, in response to a question from me, the senior Senator from Maryland, chairman of the committee, said, on page 6631 of the RECORD:

"I think the Senator from Massachusetts and I see eye to eye on that proposition."

Later, on the same page, he said:

"I should be glad to have the Senator offer an amendment to strike out the 210. While I would feel in duty bound not to support the amendment, I would not be displeased—and I hope I am not equivocating—if it were adopted."

Mr. President, the chairman of our committee is a very delightful person and very loyal to his chairmanship duties. However, in the language of the chairman of the committee, which I have just quoted, I think he admitted that the amendment is a good one. As far as I can see there is absolutely no justification for putting this type of restriction upon the Joint Chiefs of Staff. They ought to have whatever staff they need to do the job. Senators know that the amendment does not propose to create new officers. All that is done is to take officers, as the language provides, from the other three branches of the services in such numbers as the Joint Chiefs of Staff—and each service is represented on the Joint Chiefs—and the Secretary of Defense decide they need to do the work of the Joint Chiefs.

Why, I ask, in the name of common sense, can we justify writing into the bill the arbitrary restriction of 210? Maybe under some circumstances they may need 500 or 300 or 211. But we say quite arbitrarily, "We limit you to 210." What I think my good friend from Maryland ought to do is to offer to take the amendment to conference; but if he does not want to do that, and because of his loyalty to what he thinks is a commitment which he owes the full committee, I think we ought to vote to adopt the amendment. Even the chairman of the committee says to the Senator from Massachusetts he would not be displeased with its adoption. With that admission on the part of the chairman, I think I have won my case, if Senators want to vote on the merits.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall take only a minute to give the Senate the other side of the argument respecting the amendment. The old law provided for only 100 members of the Joint Staff. This proposal is to increase that number to 210. To be perfectly frank, the chairman of the committee, who is now speaking, said he believed there should be no top or bottom limit when the committee considered the provision. However, a majority of the committee took the opposite view. They felt that to have no checks on the number of officers who served on the Joint Staff was inviting extravagance in that particular field. Therefore, the committee, after due consideration, voted for 210 members of the Joint Staff rather than for the 100 provided for in the old law.

I may say that the Joint Chiefs were not displeased with the number provided in the 210 quota. The chairman of the committee himself had sufficient confidence in the Joint Chiefs to feel that if no limitation had been provided the committee would have acted more wisely; but, as I say, I was in the minority, and I am loyally supporting the committee's view because I do not consider this a transcendentally important amendment. Its motivation is good. The Senate has heard both sides of the question, and I hope the Senate will soon vote.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the action of the Senate. I think it might be well to call the attention of the Senate to page 118 of the hearings on the bill, at the bottom of the page:

Senator KNOWLAND. I can see the need of additional help, but can't you put some other reasonable ceiling on it so that the thing is not left completely wide open?

Admiral DENFELD. We talked that over yesterday with General Gruenther, who is the director of the Joint Staff, and he said he would have no objection to a limitation on it. The situation has been such in the past year that we have had so many papers presented to us, that the present staff has not had sufficient people in it to perform the duties. They have been working nights, Saturdays, and Sundays, and we really have to have less for them to do or give them more help. General Gruenther felt a limit of 250 would be a reasonable number. He did not think he would use that, but he certainly needs more than 100.

I merely wish to point out that there is some danger in any Government agency—and the Army is not entirely free from that fault—of empire building, if we leave the situation wide open. I think it is fair to say that as a member of the committee I had the very strong impression from the Joint Chiefs when they appeared before us that 200 would be a satisfactory number.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the Senator from California is correct in saying that perhaps while the Joint Chiefs felt competent to handle the matter without a ceiling being fixed, they were well satisfied with the 210 figure.

Now, as we have all points represented, I hope we can obtain a decision on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 3 offered by the Senator from Oregon for himself and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I offer my amendment No. 4, for the purpose of future reference, I assume. It is another good amendment. I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, line 4, before the comma, it is proposed to insert "and shall have power of decision."

On page 11, line 11, beginning with the word "The," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

It shall be the duty of the Board, under the direction of the Secretary of Defense and in support of strategic and logistic plans prepared by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in explanation of this amendment I wish merely to read a short paragraph or two from the statement which I made on the floor of the Senate when I first submitted the amendment. By way of introduction to that statement, let me say that if it is economy we want, then by all means we cannot vote against this amendment. This is an amendment which comes to grips with the procurement problem and the waste involved in the present procurement practices.

My expert witness in support of the amendment is none other than Mr. Eberstadt himself. I should like to have the Senate consider these statements in support of my amendment:

Mr. President, my fourth amendment is with respect to the Munitions Board. I feel that its operations are seriously hampered by the fact that the Chairman does not have the power of decision. This was first brought to my attention by Mr. Eberstadt, and I agree with him. The duties of the Munitions Board are spread across a very broad field through nine different categories. The Chairman of the Board is essentially the Under Secretary of Defense for Procurement, a field in which I feel a far greater degree of centralized authority is needed. A glance at the duties of the Board, which begin near the bottom of page 11 and run to the top of page 13 of the bill, shows that the nerve center of our procurement and industrial planning for war, as well as peace, is located in the Munitions Board. Yet this body has no responsible head. Its responsibility is diffused, and this diffusion is complicated by the fact that the other members of the Board are Under Secretaries or Assistant Secretaries who serve on the Board as a sort of additional duty. Further, their tenure of office is generally not very long. This combination produces a very loose organization, which is charged with staggering responsibilities. Neither the secretary nor the president has a single individual to whom he can look to assume the full responsibility for sound procurement or realistic industrial planning. I therefore propose that this glaring weakness in the present structure be strengthened by fixing this responsibility where it obviously belongs—in the Chairman of the Munitions Board as an agent of the Secretary of Defense.

I close my explanation and argument by saying that if it is economy we want, if we are trying to eliminate the glaring wastes which characterize so much of our procurement, then in the name of efficiency and economy we must give to the Chairman of the Munitions Board the power of decision, so that he can say to the various branches of the service, "You cannot continue, unless you can get higher approval, certain practices which I find result in waste in connection with procurement."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon is correct in presenting his support of this amendment. Only one substantial witness appeared in support of it. He was a very good witness. However, the commitee gave it due weight in connection with the other testimony, and at the time we acted on it in the committee—I think I am accurate in this statement—the vote was unanimous for the language in the bill as it stands today, after giving all phases of the question due consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that this amendment is really contradictory of the theory of the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. This amendment would allow the Chairman to say "Yes" or "No."

Mr. LUCAS. The theory of the bill is to take the power away from the Munitions Board and lodge it in the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is a fair observation. The philosophy is generally along that line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4, offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment numbered 5, which is the amendment which proposes to change the titles in the bill as it now stands, from Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Air Force, to Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 7, beginning with the colon, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "Defense" in line 11.

On page 6, line 3, after the first semicolon, it is proposed to insert "Under Secretaries;".

On page 3, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries of" and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries of Defense for."

On page 6, between lines 19 and 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

(b) There shall be in the Department of Defense an Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, an Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and an Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force, who shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The said Under Secretaries, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Defense, shall administer the military departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, respectively, and shall perform such other duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

On page 6, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "(b)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

On page 7, lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to strike out "the Secretary of the Army; the Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of the Air Force;" and insert in lieu thereof "the Under Secretary of Defense for the Army; the Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy; the Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force;".

On page 11, line 4, beginning with the word "and," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "departments" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and a representative of each of the three military departments, to be designated in each case by the Under Secretaries of Defense for their respective departments."

On page 15, lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries of Military Departments," and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries of Defense,".

On page 16, beginning with line 1, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(c) The Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, the Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and the Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force shall each receive compensation at the rate of $14,000 a year.

On page 19, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries," and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries,".

On page 19, lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries of" and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries for."

On page 19, lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to strike out "either the Secretary, the Under Secretary, or an Assistant Secretary of" and insert in lieu thereof "the Under Secretaries for."

On page 19, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of" and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretary for."

On page 24, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries of" and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries for."

On page 26, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "Secretaries of, the departments" and insert in lieu thereof "Under Secretaries for, the military departments."

On page 32, line 7, beginning with the comma, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "Senate" in line 11.

On page 32, line 24, beginning with the word "The" it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the period in line 7 on page 33.

On page 33, beginning with line 21, it is proposed to strike out all down to the end of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(g) The offices of Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, Secretary of the Air Force, Under Secretary of the Army, Under Secretary of the Navy, Under Secretary of the Air Force, Assistant Secretaries of the Army, Assistant Secretaries of the Navy, and Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force are hereby abolished and the functions, powers, and duties vested in and imposed upon such officers shall hereafter be vested in and imposed upon the Secretary of Defense, who may delegate the same to the Deputy Secretary of Defense or to such of the Under Secretaries of Defense as he may designate.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not repeat the argument which I made the other day at some length on the floor of the Senate in support of this proposal. However, I invite the attention of the Senate to page 97 of the printed record of our hearings, to the colloquy which took place between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] and Mr. Symington. I quote only that part of the testimony in which Mr. Symington spoke, as follows:

Personally, I have always felt that it would be wiser in order to clarify this question of responsibility and authority to make the three heads of the three services Under Secretaries, although I fully support this bill as written, because now I feel that the most important thing to establish in our building is the question of who reports to whom and who has the authority about what and how far the authority goes.

I take merely a second to pay a deserved tribute to Mr. Symington, because I think he is one of the great public servants of our Government. He is a man who, I have always found, meets the test as to whether or not one's word is his bond. I think Mr. Symington is trying to do a conscientious job in an endeavor to bring about true unification. The Secretary of the Air Force testifies that he believes, and always has believed, that these particular positions should be that of Under Secretaries.

As I stated the other day, I believe that the titles which these men hold have a very direct effect on whether or not we are to have true unification, because around titles there is a tendency in government to develop what I call government by implication. Men take on implied powers because of the titles they hold. But if we establish the titles of Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force, there is no question at all as to the officer to whom they owe their allegiance so far as the chain of command and authority is concerned.

Mr. President, on this amendment I should like to have the courtesy of the yeas and nays, because this amendment, along with my first amendment, I consider to be the two basic amendments which I have offered in the interest of true unification. They represent the two basic differences which developed within the committee with regard to the type of unification which we are to have. In my judgment, without my amendment No. 1 and my amendment No. 5 we cannot have true unification. We cannot get it under the provisions of the bill as it stands. All we shall be doing is passing a bill today which will have to come back to the floor of the Senate 2 or 3 years from now, and we shall have to retrace our steps and adopt some of the principles for which I have been fighting in order to get true unification.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before we have the yeas and nays I should like to make a brief statement. I should like to make a fuller argument, but I shall not do so.

Many of those who originally advocated the amendment which the Senator from Oregon now offers have changed to the committee language, for this very obvious reason: The Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Air Force receives $14,000 a year. He administers a four-, five-, or six-billion-dollar business. The only way we can induce men to endure the criticisms and the slings and arrows which go with such a great controversial job, involving the spending of so much money, is at least to make the job attractive for them in as many respects as possible.

It was the final opinion of Mr. Hoover and others that if we were to retain the titles Secretary of the Army, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Air Force, rather than Under Secretary of Defense for the Army, Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for the Air Force, in the public mind the idea that it is a position of prestige would find lodgement. Men might be induced, in a close decision, to take such a job, when otherwise they might be reluctant to surrender great business interests, perhaps, for the mere title of Under Secretary. It made a deep impression on the committee, and inasmuch as this is largely a question of nomenclature, I hope and believe that the national defense will be greatly augmented if the bill is passed in the form in which it is now before the Senate.

I have no objection to having a yea-and-nay vote taken on this question; but I say to the Senator from Oregon that a number of Senators have assumed that there would not be another yea-and-nay vote today. However, that is no reason why we should not have such a vote, of course.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is not this matter solely one of name? The power and authority of the various persons concerned will not be changed at all by the use of the name Secretary or Under Secretary, will they?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in the committee I originally offered the suggestion that we call the heads of these departments Under Secretary of Defense for Army, Under Secretary of Defense for Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for Air. However, after listening to all the witnesses, we reached the conclusion that the major factor was the prestige of the office, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] has pointed out. So I surrendered my position, believing that I was wrong, and that those who advocated the language now contained in the bill were correct. I still believe that was the proper solution.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I agree that we can do a great deal for the morale of the present incumbents, and even for the men who will later serve in these positions, if we retain the titles now stated in the bill. I think it is also important for them to have the titles now provided in the bill when they deal with officers of foreign nations, for in such event it is important that our officials have titles which are clearly understood by foreign officers.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is true.

Mr. FERGUSON. I believe it is vital that we retain in the bill the titles now set forth in it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Maryland: Did not the committee, in considering the question of nomenclature, deliberately vote to create the title of Deputy Secretary of Defense, so as to have such a Deputy Secretary of Defense under the Secretary of Defense, and superior in salary and authority to the Secretary for Army, Secretary for Navy, and Secretary for Air?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true, so that the Deputy Secretary of Defense will outrank the Secretary for Army, the Secretary for Navy, and the Secretary for Air.

The chain of command will be as follows: First, the Secretary of Defense; next, the Deputy Secretary of Defense; and then the three Secretaries for Army, Navy, and Air, under the Deputy Secretary of Defense.

So we are really dealing with nomenclature, rather than with a chain of command.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That title was created in order to leave the Secretaries for Army, Navy, and Air Force with those titles, for the reasons the Senator from Maryland has stated—namely, prestige, salary, and authority. Is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FLANDERS and Mr. MORSE addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that there has been on the Senate Calendar for many weeks a bill which would have made it possible to reward the Under Secretaries by appropriate salaries, instead of by empty nomenclature. I take this opportunity to make a plea to the leadership of the Senate to have the "top pay bill" taken up by the Senate at a very early date.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield now to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to reply briefly to my good friends the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Michigan.

I simply refuse to adopt the premise that we must buy patriotic service for this country by the giving of titles. I think part of the purpose of the titles which have been advocated by the proponents of the bill has been brought out by the comments of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], namely, that it is desired to give such persons those titles because of the psychological or prestige factors which apparently the Senator from Michigan thinks will be involved in the relationships of such persons with foreign officials. But by that statement, Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan admits the very weakness which I am trying to correct in this entire matter of unification. I say the relationships the Senator from Michigan is talking about should be carried on by the Secretary of Defense, if we are going to have unification. It is right around these titles and such relationships as the Senator from Michigan is talking about that we have men year by year engaging in what I called the other day "government by implication." I warn against that in my defense of this amendment. I wish to strip the holders of those offices of just the type of so-called tinsel and title which I think encourage their gradually usurping jurisdiction and power through the prestige of their offices.

Mr. President, if we are going to have unification, we shall have to have it through the office of the Secretary of Defense; and the chain of command, up to that office, should be through the offices of Under Secretary of Defense for the Navy, Army, and Air Force, not through a Secretary of the Navy, a Secretary of the Army, and a Secretary of the Air Force. The last-mentioned titles, if used, imply some autonomy of jurisdiction, some autonomy of independent power, which I wish to take away from them, because I thought that was what we were trying to do by means of unification.

Unless we are willing to take that step, I say all we are doing is, not setting up unification, but continuing a four-headed monstrosity down in the Pentagon Building, so far as the administration of our Military Establishment is concerned. If we do that it will be only a matter of time before there will be sitting before the Armed Services Committee, as a witness, some other official such as Bob Patterson, who testified at the hearings this year that he would hate to have to guess the billions and billions of dollars that were wasted in the last war because of a two-headed administration of our Military Establishment.

Mr. President, let us make up our minds either to have unification through one office of Secretary of Defense, with Under Secretaries of Defense serving under him, or to agree to surrender to the request of the military for the very title which they have used so unsuccessfully in building up by the accretion of implied power their little island empires in the Pentagon Building. The titles of Secretary of Army, Secretary of Navy, and Secretary of Air Force, if continued, will create the same sort of jurisdictional strife that has characterized the Military Establishment ever since we passed the unification bill in 1947.

Without my amendment, we shall continue, in my judgment, exactly the same sort of jurisdictional struggle which I think wrecked the unification bill of 1947.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished and able Senator from Maryland one question, after listening to the able Senator from Oregon: Am I correct in my understanding that this amendment would not give to the Secretary of Defense any more power than he has under the bill as presently written?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, it is just a question of title or name, so to speak—whether he is to be an Under Secretary or whether we shall continue the titles of "Secretary of War," "Secretary of Navy," and "Secretary of the Air Force"; is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. Hoover and his colleagues on the Commission felt so strongly about this matter that they joined in a very strongly worded statement advocating the retention of the old titles.

Mr. LUCAS. The amendment specifically states, does it not, that the administration shall be under the authority and direction and control of the Under Secretary of Defense for Army, Under Secretary of Defense for Navy, and Under Secretary of Defense for Air?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the able Senator from Oregon has attempted to imply that I had in mind the thought that patriotism could be purchased by the awarding of a certain title. Let me say that was the farthest thing from my thought in that connection.

I believe that the title which is established is of importance, although no more authority is granted thereby. It is clear from the wording of the bill that the Secretary of Defense will have the ultimate power and the power of decision. However, I think it is rather awkward to call a man "Under Secretary of Defense for Air Force." That is a long title. I think it is much better to use a shorter title. A shorter title would be a considerable convenience to such a person when he signs his name or when he uses his title in conversation. I think it would be most appropriate to permit such a person to have a considerably shorter title which also would convey to others his real position.

We have an Under Secretary of Defense and we have a Secretary of Defense. If we have no Secretary of the Navy, there could not very well be an Under Secretary of Defense for Navy, in name.

So I think it will be most appropriate to use the titles now set forth in the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether, in view of the fact that he states that savings of a billion or so dollars could be made by unification, he would submit for the RECORD an estimate of the precise sources from which it is believed these savings could be made, and the total savings to be effected. I know that this is quite a request to make and expect immediate compliance, but I wonder whether upon consulting with the advocates of unification such a detailed statement might be furnished.

Mr. MORSE. I may say to the Senator from Illinois I should be glad to have a compilation prepared. There is a great deal of evidence already in the RECORD of the hearings as to the savings that can be made. The former President of the United States, Mr. Herbert Hoover, testified in regard to an estimated savings of some billion and a half dollars, much of which he thought could be accomplished by the recommendation of the Hoover Commission in regard to the perfected accounting system which has been written into the bill. I say to the Senator from Illinois I think many, many million dollars, running into at least two billions, can be saved by a simplification of the whole procurement system and an elimination of the duplication and waste that now characterizes procurement. But this afternoon the Senate has rejected an amendment which, in my judgment, would have made possible such savings. I do not think it is possible now, so long as we have a Munitions Board with a chairman who has been divested of any effective power of final decision over procurement. But I shall do my very best to have a bill of particulars prepared and inserted in the RECORD as soon as it is possible, answering the inquiry of the Senator.

I may say to my friend from Maryland in regard to the yea and nay vote, I have not asked for very many yea and nay votes. I told a good many Senators that I expected to ask for the yeas and nays on my fifth amendment, and I hope I can have the courtesy of obtaining the yeas and nays. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senators from Idaho [Mr. MILLER and Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

So Mr. MORSE's amendment No. 5 was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I was in my office in conference with some persons from my State, and was unable to return to the floor before the vote was concluded on the last Morse amendment. If I had been present I would have voted "nay."

I ask unanimous consent that this announcement may appear immediately after the vote on the Morse amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I have one more amendment. By reading it I can, at the same time, explain it.

It is proposed to insert a new subsection on page 6, to be entitled "(e)", following the word "designate" in line 2. The amendment contains most of the provisions of a bill which the chairman of the committee previously introduced in the Senate, known as Senate bill 1740.

If we are to unify the services, now is the time to take action on the proposal.

The amendment is as follows:

(e) Under such regulations as he shall prescribe, the Secretary of Defense, with the approval of the President, is authorized to transfer between the armed services, within the authorized commissioned strength of the respective services, officers holding permanent commissions therein—

Note the proviso—

Provided, That no officer shall be transferred without (1) his consent, (2) the consent of the service from which the transfer is to be made, and (3) the consent of the service to which the transfer is to be made.

It includes the consent of the officer, the consent of the service from which he is to be transferred, and the consent of the service to which he is transferred. I read further:

Officers transferred hereunder shall be appointed by the President alone to such commissioned grade, permanent and temporary, in the armed service to which transferred and be given such place on the applicable promotion list of such service as he shall determine: Provided, That Federal service previously rendered shall be credited for promotion, seniority, and retirement purposes as if served in the armed service to which transferred according to the provisions of law governing promotion, seniority, and retirement therein: Provided further, That no officer upon a transfer to any service from which previously transferred shall be given a higher grade, or place on the applicable promotion list, than that which he could have attained had he remained continuously in the service to which retransferred.

Any officer transferred hereunder shall be credited with the unused leave to which he was entitled at the time of transfer.

Mr. President, if it is efficiency we want, if it is the elimination of waste we want, this power to transfer officers within the services by the Secretary of Defense, subject to the specific approval of the President and subject to the protection that the officer must consent, the service from which he is transferred must consent, and the service to which he is transferred must consent, subject to the further conditions that all rights of promotion, seniority, and retirement shall be protected, is one of the best steps in the interest of efficiency that can be taken. It will improve the bill very much.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The committee has had no opportunity to consider the amendment fully. I have listened to the Senator from Oregon, and inasmuch as it will be reviewed in the event it is agreed to and goes to the House, unless some of my colleagues on the committee think otherwise, I am not disposed to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments on behalf of myself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. They have already been printed and are on the desks of Senators. They are numbered 6 and 7.

I now call up amendment No. 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 205 (e) of the National Security Act of 1947 as amended (1) by inserting in the first sentence thereof, immediately after the word "aviation", a comma and the following: "including tactical close-support aviation," and (2) by inserting in the third sentence thereof, immediately after the words "land forces", a comma and the following: "including organic tactical close-support aviation."

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, in support of this amendment I should like to say that I have been reading about the functions and equipment of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, with particular reference to the Air Forces. The wording with regard to the air equipment of the Navy, which is to be found in the Organic Act under section 206 (b), is in the first sentence of (b). It reads as follows:

In general, the United States Navy, within the Department of the Navy, shall include naval combat and service forces and such aviation as may be organic therein.

I invite attention to the phrase relating to aviation.

The second sentence of section 206 (c), with regard to the Marine Corps, reads as follows:

The Marine Corps shall be organized, trained, and equipped to provide fleet marine forces of combined arms, together with supporting air components.

Provision seems to be made in the wording for the tactical air equipment and operations in support of the Navy and the Marine Corps. However, when we come to what is said with relation to the Army, which is to be found on page 7, section 205 (e), we read this:

In general the United States Army, within the Department of the Army, shall include land, combat, and service forces and such aviation and water transport as may be organic therein.

I had at first thought, on reading that provision, that it was merely vague language, but, on consultation with the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, if I have correctly understood his explanation, it was not by vagueness of statement, but by direct intent, that the aviation attached to the Army seems to be confined to transport. That, it seems to me, is definitely wrong. I cannot imagine that under active service conditions it will be found desirable—it may even be found tragic, and there is past history to support that view—that the Army is to make application to the Air Force for such things, in one extreme instance, as spotting artillery, or, in other cases, for aerial barrage for advancing forces. These things require such an intimate correlation between the aircraft and the land forces that there might easily be tragic results if the Army had to apply to the Air Force for them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think that tactical close support of aviation should be organic now?

Mr. FLANDERS. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think the experience we had with tactical close support of aviation in World War II was unsuccessful?

Mr. FLANDERS. I have heard reports of incidents in various places that were something worse than annoying. Of course, we all have more information on the tragic lack of cooperation between the British Air Force and the British Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. FLANDERS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. It so happens that I was in a number of conferences that had to do with tactical close support, and it seemed to me that the arrangement worked out very well. Of course, I am only one man, and it is an extremely rapidly changing art. The doctrine which is satisfactory for one time may be a very different one 3 weeks later. I should like to know what authority the Senator has for his statement that tactical close support should be organic in the Army. Has he any Army authority that backs him up in that opinion?

Mr. FLANDERS. I have no Army authority, but as a layman it would seem to me just common sense that our Air Force should be a strategic force. It does not seem to me at all reasonable that it is necessary to make connections with an entirely separate force, under separate command, for close tactical support.

Mr. LODGE. On the call of what unit does the Senator think tactical close-support aviation should be assigned a mission?

Mr. FLANDERS. I have come to my own judgment on that matter.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator what his judgment is.

Mr. FLANDERS. I have just explained that it seemed to me completely unreasonable to depend upon a completely separate force for the tactical support of ground operations.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator, on the call of what unit does the Senator think tactical close-support aviation should be assigned a mission? Would he have it at the level of the division, or the corps, or the Army group?

Mr. FLANDERS. I would have it at least under the command of the Army officer in charge of the operations, depending on the size of the operations.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator would put tactical close support at the call of a division commander?

Mr. FLANDERS. If the division commander were carrying out a detached operation.

Mr. LODGE. Would he put it under a corps commander in a large-scale operation?

Mr. FLANDERS. I would at least have it under the command of the responsible Army officer in charge of the entire operation.

Mr. LODGE. That would be General Eisenhower, then.

Mr. FLANDERS. General Eisenhower certainly would be responsible for the provision of the tactical close support aviation force for any of the operations under his charge.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, tactical close support was under the supervision of General Eisenhower in the last war, and, frankly, I never heard that it was not a successful arrangement.

Mr. FLANDERS. The arrangement made, of course, at the time, for instance, of the invasion, was that of a close coordination of the Army, the Air, and Naval forces, but it does not seem to be reasonable that even General Eisenhower should have to apply to a distinct branch of the service for that close tactical support.

Mr. LODGE. I can just assure the Senator that in the southern France operation, as I recall where the Twelfth Tactical Air Force was operating, it worked in cooperation with the headquarters which subsequently became the Sixth Army group.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we on this side would like to hear a little of this conversation.

Mr. LODGE. I have never heard it said, until today—and I have been in close touch with many of those involved—that the system which had been worked out in the hot fires of experience, a system which was not legislated by Congress, but was worked out on the spot, in the hot fires of experience, was not a satisfactory system. If the Senator proposes the idea that it is not satisfactory, I wish he would document it with the statements of military leaders who agree with him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President——

Mr. FLANDERS. Did the Senator from Maryland want me to yield to him?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. FLANDERS. Does the Senator from Illinois desire to have me yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes; very briefly.

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wonder if I may ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this satisfactory degree of tactical air support which he says occurred in the European theater was not due to the fact that we had the principle of unified command in that theater, which of necessity bound the various arms together, and if the purpose of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont is not to make certain that the ground forces have a sufficient number of planes to give them support as they are advancing, so that they do not have to go as beggars to other branches of the service to get the support from the air which they need, and which at times, in the absence of such provision, causes very severe casualties.

Mr. FLANDERS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Illinois what I had not said, but what is perfectly obvious, that between the time of the operations in the European theater and the present time the Air Force has become a completely separate arm, so that the conditions are not now the same as they were during that period.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. For all practical purposes, the Air Force was completely separate from the Ground Army all through that period, and when we think of the specialized equipment, the different techniques, the entirely separate system of supply required, the entirely different system of signal communications, and everything else, it seems to me almost a fantasy to think of making tactical air support organic in the Ground Army, and I have never heard of any ground soldier who advocated it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wonder if the Senator from Illinois will yield so that I may ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that the concept of the Air Force is directed almost entirely to strategic bombing, and that in the disposition of the forces which they plan for their 70 groups, the almost overwhelming proportion of the planes are to be long-distance bombers, and that there is very little emphasis on the support of ground troops?

Mr. LODGE. That is not at all my impression. As I say, I was only one man, and I had only one man's view——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am referring to present plans.

Mr. LODGE. During the war close tactical support was an enormously important part of the Air Force's function. I remember General Saville and General

Joe Cannon, those two names come to me, two very able men in the Air Force. They handled tactical close support in cooperation with the ground commander. It was something of which a ground-force officer could not understand the details. Today we have General Quesada, who is certainly one of the distinguished men in the Air Force, who has wholly dedicated himself to tactical close support. With respect to what the Senator from Illinois said about the Air Force devoting its planes completely to strategic bombing——

Mr. DOUGLAS. I said predominantly.

Mr. LODGE. I have never heard that suggested.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, as a member of the general public, it would seem to me that almost the entire publicity of the Air Force has been given to strategic bombing. It would also seem to me that the requests it has made to Congress for appropriations have almost entirely related to strategic bombing. It seems to me that that is the field they have marked out for themselves, and that they will give such attention as they have left to spare to the question of tactical support of the land forces.

I am merely referring to the publicity which comes out of that very active and very valuable organization which will have to carry a heavier load in any future war than it has ever carried in the past, and which is magnificently doing the job so far as the strategic phases of the Air Force are concerned.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have just returned to the Senate Chamber, having been absent for about 10 minutes. I wonder if the Senator has as yet touched upon what has very recently occurred, which sheds some light upon the concentration upon tactical bombing and at the expense of strategic bombing. I refer to the article of Hanson Baldwin in the New York Times about 3 days ago in which he pointed out that the Air Force is canceling, at a cancellation cost of between $60,000,000 and $120,000,000, I believe, a great mass of the planes I think having to do with tactical bombing, and concentrating almost exclusively upon strategic bombers, the B–36's.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. I think it gives more point and emphasis to the necessity of assuring the land forces that they have within their control not merely on the field, but in the long processes of developing the equipment and developing tactics, air matériel, and air personnel who are devoted to tactical support.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I think we can all assume that the things which worked out satisfactorily and to the general approval of everyone in World War II are not going to be thrown overboard. In the ETO I understand there was the strategical air force, which was based in England, and which never left England, and which took on the strategic targets in Germany and Austria. Their missions, I understand, were assigned to them by SHAEF, General Eisenhower's headquarters. I have never heard anyone object to that or anyone say that they should be organic in any different way than they were organic.

Then we had the tactical air force. It is my understanding that the tactical air force was subject to the assignment of missions to General Montgomery in the north, General Bradley in the center, and General Devers in the south. At General Devers' headquarters there was a major general of the Air Force and a brigadier general. They lived there. Wherever General Devers' force was they were there. There was a complete fluidity and flexibility of control, and the tactical air force was used wherever General Devers thought it ought to be used. But it was not organic in the Army corps. That is an entirely different thing. I ask the Senator from Vermont whether he thinks it is a mistake to have tactical base support aviation subject to the call of the Army commander, or whether he thinks it should be subject to the field army commander or the corps commander, or whether he thinks such things should be written into the statute?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, may I ask a question?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps if I might be permitted to ask my question——

Mr. LODGE. My question is a fairly difficult one. I should like to receive an answer to it first.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he uses certain terms with respect to which I have not had the military experience to assign definitions. So I would be blundering if I tried to answer his question specifically. What I do say is that we want to assure ourselves that the Army has at its command planes, equipment, and men who have devoted themselves intensely to the questions of tactical support, and they should be under the direction and at the disposal of the Army, and I seriously doubt whether that is now taking place.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. We are discussing something which is very much in the field of scientific leadership in the higher stratum of military technique and comprehension. I have mentioned this matter now under discussion a time or two to General Bradley. I hope I am not misquoting him when I say that he is not worried at present by the lack of liaison and cooperation between the Air Force and the Army in the field of tactical support for ground troops. It strikes me that unless this gentleman is somewhat concerned about it, we generals and admirals and marshals on the floor might with some complacency feel a little relieved.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. I ask the Senator from Maryland to pay particular attention to this, if he will. I may say that I think the Senator from Maryland has done a relatively good job on this bill which he has brought to the floor. I believe I am correct in saying that the present rule is that the Army land troops will have control over no airplanes which operate with more than 200 horsepower.

In that connection, I will say that we were at Quantico, Va., about 2 weeks ago. We saw the Marine Corps experiment with putting on a demonstration of new landing technique with helicopters, not only taking off and landing on the water, but taking off and making landings from one hill to the other moving the troops back over the theoretical enemy supply lines.

When I came back I talked to a number of Army line officers, men who took an active part in fighting the last war, and those men are very much disturbed by this: First, the fact that the line can conduct no experiments and has nothing to do with an airplane which has more than 200 horsepower. Second, that the Air Corps, consisting of some excellent and outstanding flyers, apparently has no concept whatsoever of the fact that the next war may again require some ground troops.

As I said, these men in the Army are disturbed, even as men in the Marine Corps, because of the lack of experimentation, the lack of development on the part of the Army of close-in ground support; in other words, tactical air support. I wonder if that is not something to which we should pay attention.

I realize that we are not experts, but when the Army says the line can have nothing to do with planes having more than 200 horsepower, that means that the Army line cannot go into the field of developing helicopters, and it is possible that in the next war we may need them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to say, and I want to say it very sincerely, that to the layman, and I put myself in that category, although I have had some slight service as a soldier, the question raised by the Senator from Vermont, in my opinion, is as important as is any question that has been raised in connection with the bill. When we had the unification measure up originally and when testimony was being taken, I asked some of the witnesses how they could consent, when they themselves had command of ground troops, to the divorcement of ground troops from aviation so that they would have to call on a separate arm of the Government or a separate department of the Government to furnish aviation protection and support. My recollection is that if the testimony concerning the original Unification Act is read, it will be found that those men felt, from the lessons of World War II, particularly in the Atlantic and Pacific, that there was no fundamental trouble, assuming that the aviation was actually in existence.

I should like to say to the Senator from Vermont that in the event we provide tactical support for ground troops in the Army, it will probably cost us a great deal more money, because we cannot take all the tactical support away from the Air Corps. There will be a duplication.

The idea that we have only strategic bombers is likewise a false public impression. We have many groups of fighters, groups of light bombers, groups of medium bombers, groups of heavy bombers, groups of transport planes, and so forth. While they do not figure in the news as much as do some of the others, I can assure the Senator that in those groups, rising from the fighter planes to the big bombers, consideration has been given to the tactical support of ground troops.

I therefore hope that the Senator will not press his amendment. If he does, I hope we can get a vote on it. Not one witness wearing a uniform appeared before us in support of this amendment. Even if it were a wise amendment, it ought to be the subject of very careful consideration and expert military advice before we attempt to enact such a revolutionary provision as this amendment in the defense organization of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS].

So Mr. FLANDERS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I offer and send to the desk an amendment to section 2 of the bill, relative to the National Security Council. The bill now provides that the National Security Council shall be composed of the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, and such of the Secretaries of the other executive departments as the President may appoint; but it provides for reconfirmation by the Senate of any of the Secretaries of the other executive departments, in the event the President appoints them, to advise him as members of the National Security Council.

At its meeting this morning the committee reconsidered this proposal, and the amendment I have offered has the approval of the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say that we were in general agreement in regard to the amendment. It is a rearrangement of a procedural matter, and we thought it would be better arranged under the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. The question affected is not a fundamental one to the bill, but is simply a question of whether the Secretary of an executive department should be reconfirmed by the Senate, although he has already been confirmed as such Secretary, if he serves as one of the advisers to the President on the National Security Council.

We are in agreement about the matter, and I hope the Senate will dispose of the amendment without further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 5, beginning with the word "and", it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "Council" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "such of the Secretaries and Under Secretaries of the other executive departments who have been confirmed as such Secretaries by the Senate, as the President may designate from time to time; and such other officials of the executive branch of the Government as the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may from time to time appoint to serve at the pleasure of the President as additional members of the Council."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we accept the amendment, and I hope it will be voted upon at once.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course the amendment must be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, between lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

(e) The Commandant of the Marine Corps shall serve as a voting member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff when questions dealing with the Marine Corps or amphibious warfare are under consideration.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the reasons for the amendment are short and simple, and because of that fact I am unable to speak at length about it.

I may state the reasons for the amendment as follows: The work of the Marine Corps, whether in its historical field of action or as defined in the fundamental law as now proposed, is quite specialized. Not even an expert admiral is necessarily fully informed in regard to the technical work of the Marine Corps.

In order that the technical work the Marine Corps does may have proper representation on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the amendment is proposed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall be very brief. I hope the amendment will be rejected, for the reason that, similarly, we might ask the Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service to sit with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, when chemical warfare was being contemplated; or we might ask the Chief of the Biological Warfare Service to sit with the Joint Chiefs of Staff when biological warfare was being contemplated. The Marine Corps will be represented on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, because the Navy will be represented there, and the Marine Corps is a part of the Navy.

Certainly we could not very well pick out various functions or services in the Army and have them specially represented on the Joint Chiefs of Staff when particular activities involving them were under consideration or were about to be engaged in.

No military support has been presented for the amendment.

With all due respect to the Marine Corps, I think it would be unfortunate to make an exception in its case, because to do so would be to give the Navy two votes on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, although the Army and the Air Corps would still have only one each.

If the amendment were adopted, of course the next step proposed would be to increase the representation of the Army and the Air Corps on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, so as to give all three services equal representation there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], on behalf of himself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill S. 1843 was passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, House bill 1211, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2663, Calendar No. 90, an act to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2663) to provide for the administration of the Central Intelligence Agency, established pursuant to section 102, National Security Act of 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

ACQUISITION OF SITES FOR FEDERAL BUILDINGS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHOEPPEL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 714) to provide for comprehensive planning, for site acquisition in and outside of the District of Columbia, and for the design of Federal building projects outside of the District of Columbia; to authorize the transfer of jurisdiction over certain lands between certain departments and agencies of the United States; and to provide certain additional authority needed in connection with the construction, management, and operation of Federal public buildings; and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Public Buildings Act of 1949."

TITLE I—COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING OF FEDERAL PUBLIC BUILDINGS OUTSIDE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SEC. 101. The Federal Works Administrator is authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, donation, exchange, or otherwise, lands or interests in lands as sites or additions to sites for Federal public building projects previously authorized and for such new projects as may be selected in the manner designated in this section, to make investigations and studies and to prepare plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications for such projects. Whenever the Federal Works Administrator shall determine such action to be necessary, such investigations, studies, preparation of plans, sketches, working drawings, and specifications, may be undertaken prior to the approval of title to the sites by the Attorney General. When buildings to be used in whole or in part for post-office purposes are involved, the Federal Works Administrator, shall act jointly with the Postmaster General in the selection of towns or cities in which buildings are to be constructed, and in the choice of sites therein for such projects. The Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General shall submit to the Congress a comprehensive report of all eligible projects and their limits of cost when in excess of $200,000, without regard to the time in which they may be undertaken, which report shall be printed as a public document. When the estimated cost of a project does not exceed $200,000 the limit of cost shall be determined by the Commissioner of Public Buildings. Selection of projects for the purposes of this title shall be made by the Federal Works Administrator and the Postmaster General from such report and they may also select such other projects not included in such report which in their judgment are economically sound and advantageous to the public service: Provided, That in making such selections they shall distribute the selected projects equitably throughout the country with due regard to the comparative urgency of projects in various sections of the country.

SEC. 102. It is the intent of the Congress that the equitable distribution of selected projects required by section 101 of this title shall provide for the participation by each congressional district in the benefits that will accrue from the future construction of one or more of such selected projects. It is the further intent of the Congress that those congressional districts in which are located projects previously authorized and selected for construction (including those for which sites have been acquired), but which have been deferred, shall be entitled to such project or projects, or the equivalent thereof, in addition to the projects authorized and selected under this title.

SEC. 103. For carrying out the purposes of this title, including administrative, supervisory, traveling, and other expenses in connection therewith, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $40,000,000 to remain available until expended.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. CAIN, and Mr. MARTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I report favorably the nomination of Thomas Chalmers Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 22, 1952, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, and I submit a report (Exec. Rept. No. 6) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received and the nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, United States Army, retired, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for the term expiring April 15, 1955.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have been requested by one of my colleagues to ask that this appointment go over until the next call of the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will go over.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish the RECORD to show that I have made that unanimous-consent request on behalf of another Senator, a colleague, who has asked that the nomination go over until the next call of the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD will so show.

Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmations which have been made today.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the distinguished minority leader whether he believes there will be objection to the nomination at the next call of the calendar.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not believe there will be.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished majority leader a question. If action on House bill 2663, Calendar No. 90, is concluded tomorrow afternoon before the usual time of recess, is it the intention of the distinguished majority leader to have the Senate take up any other proposed legislation before a recess is taken until Tuesday?

Mr. LUCAS. I may say to the Senator, if we should conclude this bill within a reasonable length of time tomorrow afternoon, we shall immediately take up, I think, either the basing-point bill or the District of Columbia home-rule bill, one or the other. It is my understanding there has been some serious objection made to the basing-point bill upon the part of some of the Members on this side of the aisle, and that Senators are now discussing it with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] to see whether they may be able to reach some sort of compromise.

Mr. WHERRY. I sincerely suggest to the distinguished majority leader that if Calendar No. 90, H. R. 2663, is completed, and if he can arrange his program, I believe we can iron out the difficulty, and I think we might be able to pass the basing-point bill even tomorrow afternoon. I at least offer that as a suggestion.

Mr. LUCAS. That is a very worthwhile suggestion. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska I certainly hope we can get both bills through tomorrow.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I was going to suggest, if there is some delay in ironing out the difficulties in connection with the basing-point bill, I hope the Senate will proceed with the home-rule measure, which has been reported.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Tennessee, who, I understand, is not altogether favorable toward the basing-point bill, will cooperate with other Senators in trying to get the basing-point bill through tomorrow afternoon, we shall reach the home-rule bill I am sure a little faster, and perhaps pass it before we take up some measure which may take weeks.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I may say to the Senator from Illinois, I have just spoken to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who indicated it might take some little time to iron out the difficulties in connection with the basing-point bill, although he is making progress, I believe.

Mr. LUCAS. That is a very encouraging statement, and I am sure the Senator from Tennessee will cooperate with other Senators toward the progress we all hope can be made, so we can finally take up his home-rule bill.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I certainly hope the Senator will enable us to get to it very shortly.

Mr. LUCAS. I am traveling in that direction as fast as possible.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the distinguished Senator from Tennessee to see if he cannot cooperate on the basing-point measure. The Small Business Subcommittee is still receiving letters from people throughout the country asking for relief. I know that although I am not the chairman. There is a state of confusion, and I believe if the differences regarding the basing-point bill can possibly be ironed out, it will take care, at least temporarily, of a very bad situation. That is all the bill does. It gives temporary relief, while an investigation is made to see whether some permanent solution of the problem can be found.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 27, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1949

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, if we have taken our daily bread and it brought us no message; if we have enjoyed a night's rest and we are not grateful; if we have had happiness and have failed to see Thee, O Lord, forgive us and open our eyes.

May we see Thee in the creation, the preservation, and the redemption of the great wide world. May we know Thee in the nearness and sanctity of true friendship. Glory be to Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4392) entitled "An act to provide for the payment of compensation to the Swiss Government for losses and damages inflicted on Swiss territory during World War II by United States armed forces in violation of neutral rights, and authorizing appropriations therefor," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PEPPER, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. LODGE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States numbered 49–13.

POMONA STATION, POMONA, CALIF.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 3003) to transfer Pomona station of the Agriculture Remount Service, Department of Agriculture, at Pomona, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain the bill?

Mr. WHITE of California. I will be glad to.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the return of a piece of property to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, of Battle Creek, Mich., which property was turned over to the Government during the war for a remount station and for the breeding of Arabian horses. Under the bill it will be turned back to the Kellogg Foundation, and the property used for educational and benevolent purposes only under the terms of a trust.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Inc., without cost, the real property, comprising 812 acres, more or less, of the Agriculture Remount Station at Pomona, Calif., which was conveyed to the United States acting through the War Department (now Department of the Army) by W. K. Kellogg and subsequently transferred to the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the act of April 21, 1948 (62 Stat. 197), and such of the personal property of this station as may be agreed upon, in writing, by the Secretary of Agriculture and the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Inc.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after "which", insert "tract, originally in the ownership of W. K. Kellogg."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "by W. K. Kellogg."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WHITE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a similar Senate bill (S. 969) to transfer the Pomona station of the Agriculture Remount Service, Department of Agriculture, at Pomona, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Inc., without cost, the real property, comprising 812 acres, more or less, of the Agriculture Remount Station at Pomona, Calif., which tract, originally in the ownership of W. K. Kellogg, was conveyed to the United States acting through the War Department (now Department of the Army) and subsequently transferred to the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the act of April 21, 1948 (62 Stat. 197), and such of the personal property of this station as may be agreed upon, in writing, by the Secretary of Agriculture and the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Inc.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3704) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, on which the previous question was ordered on last Tuesday.

The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BIEMILLER) there were—ayes 29, noes 15.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 152, not voting 95, as follows:

THE ORIENTAL FRUITFLY SHOULD BE ERADICATED NOW

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, a major problem is facing the Hawaiian Islands in devastation caused by the oriental fruitfly, discovered in June 1946. It is my information that it has made alarming advances in that time and everything possible should be done to eradicate the pest in the islands and to take every precautionary measure to prevent this infestation from reaching the mainland of the United States. We on the Pacific coast, in which we have a highly developed fruit-growing industry, which is one of our major assets, are situated in an area which could easily become infected by this pest reaching the mainland from the many airplanes flying back and forth betwen the islands and the Pacific coast. It has been found that this pest attacks not only citrus fruit but all fruit and is highly destructive.

I urge speedy action in providing the necessary funds to control and eradicate the pest.

I include as part of these remarks a letter I received today from Paulus Bros. Packing Co., of Salem, Oreg., under May 18, 1949, calling attention to the seriousness of the problem and urging effective steps to meet it. This company is one of the major fruit and vegetable packers in the Northwest. The letter follows:

Representative HOMER ANGELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ANGELL: They are having a lot of trouble in Hawaii with the oriental fruitfly. Since its discovery in June 1946, it has made such rapid progress that fruit growers there are very alarmed and have asked an appropriation of $2,000,000 from Congress to control and eradicate this pest. The request has been broken down into six separate items, as follows:

A. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to expand the quest of parasites destructive to fruitfly pests, now in progress in the western Pacific area, India, and South Africa, it being apparent that if success is to be achieved by this biological control method, early progress will be more assured by increasing facilities of these missions.

B. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars to studies of biology and ecology of fruitfly pests, since comparatively little is known of how the oriental fruitfly lives and responds to different conditions. Such information, of course, is vital to control and eradicate it wherever it may appear.

C. Five hundred thousand dollars to study of sterilization and fumigation of fruits, vegetables, and flowers. There is a wide area of unexplored possibilities for scientists with adequate laboratory equipment. Development of successful methods will stand for years to come as a vital safeguard to all agricultural areas threatened by such pests.

D. Five hundred thousand dollars to intensive studies of methods of area treatments and controls, such as spraying from aircraft, uses of chemicals, and eradication of host plants, inasmuch as such controls will be immediately needed should such a pest appear in any area in continental United States unprotected by ocean barriers.

E. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to intensive development and testing of new insecticides, since there are already thousands of new chemical products of laboratories developed during the war which have yet to be properly tested against these specific insects under various conditions.

F. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to research in disinsectizing materials and procedures on local and global common carriers, since rapid development of air travel has brought all continents within a few hours of each other.

With modern transportation as rapid as it is, it would be simple for the Pacific Coast States to become infected with the same pest. California is already fighting the possibility of the Mediterranean fruitfly coming in through fruits and has men stationed at its borders to inspect every automobile entering the State for fruit which might carry this pest. Fruit orchards of the Pacific coast are so valuable that we cannot afford to run the risk of infection.

We have gone over this program for the study and eradication of the oriental fruitfly and feel the amounts requested for the different phases of work are not excessive. This pest affects not only fruit but also vegetables and flowers.

We are very interested in seeing the danger of immigration of this trouble removed, and therefore would appreciate any help you might give.

With kindest personal regards, we are,

Yours truly,

PAULUS BROS. PACKING CO.
ROBERT C. PAULUS.

(Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a letter.)

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it takes a great deal of nerve to stand up in the well of the House and talk to a Congress which seems to have in mind giving America away to foreign countries. It seems as if the majority of the Members are in favor of such a thing. I am not one of those. I am a Member who is interested in America first, last and all the time. I am going to stand in the well of the House and fight for America until there is nothing left of "BOB" RICH.

"BOB" RICH is just going to use every ounce of energy he has to try to convince the Members of Congress that this business of squandering the American taxpayers' dollars and taking the American people further and further into debt, as each day goes by, is eventually going to bring us to bankruptcy. I do not propose to encourage that.

Mr. Speaker, I picked up the Treasury statement of May 20, and I find that the excess of expenditures over receipts for this year, which will close very shortly, in about 30 days, is $2,895,654,019.45. We have a national debt of over $250,000,000,000. It is about time that we took a little inventory of our resources. It is about time that we took a little inventory of our ability to look after the affairs of our Nation if we intend to be a solvent, solid, sound, and going country like it was when you came into it. Remember that you Members are going to leave this country very shortly to your children and your grandchildren. How are they going to carry the responsibilities that you have heaped upon them by this great national debt which you have incurred in the last 15 years? How are they going to be able to survive? Are they going to be able to have the same opportunities that you had, or are they going to have a yoke around their necks so that they will not be able to carry on at all?

Mr. Speaker, I asked for this 5 minutes on the rule because it seems to me as if nobody is going to talk about it, and it seems as if it is the intention to let the thing come in easy, pass this bill for five or six billion dollars, and then slide out easy. But I have been working on a few of the things that we are doing under ECA, and I will give them to you when we come to the consideration of the bill. But you are on the rule now. Give them the rule. Let them talk it over. But, are you not going to stand here and let a few of the Members of the House try to cut this appropriation down? There is the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I have no doubt that he will be working hard to try to cut the amount down. There ought to be 250 Members trying to cut down Government expenses, and trying to cut down and economize in every other way possible. You have your taxpayers back home hollering at you and saying that they want less taxes, and that they want more opportunity to have more privileges for ourselves and our children. Yet we have many people saying that they want the Federal Government to look after them and they want the Federal Government to give them more so that they will not have to work. I believe in work and earn and save. It is only because of the great opportunities that have existed heretofore that America has afforded that America has become great. But, if you are going to assume all the burdens of all the countries all over the world, then I say "look out, America." It may be someday that we will not have any America. We will go by the board with a lot of other countries, because communism is running just as rampant in this country as it is in lots of these foreign countries. Stop communism here. Stop wrecking our own economy. We are no good to ourselves or to anybody when we are not solvent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey such time as he may desire.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, even in its reduced amount, I am still unable to support the pending bill appropriating additional billions for the foreign-assistance program.

Former President Hoover once referred to national prohibition as an experiment noble in purpose. It is only fair to say that the purpose of the foreign-assistance program is "noble in purpose." But it is my view that it is both impractical and unnecessary.

What the proponents of the bill overlook completely is that when the Marshall plan was first proposed, and before we had appropriated a dollar to implement it, many of the nations of western Europe had already achieved, in both industrial and agricultural production, a standard which was roughly equal to their production immediately before the war. Do not make the mistake of thinking that this program is designed to restore Europe to its prewar standards; it is, rather, to increase their standards of living and production far beyond that which existed immediately before the war.

There are many who will be shocked by this statement, but it is quite factual, and the basis for it may be found in the committee reports advocating the original adoption of this far-flung, and exceedingly expensive scheme.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is entirely a desirable objective to increase the standards of European production and living until they equal our own, but the point that I raise is that we have not the slightest moral right to do this with the money of the American taxpayer, and I gravely doubt if we have the constitutional right to do it. The Federal Government is one of limited powers; the Congress can only do those things which are expressly or implicitly authorized. And I am certainly unaware of any authority in the Constitution to spend Federal revenues for the purpose of increasing living standards all over the world.

I call to your attention, also, that this dangerous theory will be expanded. The President, in his inaugural address in January 1949, spoke very clearly of the extension of this principle to help all the rest of the world. Indeed, we have come to a point where we insist on giving our money away regardless of need, and sometimes without even a request for it.

Mr. Speaker, what we do under this program sometimes leads to remarkable results. For example, we all agree that the Navy of the United States is not only the most powerful in the world, but more powerful than all the navies of the world combined. The second greatest Navy is that of our ally and friend, Great Britain. There just is not a naval threat to this country or to Great Britain, or to the Europe that we propose to support by the North Atlantic Treaty. It was for this reason, as well as in the interest of some sane economy, that the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Louis Johnson, recently canceled plans to build a huge aircraft carrier to add to our already impregnable fleet. I say that we did this because we did not need it, and could not very well afford it. Notwithstanding these facts, the world press recently announced that Great Britain, the principal beneficiary of foreign-assistance funds, and who drains billions of our dollars for its own interests and socialistic enterprises, has announced the building, for its navy, of eight new aircraft carriers. If this makes sense, I would like it explained to me in words of one syllable by some of the proponents of this bill.

GREEK-TURKEY AID

I have referred to the Marshall plan as at least an experiment noble in purpose; that cannot be said of the program of assistance to Greece and Turkey. That, in its very conception, was an imperialistic doctrine in which the United States assumed the right to insist upon governments and policies all over the world which meet with its approval, and insisted that no government should exist which did not meet with its approval. When President Truman first suggested such a course to the Congress and stated that it was our duty to everywhere support democracies by cash and probably by force of arms, and referred to Greece and Turkey as democracies, I could hardly believe that he was serious. Neither country has ever been a democracy as we understand the meaning of the term. Moreover, quite frankly, it is none of our business to dictate to them the character of their Government; and it was a little difficult to understand why Greece and Turkey, alone, were selected.

On May 7, 1947, in a speech to the House of Representatives on this question, I said:

If the President thinks that the United States has the moral duty, or even the moral right, to interfere with all governments that are not democracies, he might have also mentioned most of the rest of the world; not just Iran, but Iraq, Egypt, India, Korea. He might have mentioned the communistic threat of Togliatti in Italy, of Thorez in France. He could have referred to the totalitarian Franco in Spain, and, closer to home, Argentina and Chile are not conspicuous adherents to the form of government that we in America prefer.

Further in the same speech I said:

There should be no misunderstanding of the Truman doctrine. The President was frank about it. Summed up, it is this:

"I believe that it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

"I believe that we must assist free peoples to work out their own destinies in their own way."

I cannot bring myself to believe any such thing. I do not believe we have either the duty or the right to interfere with the internal affairs of foreign nations throughout the globe.

It is this imperialistic and dangerous theory to which we have already subscribed hundreds of millions, if not billions, and are now asked to further support, perhaps indefinitely.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, those hundreds of millions have been largely wasted. It was the assumption that this aid to Greece would stop the few thousand guerrillas who were then terrifying the entire Greek Army. If you think the plan has worked, I beg you to read the President's reports to Congress on the progress of Greek aid, all of which I have examined with care. In his sixth report to the Congress for the period ending December 31, 1948, which is the latest the State Department has available for us, you will find that the President says, among other things, that—

After weeks of inconclusive fighting and increasing guerrilla activity in other areas, Greek Army efforts in Vitsi slackened, and by the end of November the campaign was reduced to a holding operation. (P. 4, Sixth Report to Congress on Assistance to Greece and Turkey.)

Please bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that this is the situation after about 2 years of the ceaseless pouring of American money into the Greek economy and Greek Army. The President goes on to say:

No major offensive actions were undertaken by the Greek Army during the period under review.

And again:

During December the guerrillas demonstrated a capacity to mount attacks in force against medium-sized towns in central and northern Greece.

They captured thousands of people to replace their own losses, and engaged in a considerable campaign of destruction.

Every report made by the President is to the same general effect, and the inescapable conclusion is that the plan just is not working.

Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to continue stubbornly fighting against this program, which seems to get at least lip service from a considerable majority of the House.

The truth is, the program would not get 50 votes if it were not attractively presented as an effective movement for containing communism. I loath and despise communism, both with respect to its political theories, and economic theories. I support with all my strength, and always shall, our political democracy and our economic system of private enterprise; but anybody who has observed with care world events in the last 4 years will certainly conclude that this is not an effective means of combating communism. It must be clear now that we are on the wrong track.

However, I am content to follow the dictates of my conscience and to act in accordance with my extensive study of the entire program. I cannot stop what is being done, but I can at least raise my voice in warning, and I shall be content with the ultimate verdict of history as to whether our present proceedings were statesmanship of high order, or as I believe, dangerous nonsense.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, one of our solemn obligations as Members of Congress is to maintain at all times an adequate national defense. Each of us is under oath to support and defend the Constitution, and our country, against all enemies, foreign and domestic. In addition, we have an obligation to those who make up our armed forces in times of emergency, that they will be equipped with the finest weapons of modern warfare that dollars and cents can buy.

It is because I regard this obligation so keenly that yesterday I introduced House Resolution 227 providing for an investigation of the military aircraft-procurement program.

These are perilous times—times in which the preservation of peace depends upon our readiness for war if war must come.

Twice, first in 1917 and again in 1941, I served in the armed forces for my country. I think I know the importance of an alert readiness for a national emergency. Everyone knows that the American taxpayers, groaning under an almost unbearable burden of charges for the national defense, foreign relief, and domestic programs, need now more than ever before to be doubly sure that their money is not being wasted, that they are getting a dollar's worth of defense for every dollar of taxes paid.

Right now, I am not sure that they can be confident that this is the case.

Ugly, disturbing reports are beginning to circulate through the Congress and through Washington. They have come to me from New York and from other cities. I am confident that I am not the only Member of Congress who has heard these reports.

I say that the seriousness of their nature, the insistence with which they are going the rounds, the vigor and confidence with which they are asserted, imperatively demand that this Congress set up an unbiased House committee to make a full and complete investigation.

There may be some who will cry "politics" at my suggestion. I deny here and now, with every emphasis possible, that there is any politics at all involved. My record on national defense speaks for itself. It has, for years, been the record of both the Republican and Democratic Parties that when it came to the national defense and to international policy, politics was permanently adjourned.

While I know it is customary to give the author of an investigating resolution chairmanship of an investigating committee, I renounce any traditional claims for myself.

My old friend, Louis Johnson, the Secretary of National Defense, should particularly welcome this inquiry. Inasmuch as his name is deeply involved in the reports, he should wish to clear it. Officers of the Army, Navy, and Air Force should welcome the investigation. Their stake is a million miles from politics.

The administration should welcome the inquiry. If the reports are ill-founded, it should be glad to accept a device which, through an unbiased inquiry, will dispose of them for all time. If they are correct, then the American people have an absolute, undeniable, God-given right to know the truth and to expect their Congress to take drastic action.

My proposal is simply this: That the House set up a committee of five members each from the House to investigate all phases of the qualities of various military aircraft; all circumstances and facts involved in the cancellation of some contracts, the enlargement of others;

the connections of the Honorable Louis Johnson, Secretary of Defense, and the Honorable Stuart Symington, Secretary for Air, past or present, direct or indirect, with these companies; and the 1948 political campaign contributions that may have been made by these companies or their officers.

These disturbing reports—and to me they are only reports until they are investigated—revolve around the assocciations of Mr. Symington and Mr. Johnson with Mr. Floyd Odlum of the gigantic Atlas Corp., a super holding company.

It is reported that Mr. Symington is a frequent week-end visitor at the Palm Springs, Calif., ranch home of Mr. Odlum and his wife, the former Jacqueline Cochrane; that the logbook of the "Dewdrop" plane, which Mr. Symington uses as his personal aircraft, will record many visits to Palm Springs. This in itself is nothing. Against a background of other facts it provides food for thought.

In 1947, the Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp. held contracts for 100 B–36 bombers. At that time there was considerable doubt as to whether the contracts would ever be fully validated. A reading of the hearings on the 1949 Air Force appropriations discloses that in early 1948, it was actually planned to cut back these contracts. The Air Force was asking instead for B–50's and B–54's. In 1947, Victor Emanuel, who then controlled Convair through his Aviation Corp. (AVCO), considered selling Consolidated to the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. The Securities and Exchange Commission would not approve the sale.

Late in 1947, Mr. Odlum, through Atlas, acquired control of Consolidated, and became chairman. A few months later, in January, the Air Force prepared a directive canceling production of the B–36. Air Force studies in early 1948 indicated that the B–36 was not suitable, and Gen. Lauris Norstad so advised his superiors, explaining that the contract for 100 would be cut back to 50 or 60 so as not to bring finanical ruin to Convair. In May, the Air Force announced that it would build its 70-group force around the B–50, Boeing; and the B–45, North American; P–86, North American; and others. This announcement on May 7, 1948, did not list the Convair B–36.

By then, 10 B–36's had been produced. The Air Force in June cut production to 96 and announced a further reduction to 61 B–36's.

Mr. Louis Johnson was a director and attorney for Consolidated Vultee at that time.

During the same months of April, May and June, 1948, an official investigation was begun of the wartime aircraft turret contracts of Emerson Electric Co., of St. Louis, a firm formerly headed by Mr. Symington.

These aircraft turrets were unsatisfactory, and the contracts contained a clause providing that defects be corrected without cost to the Government. Col. Frank Wolfe, of Wright Field, went to St. Louis and renegotiated these contracts without loss to the company. It has been said that this renegotiation process cost the Government approximately $20,000,000. Emerson Electric was saved from loss, the Government obtained the turrets at increased cost and as usual, the American taxpayer suffered. Colonel Wolfe, who was a subordinate of Gen. Benny Meyers, is now retired and is said to be living at Beverly Hills, Calif. The entire transaction should be the object of the committee's inquiry.

I return to Consolidated Vultee-Atlas Corp. Although in the spring and summer of 1948 the Air Force planned to reduce materially the B–36 contracts, we find that in January of 1949 it was canceling contracts with other companies for other planes in order to procure more B–36's, which not many months before had been found unsatisfactory as bombers and were to be used as refueling tankers. The renegotiations of the canceled contracts with other manufacturers was handled by an outside law firm, reportedly upon the recommendation of Mr. Johnson. This firm had been retained for some time by Mr. Odlum's Atlas Corp.

Throughout the aircraft industry there are reports of very serious circumstances surrounding this transaction. They involve reported plans to set up, through Atlas, a huge aircraft combine under the control of Mr. Odlum. I have heard from sources I cannot disregard that there is a plan under way for Mr. Symington to resign as Secretary of Air as soon as the 1950 budget containing more funds for more B–36's is approved, and head this huge aircraft combine. I do not say that all of these reports are true; but I do emphatically assert that they are so prevalent and so persistent as to require a congressional investigation without further delay. The Congress should take this action in the vital interests of the security of the United States. We have a duty to the Nation regardless of an individual or corporation. That duty we cannot shirk.

On September 10, 1948, it was announced that the B–36 contract would not be cut back to 61 after all, but that the entire 94, still under contract, would be accepted. Later, 36 Convair—Consolidated-Vultee—liners were purchased and a $35,000,000 contract for modified training planes was executed with the same company. In October, the production of Northrup B–49a jet bombers was transferred from that firm to Consolidated Vultee. The same month a Curtiss-Wright contract for F–87 all-weather fighters was canceled. A few weeks later, the $80,000,000 which was withdrawn from the Curtiss contract was transferred to Consolidated Vultee for trainers. There have been repeated cancellations early this year for other types of planes, all a matter of record, to make additional funds available for B–36's. The cut-backs of other contracts involve $312,000,000, a great sum. The cost of canceling the original contracts is being borne by the taxpayer. They will total in the neighborhood of $100,000,000. The money withdrawn from the other contracts will go, for the most part, to Floyd Odlum's Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp.

More recently the B–54 contract has been canceled and plans are going forward for the purchase of yet another 36 B–36's. The Air Force has also brought forth a plan to modify the 73 B–36's already on hand by the addition of jet engines, for which the B–36 was not designed. The cost of the modification of the plane to bring it more in line with aircraft developments that have far outpaced its original design is more than $2,500,000 each, more than all airplanes except the B–36 cost in the first place. Former Secretary of Defense, the late Mr. Forrestal, in learning of irregularities in the handling of this plan, refused to approve it. A very short time after Mr. Johnson was sworn in to succeed Forrestal, he issued orders, in great haste, to give the additional $183,000,000 contract to the Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp., a firm from which he had just resigned as director and counsel a few weeks before.

It is impossible for me at this point to catalog the entire series of cancellations and reorders of Consolidated planes. But Congress should here and now find out why the B–36 was unacceptable in the first half of 1948; why it became acceptable in September and October 1948; why contracts for other types have repeatedly been cut back to provide funds for still more B–36's, and whether there are plans for a super aircraft combine to be headed by Secretary of Air, Symington, and under the thumb of Floyd Odlum.

There are well-founded reports that Mr. Odlum was very active in assisting Mr. Louis Johnson to raise campaign funds for the Democratic Party in September and October 1948 that this coincides with the improvement in the status of the Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp. and with the reputation of the product on which its financial future was staked—the B–36. If the aircraft industry and Mr. Odlum assisted in raising $1,500,000, or as some reports have it, a staggering $6,500,000, for the Democratic campaign, the Congress and the American people should know about it.

I do not assert that this is true. I maintain that there is sufficient evidence at hand to demand an investigation, devoid of any whitewashing or soft-pedaling tactics. The American people are entitled to a fair and impartial investigation so that the truth may be known.

There is much more information available that I have not taken the time to relate. This information belongs properly to an investigating committee. It concerns the wastage of some 2,000 B–29's now in storage; it concerns the influence and political association of Mr. Odlum with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Symington.

Nothing short of an inquiry by Congress will clear up these matters. We are spending $15,000,000,000 a year on our national defense. Are we pouring much of this into one basket, and an outmoded basket at that? Is there undercover dissension and serious disagreement on the state of our defenses? What about these influences that are being so widely discussed now? What about the cancellation, revision, renegotiation, and rejuggling of contracts for planes that, less than a year ago, were thought to be our best defensive weapons? What about these associations that are being so widely discussed?

In fairness to the public which ungrudgingly pays the bill, in fairness to Congress itself, and in fairness to all who have been and are being mentioned, Congress can do no less than to support a full, complete, and fair investigation into these matters. That is exactly the purpose of my resolution.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, while I do not know of any further requests for time on this side, yet I reserve the balance of my time until the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] comes in.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want the gentleman from Illinois to understand that when I conclude my remarks I shall move the previous question. Is that all right?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is all right.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia has stated that there has been no request for time on this side. I make a request for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not stated a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I may state, in order to show my good faith, that the gentleman from Michigan did ask me for time just after I had said I had had no inquiries, which was the fact, and had agreed that I would not yield any further time on this side. I will state further that I also arranged for the gentleman from Michigan to get 5 minutes under general debate, which he does not seem to desire.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is merely to facilitate passage of this bill by authorizing and making in order an amendment which the Committee on Appropriations wishes to offer. The House will thus be given an opportunity to vote on this proposed amendment. It is thought that by doing that it will facilitate the passage of this bill, which I think all Members are very anxious to dispose of.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution in order that we may get right into it and that its consideration may be concluded today.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4830) making appropriations for foreign aid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill may be limited to 4 hours, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and one-half by myself.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman if he believes that in 4 hours we can do justice to the American people in spending $6,000,000,000?

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I assure the gentleman that we are going to try to do justice, complete justice, to the American people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 4 hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled between himself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4830) making appropriations for foreign aid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, with Mr. COOLEY in the chair.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] is recognized for 2 hours, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will be recognized for 2 hours.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of the discussion on this bill, may I pause for a moment to pay my respects to the subcommittee that has labored so diligently for the last month on this measure. We had as majority members of this subcommittee the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCGRATH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], two newcomers to the House and two newcomers to the committee, but men who have already made their mark and have demonstrated their ability. As the two Republican members of the committee we had the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], whom I am certain the House will realize have given thorough consideration to this entire problem. I know of no two men who are better qualified to pick flaws or to find weaknesses in a witness' armor, and I say to you that throughout these hearings they were zealous in their efforts to find out, if possible, if there was anywhere we could cut down on this program or if there was any faulty administration.

There appeared before the committee many witnesses from the Department and from the outside. We had the privilege of listening for over an hour to Gen. Lucius D. Clay, the retiring United States Governor in Germany, who had just returned from Germany and was, therefore, able to give us an accurate picture of conditions with respect to that country. In addition, we had several representatives of the ECA who had recently returned from Germany and from Japan. So that we had at first hand the latest information as to conditions in Europe and Japan.

Mr. Chairman, this bill contains four subdivisions. In the first place, we have the ECA. In the second place, we have what is known as GARIOA appropriations for Government and relief in occupied areas. Then we have EROA, which is economic rehabilitation in the occupied areas. EROA is the ECA for Japan. In addition to that, we have an item for assistance to Greece and Turkey.

I shall try to outline briefly the various proposals before the Committee of the Whole at the present time. But before I do that may I give you the general background of this entire situation insofar as ECA is concerned.

Our committee did not feel it was our duty to go into the question of policy, which has been considered on numerous occasions on this floor. The House has decided the policy so far as ECA is concerned. We considered it our job to see to it that the policy is carried out at the least possible expense. Consequently, we scrutinized very carefully the administration of the ECA program. May I say, and I think I can say this without contradiction from the minority members of the committee, that we were greatly impressed with the administration of ECA from Mr. Hoffman on down.

Throughout the hearings there was never a time when we asked for information and statistics, that they were not immediately available or if not immediately available, the statistics were compiled and presented just as quickly as could be expected.

There have been substantial accomplishments under the ECA program; as a matter of fact, I think I could go even further and say that there have been amazing accomplishments. It was my privilege to visit Europe in the fall of 1947. When present conditions are compared with those which existed in 1947, it is nothing less than startling.

Industrial and agricultural production has increased tremendously in practically all of the countries. Exports from these countries have increased substantially, so that some of the countries today are helping the other countries of Europe in their respective recovery programs. The standards of living have been raised to a gratifying extent in all of the participating countries. As a matter of fact, in many of the countries the standards of living are now almost back to the prewar level, when you discount the question of housing in those countries where destruction was worst. Of course, the housing conditions in Europe will be bad for many years to come.

The morale of Europe has improved and let me say to you this is of the greatest importance in this critical state of world affairs. As a matter of fact, the cold war in Europe has been won up to the present time. Communism has been stopped in its tracks. We asked General Clay and other witnesses who are in a position to know and they said that in their judgment there would have been no North Atlantic Pact, which guarantees the safety and security of this country, unless there had been an ECA. They said that the Berlin blockade would not have been lifted had it no been for the effects of the ECA. In fact, this program has succeded so well, that many, who 1 year ago proclaimed that it should not be undertaken because we would be pouring money down a rat hole, are today contending that recovery has been so substantial that the ECA does not now need additional funds.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman know how much money is covered in this bill altogether?

Mr. GARY. I will give the gentleman the figures in just a moment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What country did the gentleman say does not need additional funds?

Mr. GARY. I did not say any country. I said that many people who stood on this floor and who argued a year ago that we should not embark upon this program because we would be pouring money down a rat hole now say that all the countries have recovered to the point where they do not need any money, which is an admission of the efficacy of the program.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman had any indication from any country over there that they would not need any funds at any particular time in the future?

Mr. GARY. No; and I am going to discuss that right now.

Mr. RICH. They are all going to have their hands out as long as you are going to hand it to them.

Mr. GARY. Gentlemen, we have made substantial progress, and yet there is a great deal to be accomplished. In the first place, the currencies of these various countries have not been completely stabilized. In some of the countries inflation is still rampant. That is one of the situations that the ECA is fighting in Europe today. It is insisting that the countries stabilize their currencies. We are in this position in this program, the ECA does not attempt to tell these various nations what they have got to do, but they are trying to assist them in formulating programs that will eventually mean the economic recovery of the entire world.

Much is yet to be done with reference to the elimination of trade barriers so that these nations in Europe can trade freely with each other. A great deal has been accomplished in that respect. A number of trade barriers have been removed, but that is a difficult program and consequently it is one that is going to take a long time to work out. The nations of Europe need a balanced budget. As a matter of fact, that is one of the great problems that we are also facing in our country today. In some of these countries they have not imposed adequate taxes, and in one or two instances they have not collected the taxes that they have imposed. But great progress has been made in bringing about reforms in these respects. Moreover, a great deal has been accomplished in regional cooperation, yet much more must be done. Naturally, there is a desire on the part of each nation of Europe to become self-sufficient rather than remain dependent upon its neighbor nations for some essential commodities. The ECA is trying to promote a program of regional cooperation, so that one nation will rely more upon another nation for the things that nation is best prepared to produce.

We have two alternatives today. One is the ECA, which will bring about recovery of our allies in Europe. The other is to prepare for war. If we cannot stop the advance of communism in Europe, then we must realize that sooner or later, after they have taken over the Continent of Europe, the continent of North America will be their next objective.

The ECA program is a defense program, and it is a much more effective defense program than one of merely preparing for war, for this reason: if we spend all our money preparing for war and war does not come, the money is wasted; but if we spend a part of our money in strengthening our allies, who will assist us in the event of war, we will at the same time under the ECA program strengthen them economically so that in time of peace we will increase our opportunities for trade and provide markets for the surpluses in this country.

We all know that the United States is a surplus-producing Nation. We must have foreign markets to dispose of those surpluses or else our own national economy will suffer. When we rebuild Europe, we are building up markets which will benefit us in peacetime, and we are also strengthening those nations to the point that they can be effective allies in the event of war.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I suppose a good many people think I am opposed in every way to helping others, but that is not the case. I am opposed to the degree in which we are trying to aid other people, when we need so much help ourselves. Suppose you spend this $6,000,000,000 in assisting these countries; does the gentleman believe for a minute that these countries will give every consideration to American produce, if they can buy the materials from some other country for less money than they can from America?

Mr. GARY. May I say to the gentleman that I do not believe anyone on this floor will question the motives of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I certainly have the highest regard for him. I know that in this matter he is actuated by the highest motives. I do not agree with the gentleman, however, and the reason I do not agree with him is that I have seen the effectiveness of this program. We are encouraging the people of Europe to trade among themselves because they must have trade to live, just as we must. On the other hand, unless we can strengthen them economically, they cannot trade with us at all. We certainly must have markets for the surplus products in this country.

Mr. RICH. They have always worked things out themselves. The thing I fear will happen is what is happening in this country. We are trying to let everybody know they can get everything they want without doing anything to get it. I believe in working and earning and saving. I believe that the more you do for some people the less they will do for themselves. That is what I fear we are doing in the operation of ECA.

Mr. GARY. I think the administration of this program from that standpoint has been beyond criticism. Mr. Hoffman and his associates in the administration of ECA have tried in every way they could to see that the European nations do their part. The gratifying thing about it is that they are doing their part, and the results to date show it.

Mr. RICH. One other statement: I have the highest regard for the gentleman, and I want him to know it.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I have appreciated my association with the gentleman. But have you weighed the question of how far this country can go beyond the condition that we find ourselves in now, with the great demands that are made upon us for the people of our own country? How much further do you think we can go on? I know that we have a lot of fine men on the Committee on Appropriations. I just think that they are overdoing it. Have you figured how much we can go in the red this next year and still be economically sound?

Mr. GARY. It is important to find out how far we can go, but it is more important in my judgment to know how far we must go. We must go far enough to protect this country. To have an inadequate program for the ECA would be worse than having none at all, for this reason: If you have no program at all, then you can take the money now used for the ECA and use it for atomic bombs and an increased Army and Navy in this country. If, you have an adequate program, you will strengthen our enemies—pardon, me, I mean you will strengthen our allies to the point that if war should come, they will be of material assistance to us. But if you have an inadequate program, you will merely weaken the United States without strengthening our allies, and the whole amount will be virtually thrown away.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made the statement, inadvertently of course, that we will strengthen our enemies.

Mr. GARY. What I meant to say and did say was that an adequate program would strengthen our friends.

Mr. RICH. Of course it was a slip of the tongue. I know the gentleman did not mean to say that. But what I am afraid of is that by trying to strengthen our friends we may be making a mistake.

Mr. GARY. I said we were trying to strengthen our allies.

Mr. RICH. We gave Russia over $12,000,000,000 worth of equipment, which they have in that country. We are fearful of them now, and we wish we had it back.

Mr. GARY. We are not doing that any more.

Mr. RICH. We are doing the same thing, perhaps, with some of these other countries which may turn on us. Under the North Atlantic Pact, we are figuring on helping them, and they are preparing for war over there. They might turn around and use that against us. That is what I am afraid of. I think you have to keep your eyes and ears wide open for fear that some of these things, which we think are going to be blessings, will turn out to be anything but blessings to our country.

Mr. GARY. I agree most heartily with the gentlemen on that. I think that is what our committee has done. We are trying to see that this money is used properly.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asked the question: How far can we go in the red on this? I would like to ask the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, how far does he think we will go in the red if we have a "hot" war?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will answer that question, if the gentleman would yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARY. I wish the gentleman would not ask me to yield now.

Mr. RABAUT. Let us thresh that question out on our own time.

Mr. GARY. I would like to give the gentleman the opportunity to answer, but I feel that I have yielded sufficiently.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that the aim of our committee was to provide for an adequate program at the least possible cost. Let us look at the costs briefly.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make a statement in reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT]?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I believe that if we would talk peace, and work and do everything for peace in this great Nation of ours, and in all the world, instead of talking so much about the probability of having war with Russia—if we would send a commission over there, by the President of the United States, to try to get together with them peacefully, we would accomplish a great deal more than by trying to prepare for war. Whenever we make these great preparations for war, we have a lot of fellows who want to use the machinery of war. That is what will happen. But if we talk peace and try to keep from spending our money for arms and munitions, and things of that kind, then we will have peace.

Mr. GARY. May I say this—of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania believed, as I do, that this program will promote the peace of the world, he would not object to one dollar that we are spending. From the bottom of my heart I believe that it will do just that. That is the reason I stand before this body today, with all the sincerity of my being, to ask you to provide for an adequate program for the ECA, which I think is the greatest factor we have for the advancement of world peace today.

Let me talk for a few moments about the figures. In the ECA authorization bill recently passed by this Congress, we authorized $1,150,000,000 for the period from April 3 to June 30, 1949. In addition to that, we authorized $4,280,000,000 for the fiscal year 1950. The total authorization was $5,430,000,000. That was the original estimate for this program. But before the bill was presented to our committee, realizing that there had been some reduction in prices, when the budget estimate was submitted, the President himself cut those estimates $157,800,000 below the authorization. So that the budget estimates were $1,074,000,000 for the period from April 3 to June 30, 1949, and $4,193,200,000 for the fiscal year 1950, making a total of $5,272,200,000.

The subcommittee went over these estimates very carefully. They felt that they could be further reduced. There had been some price reductions between the time of the President's budget estimates, and the submission of the report to us, which we estimated at $42,300,000. We considered that there would be a continued decline in prices throughout next year, and that decline was estimated at $30,000,000. In addition, there is now pending before the Senate an international wheat agreement which will probably be ratified by that body and if it is ratified the ECA, by reason of the price provided in that agreement, will save $60,000,000.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to read a statement from the New York Times of May 24. This article states:

> The cost-of-living index went up 0.1 percent between March 15 and April 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported today. This represented higher average retail prices for foods, miscellaneous consumers goods and services. According to this report it marked the second month of slight price rises following 5 months of falling prices.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for that information which indicates that our subcommittee may have cut too deeply. The items which I just outlined total $182,300,000 that the subcommittee cut from the ECA appropriations.

When the recommendations of the subcommittee were submitted to the full committee, the full committee felt that the subcommittee had not cut sufficiently; consequently a motion was made in the full committee that the amount for the fiscal year 1950 be decreased 15 percent from the amount of the budget request. That brought the figure down to $3,568,470,000. It cut the total budget requests for ECA to $4,642,470,000. That was a reduction of $1,280,730,000 below the funds available for the fiscal year 1949, or a cut of 26 percent. It is a reduction of $629,000,000, or 15 percent, below the budget estimates.

Frankly, the subcommittee did not think that was a proper cut, but we are not going to ask at this time that the amount be restored; what we are going to ask is that the House write into the bill a provision that was in last year's bill, inserted, I think, at the instance of my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. The language which is identical with that inserted in the bill passed in 1948 is as follows:

> Provided, That the entire amount may be apportioned for obligation or may be obligated and expended if the President after recommendation by the Administrator deems such action necessary to carry out the purposes of said act during the period ending May 15, 1950.

That means that we are appropriating this amount for a 15 months' period. If, however, it becomes necessary it may be used in a period of 13½ months. If the committee has guessed right, the funds appropriated will be spent during the 15 months' period and the entire amount stricken from the bill by the committee will be saved. However, if it develops that the program cannot be successfully carried on for the full 15 months with the funds provided in the bill, then the President may authorize that the expenditures be accelerated and the entire funds spent in 13½ months. The amendment will insure the continuation of this program which is so vital to our national defense and to world recovery.

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COUDERT. Does the gentleman from Virginia, who is my chairman also on another subcommittee, contemplate that at the end of 4 years the ECA program shall terminate?

Mr. GARY. May I say to the gentleman from New York that is one thing this subcommittee has insisted upon and we had every assurance from Mr. Hoffman and his associates that they are working to this end. They have served notice on all of the recipient countries that the program will close in 1952 as originally planned and that relief will not be extended beyond that time. I have talked with Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Harriman. They both assert that the program has gained a certain momentum at the present time and, if we do not sustain that momentum, they fear that we may not complete the program within 4 years as contemplated and it may cost us much more in the long run than making a proper appropriation at the present time.

Mr. COUDERT. Assuming that the President exercises a power to use the entire amount, what percentage of reduction do the figures in this bill represent when compared to the 1949 appropriation?

Mr. GARY. Seventeen percent.

Mr. COUDERT. I have an impression it was somewhat less than that from what the gentleman said in committee.

Mr. GARY. I said 6.2 percent below the authorization in committee, but it is 17 percent below the funds available for 1949.

Mr. COUDERT. In estimating that percentage, does the gentleman include the 1949 $1,000,000,000 loan fund?

Mr. GARY. Yes.

Mr. COUDERT. That accounts for the difference between the 17 percent and the 6 percent?

Mr. GARY. The 6 percent applies to the authorized funds. It has no reference to the amounts used in the fiscal year 1949.

Mr. COUDERT. What is the reduction from the appropriated funds in 1949?

Mr. GARY. From the appropriated funds of 1949? They had three sums for a 15-month period.

Mr. COUDERT. I am taking a 15-month period in both cases because this bill is for a 15-month period and the full amount is the amount that the President may call for.

Mr. GARY. Does the gentleman mean the percentage eliminating the $1,000,000,000 loan fund?

Mr. COUDERT. Yes.

Mr. GARY. I do not have that percentage.

Mr. COUDERT. It seems to me that the committee this year and next year should consider the fact, if this is a 4-year program, that it ought to be reduced pro rata in each year so that when it comes to the end there will not be an enormous sudden drop in funds being paid out by the United States to Europe, which might adversely affect our economy and the European economy.

Mr. GARY. I understand what the gentleman has in mind. We started this program about a year ago. It took some time to gain momentum. The Administrator feels we should not reduce quite as much now because we have gained that momentum; but, if we keep up this momentum this year, next year we can cut more drastically and the following year more drastically still. As recovery progresses the countries will need less money. By this program we are building these countries up to where they become self-sustaining, so that the greater their recovery the less money the United States has to contribute.

Mr. COUDERT. The gentleman realizes, I take it, that all concerned with this program admit that at the end of 4 years the ERP nations will not have attained self-sufficiency. That is true, is it not?

Mr. GARY. No; I do not think that it true. I do not know that they will be completely self-sustaining, but they will be in position to go along without further aid from this program.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. On the point that has just been brought up, and it has been brought up a number of times before, I think the House should be reminded of what these countries over there are doing themselves. It was brought out before our committee and before the House when the extension bill was up. The OEEC—the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, set up by these 16 European nations—when it received estimates from the various member governments for this year and for the period up to 1952, found those figures were out of balance by over $3,000,000,000, and that Europe would have a dollar deficit of that amount at the end of ECA, if these estimates were used. The OEEC itself refused to accept these figures and sent them back to every country, saying in substance: "You have got to refigure this so that instead of a $3,000,000,000 deficit in 1952 we come out even."

It was felt, and I think with some justice, that this was a step in the right direction by this Organization itself. They refused to rubber stamp the reports, as I fear they did in 1948, but instead they criticized these reports and returned them without approval. They said, for instance, that each country was trying to achieve entirely too much self-sufficiency, and they had better refigure their estimates, and cooperate, so as to get Europe in balance by 1952.

I want to point this out; while the amount of money we furnish by way of grants, subject only to the deposit of counterpart funds, should shrink down finally to nothing at the end of the 4-year period, in 1952, the amount of material that we can furnish from our farms and factories will not only be available but will increase. What we should aim to do and what the OEEC should aim to do is not to cut down the exports from the United States but to arrange to pay for them, either in cash or credit, by 1952, and I feel quite confident that that can be done.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I would like to commend the gentleman from Virginia for his interest, being certainly one of the hardest-working Members of the House, and for the very fine, clear statement he is making.

I noticed in the paper this morning that an agreement has been worked out. I understand time is of the essence, and therefore the gentleman did not have the opportunity to advise the full Committee on Appropriations nor the House of the agreement. I just wonder if he will explain it sometime in his own time in detail. Does the gentleman intend to do that later, or would he care to do it now?

Mr. GARY. I will say to the gentleman that I have just explained that when the bill is up for amendment I shall offer an amendment to place into the bill identically the same language that was in the bill last year; the language which I just read a few moments ago on the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. That is fine. I understand that; that is very clear. From there let us go two or three steps further. Does the gentleman intend to offer a motion to restore the funds?

Mr. GARY. No.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Or leave the funds as they are now?

Mr. GARY. We leave the funds as they are now. That is, the ECA funds?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. That is right.

Now, will the gentleman's motion include the occupied countries' funds?

Mr. GARY. No. I am coming to that right now.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Will they be touched in any way?

Mr. GARY. I am coming to that right now; if the gentleman will just wait, I will explain the rest of it. I have completed my statement with reference to ECA. If the gentleman will just give me a few moments, I will attempt an explanation of the other items.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have in my hand a letter received on May 19, over the signature of Mr. Paul Hoffman, in which he admits that lumber is being purchased behind the iron curtain under the ECA program in competition with the American lumber industry. I therefore assume that the same thing is true of other commodities.

Now, can the gentleman, who is well-versed and well-informed regarding these appropriations and the uses thereof, explain to me, first, how that is consistent with the program; and, secondly, will he tell the House how much ECA money is being spent behind the iron curtain in the procurement of commodities in competition with American industry?

Mr. GARY. So far as we know, absolutely none. There may be some isolated instances, the gentleman will understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman wants to see this letter, I will be very happy to show it to him.

Mr. GARY. He admits that that might be true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He says:

> We may add, a comparatively small amount—
>
> Speaking of lumber—
> has been authorized for procurement behind the iron curtain.

Now, I would like to know how much is being procured behind the iron curtain.

Mr. GARY. There is no provision in this bill for any countries behind the iron curtain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the House votes on this measure, does not the gentleman feel that we should know how much is being spent behind the iron curtain?

Mr. GARY. None is being spent behind the iron curtain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then Mr. Hoffman is wrong?

Mr. GARY. He said there may have been. There may have been in the past, but there is none at the present time, as I understand it, and there are no funds in this bill to be spent behind the iron curtain.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I think perhaps what may confuse the picture is that some of these countries are still dealing in their own currencies with countries that are behind the iron curtain, using soft currencies, but not with the dollars that come from the United States under the ECA program.

Mr. GARY. Certainly there is no money in this bill for any country behind the iron curtain.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It is true, however, that some of the participating countries are trading with countries behind the iron curtain and receiving certain supplies from them. For instance, Poland is sending coal and timber to the different countries. I think there are some food shipments out of Yugoslavia into Italy. Perhaps there is a little meat coming in. I would not be sure about that. I think that is true.

Mr. GARY. There is some coming from some of the countries; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By way of explanation, let me say that this letter written by Mr. Hoffman has sole reference to purchases and procurement under the ECA program.

I will read further from Mr. Hoffman's letter. He says:

It is the purpose of this policy—

Speaking of the policy adopted by the ECA—to assure to the United States lumber industry an opportunity to compete for ECA-financed business.

Mr. GARY. And not countries behind the iron curtain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before he came to that, he admitted we were purchasing lumber behind the iron curtain.

Mr. GARY. Not that we were purchasing lumber behind the iron curtain. As the gentleman has explained, there is some trade between the countries; yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is being purchased by American money.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I wonder if the confusion may not arise from the possibility that some of these countries may have used for buying behind the iron curtain some of the counterpart funds, funds that they put up in their own currency to match the value of what we send over in dollars. There is no reason so far as I know why they should not use it for that purpose if authorized by the Administrator. Furthermore, we must remind ourselves again that the one objective of this program is to help them get in such a position that they do not have to buy so much in dollars or in hard-currency countries; otherwise, we never can end the program.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield further—as I understand, these counterpart funds are used entirely within the country to which the goods are sent. The counterpart funds represent a fraction of the receipts from merchandise that is sold that is contributed from our purchases from participating countries and Western Hemisphere countries and ourselves, to ship over there. None of those counterpart funds are used in any way outside the country into which the goods are sent, as I understand.

Mr. GARY. That is correct.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. The distinguished former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is quite correct. Counterpart funds are not used to finance trade between the countries of Europe, either between the western countries of Europe or in east-west trade. There is today east-west trade in Europe. There has always been east-west trade in Europe. Eastern Europe has the grains, the coal, the wood western Europe must have. Without such trade, the Marshall plan would cost many times over what it is costing to get the western European nations back on their feet. East-west trade is not financed out of American dollars.

Mr. Chairman, you may recall the statement I made on the floor, when the ERP legislation was before the House. I handled that part of the program, explaining the intra-European-payments plan for the Foreign Affairs Committee. I pointed out that there are little Marshall plans underwritten by the Marshall-plan countries—intra-European-payments programs that permit trade to be carried on between the western nations in Europe and, where it is necessary, between the western nations and the eastern nations of Europe. Western Europe must import such things as wood, wheat, coal, and dairy products. For instance, England imports her eggs from Poland. Wood comes from Russia to England. If England had not been able to get wood, she could not have started building homes for those hundreds of thousands of families whose houses were bombed out in the war.

Intra-European trade is carried on through trade arrangements financed by local currencies. It is not financed by our dollars.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that when the ERP program was originally discussed in the House, the committee of the House amended the bill prohibiting exports to the ECA countries of any goods in short supply in this country.

That is why in some instances ECA countries have gone outside of the United States to buy wheat and other products. First, they do not begin to have enough dollars to buy in the United States all the food and raw materials that they need. Second, many of the products which ECA countries imported last year from one another, other parts of the world or the eastern countries, were not available in the United States or were in short supply. The Marshall-plan countries in trading with eastern European countries by agreement have observed the same trade regulations the United States observes in trading with eastern European countries in regard to the export of military potential.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I would just like to ask this question to try to clear up this matter. Is it not the policy of the Committee on Appropriations that European countries under the recovery program shall first use, wherever possible, their own currencies and second, that if they do have to use our dollars, they will buy them in the cheapest possible markets. Is that not the whole reason for whatever trade is carried on between east and west Europe?

Mr. GARY. That is not the policy of the Committee on Appropriations—it is the policy of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. JAVITS. Exactly.

Mr. GARY. The Committee on Appropriations felt, as I stated at the very beginning, that it was not our duty and responsibility to determine policy. Those policies have been determined by the Congress of the United States. It is our duty to determine how much money is necessary to carry out those policies and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. JAVITS. That is the policy, as you understand it, as I have stated.

Mr. GARY. Exactly.

Mr. JAVITS. Another question. Is it not a fact that Europe, having had approximately $11,000,000,000 deficit when we started this program, even if there has been waste; it has been cut down to $3,000,000,000 in 4 years, and ERP has more than paid its way and has done a remarkable job.

Mr. GARY. There is no question about it.

May I speak briefly with reference to GARIOA and EROA. GARIOA is Government and Relief in Occupied Areas; and EROA is Economic Rehabilitation in Occupied Areas. It is the ECA for Japan. The appropriation for these items for 1949 was $1,300,000,000. The budget estimate for 1950 was $1,000,000,000. The subcommittee recommended $949,600,000. In other words, the subcommittee cut the appropriation because of decreasing prices, which we went into very carefully, and because of some administrative savings, which we thought could be effected—$50,430,000.

The full committee recommended a cut of 15 percent in the GARIOA and the EROA funds. While ECA is a voluntary program, GARIOA is a legal responsibility of the United States. We must take care of conquered territories. At the present time we are changing the administration in Germany from military government to civilian government. It would be extremely unfortunate if, at this time, we should make such cuts as would embarrass the new administration, which is just taking over under Mr. McCloy. Therefore, at the proper time, an amendment will be offered, not to restore the entire amount of the cut, but to restore for GARIOA $75,000,000 of the $150,000,000 stricken by the committee, and to restore of the administrative funds, which does not mean any additional appropriation, because they are taken out of the total appropriation, $45,000,000, which is a reduction of $5,000,000 from the amount requested in the budget.

In addition, this bill carries an item of $50,000,000 for assistance to Greece and Turkey. There have been no changes in that amount, either by the committee or the subcommittee. The House has authorized an appropriation of $275,000,000 for that purpose. We have previously appropriated $225,000,000. This bill merely appropriates the remaining $50,000,000 to be expended as a stop-gap fund until the recommendations come through for the Atlantic Pact program. It is understood that this appropriation will be taken into consideration when the budget requests are submitted for funds to implement the Atlantic Pact.

The $50,000,000 will finance the Greek and Turkish programs until October or November.

I want to apologize to the membership for taking so much of their time, but I did want to give you a complete and full explanation of this bill. I hope the House will see fit to adopt the two amendments which have been suggested. With these amendments this bill will adequately take care of the situation for the next year, and will show the Communists in Russia that we really mean business in this recovery program. Moreover, our action will tremendously strengthen the hands of Mr. Acheson, who is in Paris today, negotiating with the Foreign Ministers of Russia, England, and France.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, before the distinguished gentleman from Virginia relinquishes the floor I wish to make this observation: I know something about the gentleman from Virginia; I know something about his interest in and his work for drastic Federal economies. I was chairman of the Subcommittee on Treasury-Post Office appropriations in the Eightieth Congress, and the gentleman from Virginia served under me. He gave me 100-percent support in my program to cut severely the requests of the President and the Bureau of the Budget; furthermore, when we faced the Senators in conference on the other side of the building he was a stand-up man in conference, so much so that one of the elder statesmen who had served in the other body for some 20 years made this statement: "GARY, of Virginia, and CANFIELD, of New Jersey, are pretty tough conferees, the toughest I have ever faced." So I congratulate the gentleman from Virginia on the job he is continuing to do in this Congress as the present chairman of that subcommittee and as chairman of this special Subcommittee on ECA. He is a credit, a distinct credit, to the Congress and the country.

Mr. GARY. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey and remind him that with his help we cut the Treasury-Post Office request this year by $100,000,000, but $40,000,000 of it has now been restored in the other body.

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. ABBITT. I desire to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the splendid manner in which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] has explained this important piece of legislation. I desire to compliment him highly and extend him the thanks of myself and others who feel likewise, for the wonderful work that he and his subcommittee have done. We of Virginia are wholeheartedly supporting the gentleman and wish him to know that we appreciate the wonderful work that he has done.

Since April 2, 1948, this program has been in effect. Its purpose is to help the European countries help themselves recover economically. At the time the program was instigated, economically, western Europe was bankrupt. The question was whether or not the democratic countries would be able to survive economically. They were on the brink of collapse internally. Since that time much progress has been made to date toward European recovery. Agricultural and industrial production has been steadily rising, living conditions have been improving, and morale is higher now than at any time since the war ended. Despite these favorable aspects, inadequate progress has been demonstrated in certain features of the program. The aid being extended by the United States is a relatively small but vital factor in the aggregate of what must be produced and accomplished for Europe to become self-supporting by June 30, 1952. The progress made toward recovery up to now is largely attributable to the efforts made by Europeans themselves, and the success or failure to achieve adequate recovery by 1952 will also depend principally upon the efforts made in Europe. Continued aid in declining volume by the United States will, however, be an indispensable factor. In other words, due to the progress that has been made by the western democracies in Europe, it is now possible to reduce the amount of our aid, but aid is a vital and necessary factor in the continuing recovery of Europe.

It is necessary to have an expansion of production, consumption, and trade in Europe and throughout the world during the period of the European recovery program, and after it has ended, if the objectives of the program are to be realized. It is most important that care be exercised that any tendencies on the part of participating countries to indulge in uneconomic self-sufficiency are not implemented by the investment of aid funds, or funds contributing to requirements for aid. It is conceded by all people familiar with the program that it has done a wonderful job, that the administration of the plan has been carried out in a businesslike and highly efficient manner and speaks well for Administrator Hoffman and his staff.

Mr. GARY. I appreciate the very gracious words of my colleague, but being a politician, I may say that I value votes above commendation, and I hope that the House will endorse my views by its vote.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. The gentleman's explanation of the bill has been very helpful and I am sure all Members of the House appreciate the splendid job the gentleman has done. My question has to do with the section of the bill dealing with the National Military Establishment authorization for the Administrator to use funds for the transportation of relief packages to Japan and some of the occupied lands; but I do not find anything in the section authorizing the ECA and its Administrator to do that same thing for the European areas. I understood such a provision was included in the bill last year.

Mr. GARY. It is included in this bill. We have not touched that at all.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has consumed 58 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, earlier today the Commission created by the Eightieth Congress on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government held its last official meeting at the White House and submitted its final report to the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House.

This bipartisan Commission, the membership of which was appointed in July of 1947 by President Truman, Speaker MARTIN, and Senate President pro tempore VANDENBERG, has worked diligently at the task assigned it for the past 21 months. In its work it has had the assistance of several hundred outstanding American citizens, many of whom have made great personal sacrifices to serve their country.

Including the final summary or report filed today, the Commission has submitted to the Congress 19 official reports setting forth 318 findings and recommendations which, if followed, will make possible huge savings and greater efficiency in the operation of the Federal Government. Now it is up to the Congress and the President to make effective the new economies and efficiencies in the public service which have been charted by the Commission.

Those serving as members of the Commission have been: Hon. Herbert Hoover, ex-President of the United States; Dean Acheson, Secretary of State; the late James V. Forrestal, Secretary of National Defense; Arthur S. Flemming, former Chairman of the Civil Service Commission and now president of Ohio Wesleyan University; Joseph P. Kennedy, former Ambassador to Great Britain; James H. Rowe, Jr., former White House secretary and Assistant Attorney General; Dr. James K. Pollock, professor of political science, University of Michigan; George H. Mead, industrialist, of Ohio; Senators Aiken, of Vermont, and McClellan, of Arkansas; our former colleague in the House, Carter Manasco, of Alabama; and your humble speaker, author of H. R. 775, the bill which created the Commission.

At the meeting to organize the Commission, held in the Cabinet room at the White House and presided over by President Truman, I had the pleasure of nominating our only living ex-President, Herbert Hoover, for Chairman of the Commission. He was unanimously elected, as was Dean Acheson, as Vice Chairman.

And now that the Commission has concluded its labors and will cease to exist in a few days I wish, not only in my own behalf, but in behalf of other members of the Commission, to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the great American who served as our Chairman and by whose name the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government is best known—Herbert Hoover.

Most men, when they have suffered a political defeat, retire to nurse their grievances. Many men, when they have reached the venerable age of three score and ten, sit back to reminisce on their past greatness. Few men—very few, indeed—take on new tasks and new careers at such an age. Few men disregard their personal comforts, their own needs, and the possibility of physical exhaustion, to serve the public interest at such an age.

Herbert Hoover is today the leader of no political party. He is not regarded solely as a former President of the United States. He has found altogether a different place in the hearts of our people, a place that might be the envy of any man. It has come as the blossoming of a great understanding, and from the universal response to a simple man who loves his people and has devoted the whole of his days to them. If men call him our elder statesman, it is for want of a better phrase. Rather, he is the father and the mother of our generation—the strong, spiritual man who steps in to assume and do unbelievable tasks—the tender person whose compassion and faith bring to such tasks an intuitive sense of what is right and good for us.

Herbert Hoover is of the soil of America. An Iowa farmer's son, born of a devout Quaker family, he was in early childhood left an orphan to the care of relatives. Sent to Oregon, it might be said of him that he has had to work all his life, from earliest childhood. And out of it came his robust body, his tireless energy, his ability to keep at his tasks with strength and determination.

Herbert Hoover never seems to age. Certainly during the past decade he has grown younger in spirit, if more mellow and universal in his philosophy. His has always remained the Quaker concept that it is sounder to help people to help themselves than it is to make them permanent subjects for charity, either by private or public coddling. He has never recognized any people as an enemy of this country, even when at war. Rather he has regarded them as erring children of God to be pitied and guided aright. Often, in a materialistic era, this essential Christian attitude has been mistaken for weakness and compromise, and even as a willingness to forgive one's enemies, rather than the merciful understanding of a great soul.

Children and women and aged men are not enemies, even in time of war. They are but the victims of mistaken policies and misguided leaders, and of the fallacies inherent in the doctrine of the supremacy of the state over the freedoms of the individual. Perhaps the steadily rising respect for Mr. Hoover's judgment is the result of his having, for so long, been unpopularly right while so many others were so popularly wrong. He has viewed human events in terms of large historic forces, rather than by the smallness of party politics. The truth will reassert itself in each generation, no matter how brilliantly falsehood and error are presented to beguile the minds of the unthinking and the hearts of the immature. Truth, at times, seems cold and hopeless, while falsehood is like a beautiful tree that blossoms gaily in the spring, yet produces no fruit in the autumn.

Since Herbert Hoover has left the Presidency, he has devoted himself to three tasks:

First. To keeping before the American people our national ideals and traditions that they may never forget the fundamentals of their inalienable freedoms which for three centuries on this continent protected and served them and made this the greatest of all nations, not only as a material reservoir but also as a spiritual sanctuary. He has viewed American history not as the events of one country—his own— but rather as the zenith of the Christian civilization of the Western World—the growth of the ideal that man is not the servant of the state but is the master of his own soul, that his inalienable rights are by the grace of God and not the accident of political arrangements. It is a philosophy of life grounded not only in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution but in the moral law of the Western World.

Second. He has been concerned over the sufferings of the young, the weak, and the aged, and came to their relief with his great powers of administration, offering his services to anyone who would use them, without regard to self, to cost, to his aging years, or to the expenditure of his own physical strength. During World War I he brought into being the most humane and effective organizations for the relief of the hungry and the care of the needy. The American relief of that war was an act of compassion and it will never be forgotten. During World War II, his services were not required. Yet, he organized the Finnish Relief; he sought to aid the Poles; he offered his services at all times, and, when the war was over, he actually flew around the earth twice, with side trips into South America, to effect a more equable distribution of the available food supplies when starvation threatened in many parts of the world. This aid to mankind almost cost him his life and actually brought upon him an illness of intense physical pain. Yet, when cautioned by friends that he was risking too much, he replied, "I've lived too long, anyhow."

Third. He undertook 2 years ago to act as a servant of the Congress of the United States in heading the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. Perhaps there were some who imagined he was being named as Chairman of our Commission as a sort of last honor, a sinecure to top off his years and to give a public acknowledgment of his services to the Nation.

His arm in a sling, and suffering the pains of an illness brought on by his heavy labor to feed the hungry, Herbert Hoover set out to make this Commission an effective agency of Government. He devoted himself to this new task, as he has to every duty he has ever undertaken, with a thoroughness rarely expected and seldom found in a public servant.

Instead of hiring a vast multitude of so-called experts, he mobilized more than 300 citizens, each an experienced, competent leader in his particular field, to serve on task forces devoted to finding the answers to special problems. Most of the members of these task forces served their Congress and their country without remuneration, with many contributing their own expenses.

It is my firm conviction that this Commission, on which I have had the honor of serving, has competently completed one of the most gigantic tasks ever assigned to any group of citizens. In a short period of 20 months the Commission has analyzed the nature, structure, functions, and activities of our sprawling Federal administration, prepared 24 task force reports in full detail, and issued 19 Commission reports, making 318 specific findings and recommendations for the better organization of the executive branch of the Government. Nothing has been suppressed. No data in the possession of the Commission has been withheld from the people. There has been no double talk, no evasion of issues, no protective obscurities.

The affairs of this Commission have been administered entirely by Herbert Hoover. He has labored with each task force, read every report, directed the work of the Commission so as to save time and expense, and has given to its labors an over-all philosophy based upon American ideals and history. Our task force and Commission reports are today the only existing source material which fully and impartially describe the actual workings of our Government. They will be used for decades to come as a guide for our people and our officials toward better government.

Now that the work of our Commission has concluded—now that the final report has been filed—I wish only to call attention to the Herculean labors, the superb patriotism, the utter selflessness of one of our greatest Americans—Herbert Hoover.

May God grant that his vigorous health, his earnest spirit, his wise philosophy may long be at the service of the Nation he loves. May God grant that in the years ahead he may enjoy the respect, the love, and the veneration of a grateful Republic.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill as it is reported by the committee carries $3,568,470,000 for the ECA for the fiscal year 1950 and $1,074,000,000 for the 3-month period ending June 30, 1949.

On April 2 there remained unshipped, according to the table that was first presented to us, $1,953,000,000. According to the statement that was later made, it was estimated that the shipments had been $3,774,000,000. That would leave $1,226,000,000. With the funds that are carried in this bill they would have available to ship $5,872,000,000 in the 15-month period, leaving an amount of $391,000,000 available per month, or $90,375,000 per week all the way through, if it were all used.

This would be at a far higher rate of shipment than they have already attained on an average for any 3-month period, and a higher rate by far than the $315,000,000 per month that the last report showed of estimated shipments to the 31st of March, so it seems to me that with the funds that have been reported here they can unquestionably get along.

I shall not, however, oppose the amendment which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] stated he would offer. I shall support it because I feel that it is very important that whatever is done here shall be done by as nearly unanimous a vote as is possible.

Mr. Hoffman has agreed that he will try his best to get along and do the job on the amount of funds that are available for the period involved, and I have not the slightest doubt but that he can do it.

There are a great many things that are involved. The future prices of corn and grain are down below the figures that are carried in here. My understanding is that the futures prices of grain represents just about what the Commodity Credit Corporation has set as the loaning price that will be in effect next year. Lard, for instance, is down from $310 a metric ton to $265, between the middle of April figures that they gave us and the price that seems to be current in the New York FAS market.

Raw cotton: Futures of raw cotton are down. The October price is down from $519 a ton to $397. Lead prices are down from $334 to $308. Zinc prices are down from $331 to $264. The prices of hides are down very considerably.

There we have the picture. I do not think there is the slightest doubt that the United States of America can ship everything which needs to be shipped across the water with the funds that are carried in this bill. I believe it would be much healthier if we get along on just this amount of money, from the standpoint of the ECA and from the standpoint of the rest of the world. Just to show you what is presently going on here in the United States, I wish to call your attention to the Treasury statement of May 23. That statement shows that the amount of income tax withheld by employers is down, as compared to the same period a year ago, about $248,000,000. The amount of personal income tax is down $59,000,000. The amount of refunds of receipts is up $30,000,000 for that same period. The other revenues are approximately in the same category. That indicates we are in a very serious situation. The receipts so far this year exceed the expenditures, but not by an amount which makes us feel we should move into anything except with the greatest care and the most cautious approach.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman says he is for the bill and he says that it will improve the market and make a better outlet for wheat and cotton. Has he given any consideration to metals in this country?

Mr. TABER. Metals?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes. Does the gentleman know that $190,000,000 are allocated in this bill for the purchase of strategic materials in foreign countries in competition with the metals which we produce here?

Mr. TABER. There will be no strategic materials brought into this country as the result of this bill, with the possible exception of some small items, which will come in as a result of the use of the counterpart funds. That will not hurt any metal industry in this country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman say that for zinc, lead, and copper?

Mr. TABER. Yes. I say that because the zinc, lead, and copper stock piles in this country are going to be built up just as much as possible for the protection of our own military position. I do not believe there is any suffering in any of those industries.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the market quotations on lead, copper, and zinc in recent weeks?

Mr. TABER. I just gave you the figure on that, as compared with what they were a while back.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has the gentleman obtained any statistical information from the ERA on the importation of copper, lead, and zinc?

Mr. TABER. No; I have not obtained any information from them, but I have been watching the markets and I gave you the trend of the markets, which is very similar to the trend of the markets on almost everything.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman know that negotiations now are under way between the ECA and these Marshall plan countries to provide money not only to buy copper and zinc and lead, but also to develop the mining properties in these Marshall plan countries? The statistical tabulation I have recently received from the ECA discloses substantial importations of copper, lead, and zinc into this country financed by ECA money at the same time the market quotations disclose the price of these metals are continually declining and with the fall in metal prices the price of the securities of most of our industrial concerns are also falling.

Mr. TABER. While I think that is true to a certain extent, on the other hand we are not able to take care of our own requirements in good shape in this country, and I do not believe that this is going to prejudice legitimate industry in any way in the mining of lead and zinc.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. As a matter of fact, 5 percent of all appropriations made are allocated or set aside and earmarked for the purchase of strategic materials, which include copper, zinc, and lead.

Mr. TABER. No; that is not exactly correct. Five percent is set aside. That represents these counterpart funds which may be used for that purpose, but the amount that is being used is very, very small.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I can yield further at this point.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I think that is a very vital matter, I may say to the gentleman; I think the miners in our country should be given preference over foreigners.

Mr. TABER. It is; there is not any question about it.

The result of our examination of the receipts in this country indicates that the withholding tax is down, the other income taxes are down, and the refund of taxes is up $80,000,000, indicating a total collection nearly $400,000,000 less for this month than we were a year ago. This indicates that we need to economize.

The countries across the water are very gradually getting into a position where they need a little less than they needed before. We should not give them more instead of less. Right while we were holding the hearings it came up that the President had reduced the amount that would go to Germany under the ECA program by $80,000,000 because they had increased their expected exports to other countries by $100,000,000 and as a result they were able to get more of the things that they were able to import than they had before. The production in Germany is going up very rapidly as a result of that; they will go up another $100,000,000, in my opinion, next year; perhaps they will go $200,000,000 above. That same thing applies to the French and the British production, and the Italian production; as they approach the point where they are able to be more nearly stable, as a result of sending out more of their own exports the amount that they will receive out of the ECA will gradually go down. We should as we go along gradually reduce this situation so that we will encourage these people to be self-reliant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

What these countries need to do presently, as much as anything, is to stabilize their currencies on a sound basis. The French have approached it, but they have not done it; the British have withheld approaching the problem with a full sense of responsibility. If they would do that their exports would increase in France, Italy, and England, to such an extent that I believe the time can be seen in the not too distant future when they will need very much less aid. I hope that the Administrator will watch this situation very closely and that he will as he goes along reduce the amounts that are given to these countries just as fast as it can be done without slowing up their recovery. I believe that with this situation the cuts which the committee made really give them ample money to carry through the year.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I might say to the gentleman that I noticed in the hearings on this bill that Dr. Fitzgerald of the ECA had testified as is shown on page 352 thereof that the Commodity Credit Corporation held about 55,000,000 pounds of wool, most of which is quarter blood wools and practically all of which was of low quality and low grades and was mainly carpet wools. Dr. Fitzgerald is wholly incorrect in his statement and I was sorry to learn that he had misinformed the committee. As a matter of fact, the Commodity Credit Corporation has a stock pile of something over 75,000,000 pounds of wool; 34,000,000 pounds of this wool is shorn, grease wool, and over 40,000,000 pounds is scoured, pulled wool. Accordingly, it can be said that the Commodity Credit Corporation is holding the equivalent of 100,000,000 pounds of grease wool.

A break-down on the wool in the Commodity Credit Corporation discloses that 32,000,000 pounds of the scoured, pulled wool is graded 56 to 58 and 20,000,000 pounds of the shorn wool is the same grade. Accordingly, 85 percent of the wool in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation would be highly desirable for use in Germany and in western Europe for processing for domestic purposes in those countries. There is no question that these wools would be of splendid use for blanket purposes.

I have made diligent inquiry and none of the wools in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation are carpet wools. The Commodity Credit officials have advised me that they do have about 10,000 pounds of forty to forty-fours but even these wools are not carpet wools and these 10,000 pounds represent but one-hundredth of 1 percent of the stock pile in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Will the gentleman tell me what provision is made in this bill for the purchase by Mr. Hoffman of agricultural commodities in surplus in this country, such as wool and the 101,000,000 pounds of beef that the Commodity Credit Corporation has in northern New Mexico?

Mr. TABER. There is no mandatory provision in this bill for the purchase of anything. The funds are appropriated, and I understand that so far as surplus commodities can be used effectively they are going to use them for the purpose of meeting the demands of ECA.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I notice in the hearings that Dr. Fitzgerald testified, page 426, that it was the intention to acquire during fiscal year 1950, 6,000 tons of ECA-financed wool. Where are they going to get that wool, will the gentleman tell me?

Mr. TABER. I cannot tell the gentleman just exactly where that wool will come from. I have not that particular document in front of me. But I imagine a considerable part of the purchase of wool by participating countries will come from Australia. Of course, we are an importing Nation as far as wool is concerned.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. That is true, but we do have 100,000,000 pounds of surplus grease wool or the equivalent thereof in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. TABER. Which should be used as far as it can be.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. Has ECA used all of the funds provided for it last year and, if not, at what rate has it been using them? The gentleman said earlier in his statement that the amount supplied for the future would be at a more rapid pace than has been provided by ECA in the past. Therefore, I wonder how the rate compared with last year's appropriation and how fast the funds are being exhausted.

Mr. TABER. The expenditures for the first 12 months of operation from the 2d of April 1948 to the 2d of April 1949—it may be the 3d of April 1948 to the 2d of April 1949—were in shipments $3,774,000,000, or at the rate of approximately $315,000,000 per month. If they ship all of this stuff in the 15 months that is here, they would ship at the rate of $391,000,000 a month if they exhausted all their funds. There is no question about that. I do not think they should do this. I hope they will not, because I really believe the funds that we have provided here should carry them through to the 30th of June next year and still leave them with pipe line enough to go on until new stuff may be purchased.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, may I join the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], in the eloquent and richly merited tribute paid to one of the greatest American statesmen of our time, ex-President Herbert Hoover, and in the urgent recommendation that the Congress give prompt and sympathetic consideration to the report of the Hoover Commission.

No one can question the necessity of a revision of our governmental procedure. It has grown like Topsy, without planning or system. We have added a section, an extension, an accession here and there. From time to time we have enlarged and extended duties, prerogatives and functions embracing in the aggregate vast and intricate ramifications so that it is now imperatively necessary that we institute an over-all revision and readjustment which will eliminate duplication, and unnecessary activities and machinery, and reduce the cost of government, and give us a better and a more economical and a more effective administration of the greatest Government on earth. For this important work no one could be better equipped, better qualified, better prepared, or better trained than ex-President Hoover. No one has had the experience, no one has greater capacity, and certainly no one can exceed him in his patriotic desire to be of service to the Congress and the country.

It might be added that he has mobilized about him a staff of the best-trained and most efficient men to be secured, men whose work is calculated to secure results which will meet with general aproval.

It must not be forgotten that many of the supernumeraries whose functions and prerogatives will be circumscribed, and whose expenditures will be curtailed by any reasonable reorganization of the Government, can be counted upon from the beginning to oppose any change in their personal or official status. It must not be overlooked also that in their opposition to recommendations of the Hoover Commission they will not be naive enough to give the real reasons for their objections, but will seek to bring in other organizations and groups and assign to other reasons their efforts to obstruct the prompt and efficient prosecution of this much-needed reorganization.

May I reiterate what I have frequently said on this floor: it is to be hoped that regardless of party affiliation we can cooperate to secure an early and a satisfactory consideration and disposition of the reports of the Commission.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. The distinguished gentleman from Missouri, and my able chairman has, in my opinion, made a most important statement on the floor of the House this afternoon, and I hope it will be reported by newspapers throughout the country.

Now, does he not think that it would be a most inspiring, a most wholesome thing for our country if the Eighty-first Congress were to adopt in toto the reports of the Hoover Commission?

Mr. CANNON. I always welcome a suggestion from my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey. I have found him in his long and useful service in the House always ready to cooperate in any movement for the welfare of the Government, and the Nation. His suggestion should have every consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, because we have by previous agreement practically fixed the terms of the pending bill—instead of taking additional time for its discussion after it has been so thoroughly covered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] I desire to discuss at this time a collateral matter of general interest I trust to the Congress and to the country.

The history of fiscal legislation in the American Congress over the last three decades has been marked by an insistent demand from the country, and by a consistent effort on the part of the Congress to perfect a more efficient and effective system of handling the annual appropriation bills.

In the years preceding 1920 the appropriating functions of Congress were exercised by many committees, which at various times reported appropriations with little or no relation to any definite centralized plan or system. For some 10 years Congress worked intermittently but assiduously in an effort to devise a plan under which we could consolidate and coordinate the appropriation functions thereby achieving a more scientific and economical handling of national finances.

Finally, in 1921, Congress enacted the Legislative and Accounting Act, under which for the first time we were able to segregate the funds for each department and agency of the Government in one place, in the same bill. It was a decided step forward.

However, it became immediately apparent that there was a further defect in the system in the lack of a ceiling or other means of correlating expenditure with revenues—of adjusting outgo to income. Many men in these intervening years, including Swagar Shirley, of Kentucky, John Fitzgerald, of New York, and Martin B. Madden, of Illinois, with the able cooperation of talented career men like Marc Sheild and John Pugh, have sought the philisophers' stone in a correlated, consolidated budget submitted to the Congress simultaneously with authoritative estimates on the national income, but were thwarted largely by an obsolete and antiquated organization of the subcommittees.

Eventually, after long study, the Congress passed in 1946 as a part of the Reorganization Act, section 138, providing for a legislative budget under which a joint committee of the two Houses was required to submit not later than February 15 of each year a legislative budget, including a ceiling of expenditure and estimated over-all Federal receipts for the next year. It was hoped at that time that this provision would solve the problem, that it would bring into such strong relief the outgo and the income of the Federal Government as to retrench the amount of money appropriated and bring it into a reasonable relation with the national income

But from the beginning the plan was singularly unsuccessful. The requirement that a ceiling of expenditure be fixed before hearings could be held, rendered it wholly impracticable. It was in effect a requirement for a court verdict before witnesses could be examined and testimony submitted. On the other hand, if deferred until after hearings had been completed and bills reported, its application came too late to affect the totals.

Every effort was made to comply with the law. On both sides of the aisle we made a sincere and conscientious effort to put it into effect, but it was unworkable. So apparent was it that nothing could be achieved by this method of establishing legislative limitations that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the first chairman of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, in the House, and Senator BRIDGES, the second chairman of the committee, in the Senate, both said emphatically in debate on the floors of their respective Houses that it was impracticable, that it should be abandoned.

Consequently, at the beginning of the present session I introduced a resolution for its repeal. But out of deference to those who were reluctant to abandon hope that eventually it might be made effective I modified the resolution to extend the date of the report of the joint committee from February 15 to May 1. That date is now past and the Congress by its complete disregard of the law has saved the time of 104 of its busiest men and the expenditure of some thousands of dollars which otherwise would have been expended in a futile and useless gesture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, section 138 of the Reorganization Act of 1946 is now a dead letter. But the need which it sought to serve, the problem which gave rise to its enactment are still with us and growing more insistent with the increasing size and complexity of national finance. Some practical method must be found of presenting in one proposal the entire expenditure program for the fiscal year in connection with an authoritative forecast of the national income for that period.

We believe we have now developed such a method. Through a reorganization of its subcommittees, restricting each member to one subcommittee and each subcommittee to one annual supply bill, and through a corresponding readjustment of our committee staff and reporting system, permitting all subcommittees to sit simultaneously, the House Committee on Appropriations has reported to the House and sent to the Senate for the first time in the history of the Congress all annual appropriation bills within approximately 10 weeks from the beginning of the hearings. This was the first step. We had to wait until its practicability could be demonstrated.

We are now in a position to announce that beginning with the next session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations will discontinue the practice which has been in effect since the earliest days of the Congress of reporting appropriations piecemeal in separate, unconnected and uncorrelated individual bills, and will submit the annual appropriations in one consolidated omnibus appropriation bill.

The bill will be reported not later than April 15 of each year. By that time an authoritative forecast of the national income will be available. The prime question before the House when the appropriation bill comes to a vote will be whether to hold expenditures within the national income or vote to exceed the national income and increase the national debt.

In the fierce light of publicity which will be concentrated on that final vote there will be no escape from responsibility. A clear unequivocal record must be made. And public opinion will do the rest. The embodiment of all annual expenditures in one compact bill, with all duplications and conflicts eliminated and with its impact on national credit clearly outlined, will serve to offset the pleas of pressure groups and high-powered lobbies and should save vast sums of money and reduce waste and prodigality to a minimum.

No special enactments or change in rules are necessary in order to provide for the consolidated budget or its consideration in either House. As a matter of fact no Senate responsibility is involved. Under the Constitution all general appropriation bills must originate in the House. And the House Committee on Appropriations is authorized to determine, without conference, the number and form and jurisdiction of the annual appropriation bills.

For example, at the beginning of this session two subcommittees of the House Committee on Appropriations had for many years been reporting the Military appropriation bill and the Naval appropriation bill respectively. Under the authority vested in the committee we combined the two subcommittees which now report out one bill, the armed-service appropriation bill. Likewise at the beginning of the current session, we combined the Subcommittee on Independent Offices and the Subcommittee on Government Corporations. From the consolidation of four bills into two bills it is only a step to the consolidation of all bills into one general bill.

Such a bill will be privileged for consideration under the general rules of the House and will remain the unfinished business until disposed of. It will be considered in Committee of the Whole and after the widest latitude in debate and amendment will be reported to the House for passage. No change in any rule or practice of the House is essential for its consideration and transmission to the Senate.

However, in view of the length of the bill and the money involved it would be perhaps advantageous to make one change in the rule governing the motion to recommit. In order to permit the minority to include in the motion to recommit, items affecting any or all of the several sections comprising the consolidated bill, and in order to insure the minority the opportunity to secure a record vote on its program or any part of its program, the rule under which the present motion to recommit is indivisible should be modified to permit any Member to demand a separate vote on any proposal included in the motion to recommit.

Accordingly, I have today introduced a resolution which has been referred to the Committee on Rules proposing such a modification. It is not essential to the consideration of an omnibus appropriation bill but it would permit a record vote on the minority program and I hope the Committee on Rules will feel warranted in giving it consideration. I might add that I have submitted it to the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and I am under the impression that it meets with his approval.

I do not have to remind the House that one of the many untoward effects of any war, and to an unprecedented degree in the last war, is the development in both the legislative and executive branches of the Government of an expenditure complex, a spending psychology. In the stress of war and the imminent necessity of providing for adequate national defense at all costs, we appropriate and spend with little regard for the sources of income or the possibility of securing results at less expense.

Now that the war is over it is difficult to get back to normal conditions and the exercise of prudent economy. It is hard to begin thinking again in terms of prewar expenditures and to drop from billions down to millions and from millions down to thousands—from dollars down to pennies. And may I say, Mr. Chairman, that in the present emergency in which we find ourselves, with a national debt which approximates a very substantial percentage of our national wealth, and with increasing budget estimates and decreasing revenues, we must begin to count even the pennies. Under present circumstances no economy is so small as to be disregarded.

The consolidated bill considered in juxtaposition with the available income offers an incentive to retrenchment. As a matter of fact it is the only practical method available at this time. We hope we can have the cooperation of every Member of the House on both sides of the aisle in the consideration of the consolidated bill and in the reduction of appropriations to the smallest amounts consistent with sound business and good government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman expect to yield to anyone in the course of his remarks?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I would prefer to yield a little later.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the gentleman has time?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If I have time.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as has been pointed out, carries $50,000,000 for assistance to Greece and Turkey, $350,000,000 for GARIOA and EROA and $4,642,470,000 for ECA, or an over-all total of $5,542,470,000, a reduction of $779,730,000 below the budget estimates.

It provides for the full budget estimate for Greece and Turkey. It makes a 15-percent reduction ($150,000,000) in the budget estimates for GARIOA and EROA. It makes a 12-percent reduction ($629,730,000) in the over-all budget estimates for ECA.

I shall confine my general statement to the ECA item.

Mr. Chairman, I speak as one who has favored ECA from the outset.

Despite its enormous cost, in the face of the threat of world communism, I have believed the program to be vital to America from the standpoint of national security, having in mind our present relationship to the participating nations, including some 270,000,000 people, many of whom think and feel much as we do, many of whom stood shoulder to shoulder with us in World War I, or in World War II, or in both.

I have always believed, however, that we must not attempt more than we can accomplish and that the program must be carried out in the most economical way possible consistent with the recovery needs of the participating nations.

The program will continue. Every government in the world understands this. Congress has so decreed, specifically extending the program for another year and providing for a ceiling on appropriations amounting to some $5,430,000,000 for the period ending June 30, 1950. Within that ceiling appropriations can be made at any time. The only question before us today is the question which we have in respect to every legislative authorization by the Congress, namely, the amount of funds that shall be made available now.

With a view to determining this question your subcommittee spent some three and one-half weeks in detailed hearings. You will find a great many tables of value in the hearings which help to summarize the work of the ECA to date and conditions in the various participating nations of Europe.

You will find, for instance, a table showing allocations, obligations, shipments, and actual payments month by month. You will find a table showing the dollar deficiencies computed for each of the 18 participating countries. You will find a list of commodities to be provided on an over-all basis and by country under the proposed program. You will find a table showing the prices used by ECA in fixing the cost of those commodities.

You will also find tables in respect to each of the participating nations giving populations and areas, standards of living compared with prewar standards, production and agricultural indexes in terms of the prewar period, hours of work and rates of production, capital investment programs, budget surpluses and deficits, taxation in terms of percentage of national incomes, currency values, exports and imports, dollar investments, non-ECA financing possibilities, drawing rights, and the use of counterpart funds. There is a wealth of information embodied in the hearings.

When I look back to the presentation made to your committee a year ago, I feel like expressing my appreciation to Mr. Hoffman for the vast improvement made in presenting the facts this year. I congratulate him in this connection, and also upon the contribution toward recovery which his organization has made in this critical period of the world's history.

During the first 12 months of the ECA program there has been real progress made toward recovery in western Europe. No one can read the hearings without appreciating that fact.

Among other things, it is reported that the output of factories and mines, speaking of Europe generally, is nearly equal to that of prewar days. The output of steel, if we except western Germany, is 30 percent above the prewar output. Electric power production is 40 percent more than before the war. Crops, in general, although 1947 was a bad year, are reported up 20 percent from that year. Exports, if we again exclude western Germany, are reported up 20 percent as compared with 1947.

The hearings deal with each participating country in detail.

There is still much to be done, however, Mr. Chairman, if Europe is to be put on a self-supporting basis. The record emphasizes that there will be some 27,000,000 more people to feed and clothe in 1952 than in 1938; that property destroyed by war must be restored; and that exports must be increased by some $3,000,000,000 over prewar figures to offset the loss of income from investments abroad and other so-called invisible items in the over-all balance of payments.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, budgets must be balanced with reasonable tax burdens on the people, currencies must be stabilized in realistic terms, capital investment programs must be regulated so as to avoid inflation, and the European economy, insofar as practicable, must be integrated. These are fundamental to the success of the program.

I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the dollar needs for each country are presented this year in terms of so-called illustrative balances of payments. You will find the computations in the hearings for the various nations concerned. Speaking generally, the balance-of-payments tables seek to determine the amount of imports essential to a given country that cannot be paid for out of the exports of that country or be obtained from nondollar sources. The resulting figure, the so-called dollar deficiency, is the yardstick used, subject to certain modifications, to represent the necessary ECA financing.

I have always been very skeptical of this dollar deficiency yardstick.

In the first place, it is not an accurate yardstick because you no sooner determine by using the yardstick what the needs of a given country are than you find that there are drawing rights in favor of that country or against that country which make the original figure rather meaningless.

In the second place, Mr. Chairman, the yardstick, in my judgment, is unsound in principle. It is unsound in principle because it places the emphasis on results rather than on causes, on symptoms of the disease rather than the disease itself. If it were taken at face value, it would place a premium on faulty domestic policies, upon the failure to do in this or that country what should be done with a view to making the plan a success. The more faulty the domestic policies the greater, generally speaking, becomes the dollar deficiency, and the greater the apparent need for ECA dollars.

I cannot but recall the remark of a distinguished European some time ago in this connection, when he said in substance, "Give me control over the fiscal and exchange policies of any country in Europe, promise to meet the dollar deficiency in my balance of payments, and I will show you the dollar deficiency."

Back in the twenties, as some of you recall, I put in some 4 years in Europe in the office of the agent general for Reparation Payments, which was concerned, among other things, with the economic recovery of Germany after World War I. There were somewhat similar organizations in Austria and in Hungary at that time, with which we were in frequent contact. In those days the emphasis was always placed on the fundamentals to which I have referred. The balance of payments was incidental and was supposed to respond to other factors.

Mr. Chairman, unbalanced budgets, overvalued currencies, limiting exports, too great investment in capital programs in reference to savings, lack of production, and in this instance lack of international cooperation and mutual aid—you will find them all discussed in the hearings—these can prevent the program from achieving the success that is so vital in terms of world peace.

It is to be hoped that the months immediately ahead will indicate substantial progress in dealing with these fundamental elements in the over-all program.

Now Mr. Chairman, just a word as to dollars and cents.

The amount made available for direct aid during the first 15 months of the program ending June 30, 1949, was approximately $5,000,000,000.

During the first 12 months of operations ending April 2, 1949, $3,000,000,000 was required for reported shipments and $3,700,000,000 for estimated shipments.

This bill provides $4,642,470,000 on an over-all basis for the period of 15 months ending June 30, 1950, or $3,568,470,000 for the period of 12 months ending June 30, 1950.

Based on a total of $3,000,000,000 of reported shipments in the first 12 months, ending April 2, 1949, we arrive at an average figure of $250,000,000 a month during that period. Based on a total of $3,700,000,000 of estimated shipments during that same period, we arrived at an average figure of $315,000,000 a month for the period, with a pipeline of at least $1,200,000,000 adequate in terms of actual experience to take care of the months of May, June and July in the current fiscal year.

The suggested appropriation of $4,642,470,000 for the 15-month period beginning on April 2, 1949, and ending July 30 of 1950, will permit monthly shipments at the rate of $310,000,000 a month, leaving a pipeline at the end of that period of $1,200,000,000 or in the alternative shipments at the rate of $390,000,000 a month if the pipeline be exhausted during that time.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, recovery is proceeding in Europe with increased momentum; large balances of counterpart funds have yet to be expended; some $145,000,000 available, for guaranties for private enterprise in Europe have yet to be utilized; as recovery proceeds non-ECA financing should increase rather than decrease; the appointment of a high commissioner to Germany who will control both ECA and GARIOA funds may well result in savings; and prices for commodities are generally falling.

The majority members of your subcommittee felt that price declines alone justified a $182,000,000 reduction in the over-all request. Frankly I think this estimate is a conservative one in the light of future markets for grains and other commodities on regular exchanges and support prices set for some of our major agricultural crops.

These and other general considerations should be taken into account in considering the picture as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, I want to give the House one quotation from Mr. Hoffman. At page 687 of the hearings, he makes the following statement:

> Our entire planning has been directed to one and only one thing, that is, the termination of this program on June 30, 1952. And furthermore, we have made it clear to all the European nations involved, almost from the first day we started business, that the program of aid had to be on a descending scale; that the largest volume of aid would come in the first year, and a considerably lower amount in the second, third, and fourth years—each year a lower amount. That is understood; that is accepted by every government in Europe as a fact.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it is understood by all the nations concerned that the program is to taper off. It must taper off, of course, if there is not going to be a violent transition at the conclusion of the program in June of 1952.

In the light of this statement, in the light of actual experience to date, in the light of the general factors to which I have referred, it is difficult for me to believe that we cannot safely impose the cut recommended in this bill—a cut calling for a reduction of 12 percent in the over-all budget estimates for ECA; a cut representing a reduction from about $5,000,000,000 to $4,642,700,000 on a 15-month basis, or a reduction from $3,700,000,000 to $3,568,470,000 on a 12-month basis; a cut which permits shipments averaging $310,000,000 monthly against estimated shipments in the first 12 months of the plan averaging $315,000,000 a month; a cut which would leave at the end of fiscal year 1950 a pipe line of some $1,200,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, in view of the tremendous importance of the program; in view of the desirability if possible of unanimity in action at this particular time; in view of the assurances which I understand Mr. Hoffman has given to the effect that he will do his utmost to make the appropriation carried in this bill cover the full 15-month period; and in view of my confidence in him I am not going to oppose the proposed amendment giving him the leeway he desires.

I want to see whatever is necessary provided insofar as we can provide it safely. In view, however, of the extremely grave conditions by which we are confronted at home our contribution must be held to a minimum.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, the tremendous importance of the success of the ECA program; it must succeed. I realize also, however, the tremendous importance of the economic and financial stability of America.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, every nation participating in the ECA program has a tremendous stake in that stability.

To impair the financial and economic stability of America would be a tragedy not only for America but for the entire western world.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McGRATH].

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, there is but one question presented in the bill under consideration, the same question that concerned your subcommittee in its deliberations: Is the amount submitted in the bill a wise and judicious appropriation to implement the action of the House of Representatives?

On April 19 this body adopted in principle the theory that the ECA must be continued. The enactment of Public Law 47 was an unequivocal expression of a deliberate determination by the Congress that America should participate in the economic rehabilitation of Europe. In considering this from an appropriation viewpoint, your subcommittee was guided by the thought that we should allocate only such an amount as would adequately implement the statute and accomplish the will of Congress, keeping always in mind that the sum thus made available for the maintenance of democracy would be prudent and sound.

The argument will be raised that we have not perhaps appropriated for this or that domestic project, but I respectfully submit that in appropriations the test should be, Is the amount now allocated the proper amount for the particular purpose? And then the sum total of all appropriations must be balanced against our natitonal economy. To argue that we did or did not appropriate money for a particular cause that might or might not be wise would merely open the door to an endless and fruitless discussion of each and every one of these items. Your committee, therefore, has kept in mind your recommendations of last April, and has kept in mind the underlying reason and cause for your action: the realization that only through reestablishing Europe on a sound economic footing can we halt the onslaught of communistic Russia. Bear this in mind: No nation in the history of the world has acquired control and domination over so large an area and of so large a number of people at so little cost. Russia has devoured Yugoslavia, Hungary, Estonia, Latvia, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, and others with the loss of hardly a soldier and at a minimum financial cost. This was accomplished by internal unrest fomented by fifth columns and augmented by disorganized national economics. The Red tide swept at its full flood to the very gates of Italy. It was feared by many—and I daresay this fear was shared by not a few members of this body—that Italy, too, would be engulfed in the crimson deluge.

But the people of Italy, inspired by their faith in the American brand of democracy as evidenced by our ECA program, raised a dike constructed of faith and courage, and dammed the red raging flood of destruction. The cruel red waters beat furiously yet against this dam. Dare we lower it by 15 percent?

The European recovery program has been a success. The participating countries have a renewed faith in their ability to solve their internal problems and they recognize the aid and guidance our Government has given to them. These countries have made great progress in expanding industrial and agricultural production. Industrial plants which had been destroyed either entirely or partially today are rebuilt. Men and women are finding employment, homes are being reestablished, and in the hearts of these people there is the realization that Uncle Sam has made all this possible.

The balancing of a nation's budget is one of its first steps toward recovery. The ECA has insisted that these budgets gradually be brought into line. Some nations whose tax structures have been archaic and poorly administered have sought the aid of tax experts in our country so that the tax burden can be justly spread over all the people of a given land.

Exports which will create employment have gradually been improved so that it can be predicted that in 1952 this program can be ended and Europe will be on a self-supporting basis.

The standard of living of the people has risen as evidenced by the chart on page 67 of the testimony which shows that most of the countries are approximating the level of 1938. It must be borne in mind, however, that this was well below the American standard at that time, and far below our present standard of living.

It has been submitted that economic conditions have not been improved in Italy by the ECA.

We have allotted to Italy from June 1948 to March 1949 $349,000,000 and have loaned to that country $42,000,000; which is roughly 90 percent in grants and 10 percent in loans. This year Italy will receive about $530,000,000. Should we not then look at the picture Italy presented before the Marshal plan came into being? We all recall how Communist-inspired traitors attempted to tear Italy asunder, to halt its production, and to sabotage and destroy. Their objective in Italy, as it is in every other nation on the face of the earth, was to undermine the confidence of the people in their institutions, to destroy their courage and faith, their hope and their honor. Once this is accomplished, Soviet Russia adds another link in the chains she has forged for world domination. Consider, too, how bruised by the cruel heel of fascism and bled white by the disastrous war, these good but unfortunate people were left floundering in a morass of despair with no helping hand offered to them save by America. True, Russia offered the hammer and the sickle. Russia offered economic and moral slavery to a liberty-loving and honorable people. Would the opponents to this plan return Italy to those dark postwar days or would they not rather see that lovely land as it is now with a stabilized national government, with its national pride reestablished, and hope again blooming in the breasts of her people? What would the opponents to this plan offer? What do they offer?

Yes, there is unemployment in Italy to a number of approximately 1,700,000. Yes, there is an antiquated tax system which has placed the burden on the low-income groups and to a large extent exempted the wealthy. The Italian Government recognizes these facts and is preparing a new tax system whereunder all men will stand equally before the law. They have men here studying our tax program so that improvements can be made in their own. Further, they have been successful in the last few months in collecting huge sums from wealthy tax evaders, and this action has been sustained in their courts.

Italy's most vexatious problems currently are unemployment and housing. The testimony contains the answer to my direct question as to what was being done by the ECA and the Italian Government on these matters. I quote:

> The Italian Government and ECA feel very strongly that there ought to be a considerable acceleration in the rate of construction of new housing accommodations. We have indicated to the Italian Government our strong support for that kind of program, and the Italian Government hopes greatly to increase the rate of housing construction in the new fiscal year.

To abandon or even to curtail this program now would certainly add to Italy's unemployment, aggravate her housing problem, and serve to weaken an important cog in the economic machinery of Europe.

Now I would like to pay tribute to the Government of Italy because it has been one of the leading forces pressing for economic cooperation as well as closer political ties with the democracies. Italy has vigorously sought economic union with France. She has worked assiduously in negotiations for trade agreements with her neighbors.

We must never forget in looking at this picture that the Italian Government is now only about a year and a half old and that she is striving for and is actually reestablishing the principles of democratic government which had been denied to her for almost a quarter of a century.

It has been said by our ECA Chief in Italy, who summed it up concisely when he said:

> Wherever I have gone in Italy I have found a deep and sincere appreciation of American aid on the part of Italians in all walks of life. All except the Communists who follow the party line of obstruction and chaos, reveal a heart-warming understanding of and a profound gratitude for American assistance in this joint effort to preserve the western way of life.

The ECA has a twofold program: Immediate assistance and the solution of long-range problems. The end of the war found Italy in a chaotic and pathetic condition. All means of communications were utterly disrupted or destroyed; manufacturing plants suffered the same fate; port facilities were wrecked; housing suffered tremendous losses; a flourishing merchant marine was completely wiped out; the colonies were gone; and the general state of the Italian economy was completely prostrated. Disease and famine were reaping a tremendous harvest, hope and faith in a better future had disappeared, and the people of Italy were easy prey for malignant forces, revolution and communism. The immediate objective of ECA which was to bring order where there was chaos, hope in place of despondency, and life in place of paralysis and prostration, has been fully realized at this early stage. Italy is back on its feet. Industrial plants are working, means of communication have been almost completely restored to its prewar level, port facilities are in reasonably good order, food is available, inflation has been stopped, communism has been defeated, and a fairly stable government has been established. All this is due primarily to ECA without which Italy today would surely be behind the iron curtain.

The ECA has been a successful undertaking and its dividends will be paid to the American people now and in the years to come by the democratic forces of Europe. It may be argued that we are spending money for foreign lands and foreign people. We will be questioned: "Where is the money coming from?" Certain groups will cry out against this appropriation because they have orders to keep clear the path for Soviet conquest. We owe them no answer. By their obvious and overt treachery they have forfeited all right to query us. But to the well-intentioned and economy-minded among us who raise this question we can only say that the money is coming from the American workingman's pocket and from the pocketbooks of American women. It is coming from the great middle class American men and women and it is coming from the wealthy. We recognize that the ECA and the Atlantic Pact can stop Russia. The American fathers and mothers do not want another war if it can be avoided. They will willingly pay taxes to avoid war because they know that if war comes not only will they pay greater taxes than this bill provides but they will pay in wealth infinitely more precious than gold or silver.

Mr. Chairman, I wish it were possible to take every penny of this money and appropriate it for heart and cancer research, to appropriate it for social welfare and the comfort of our people, to make our harbors better and to harness our water power, but in this world at this moment that cannot be done. If this Marshall plan had not come into being, all of western Europe would now be under the heel of the Kremlin. All of the hope and ambition of the people would have been crushed under the worst dictatorship in history. I care not if there are a few who will not appreciate what America has done but I believe that the great mass of people in Europe know that it is the United States of America that has saved civilization. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we should appropriate this money and we should pass this bill so that the countries of Europe which have given so much in the centuries past in every cultural field, and whose sons and daughters have built this Nation that is America will realize that we have not failed them.

By our action today, we will serve notice upon the Communist state, "You have gone far enough. Your aggression is ended and it is stopped by the democratic forces in the world."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, one of the real values in having to extend the authorization of a program once a year, and then to appropriate another year's funds for its operations, is that it compels us to examine the whole enterprise with greater thoroughness and concentrated attention than is ordinarily possible. We have to take a long look at where we have been, where we are, and where we want to go.

It may be worth while for a moment to go back to the psychology that prevailed here a little over a year ago when the European recovery program was initiated. It was described correctly as a calculated risk. It was recognized that if the United States did not carry out such a program of assistance to these countries in western Europe, they could not possibly recover; one by one they would go down from strains within or pressures from without. On the other hand, if we adopted the proposed program and carried it out efficiently there was a fair chance that Euroupe could be restored as an area of human freedom and genuine self-government from which eventually those explosive ideas could penetrate back through the iron curtain. If we did not adopt such a program, there was no hope; if we did, there was some hope. Therefore, naturally, we were inclined to take the latter course. But at the same time there were grave uncertainties and anxieties that made most of us hesitate and caused some to vote against it. What if it didn't succeed?

I remember discussing this on a forum with another member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He said, "It is better to try it even though we fail than not try at all." To that I took strong exception. I thought it better not to try it at all than to try it and then fail. That would do no one any good except Russia. To make this vast effort weakens our own economy to some degree. If in 1952 we were to find that the recipient nations still were not able to stand on their own feet, our effort would not have done them any permanent good and would have done us great damage, in a kind of world where somebody has got to stay free, somebody has got to remain strong and solvent, in order to hold aloft the torch of freedom to which enslaved peoples can at least look with hope until the day comes when they can once more rally to it. The forces of freedom do exist in all countries, even though silenced in many areas for the present. It is no help to them if we go down, too.

I came to the decision to support the program after a long difficult struggle. I concluded that if there was better than a 50–50 chance of success we should make the effort. If there was not at least a 50–50 chance of success, we should not because we would be weakening the United States and its solvency without any compensating increase in their strength. If we could succeed in helping these nations get on their feet economically and strong enough to present a barrier to further extension of the glacier of tyranny moving out of the Soviet Union, it would add to our own security; it would allow us to reduce expenditures for armaments at home; and it would preserve and enlarge the area of freedom in the world with which we could expect to trade in the future. Those were all genuine advantages. We had to weigh them against the disadvantages of possible failure.

A year ago when the program was before us I said there were five criteria which it seemed to me had to be met to give a better than 50–50 chance of success, and I should like to look at them again for a moment to determine the degree to which we have succeeded in meeting them.

The first and probably the most important was this: That the 16 nations of western Europe and the 3 zones of western Germany be willing to make a far more vigorous attack upon their own economic problems, both individually and collectively, than they had made up to that time. In their individual effort we have to give almost every country a high grade. They have done as well or even better than anyone had a reasonable right to expect, although we hoped, of course, they would do it. Once they were given assurance of continuing support from the one nation in the world that was in a position to help them, it became apparent, as had been predicted, that they had resources within themselves far greater in magnitude than was generally appreciated.

The thing that was necessary, as Secretary Harriman put it in our hearings a year ago, was to get their stalled economic machines off center. After all, the $17,000,000,000 we contemplated putting in represented less than 5 percent of the total economic activity of those countries. Our aid was an attempt to get it started. Once it was started, would it go ahead under its own momentum?

Individually, the nations have done on the whole an extraordinarily good job. They have tightened their belts, they have improved their fiscal systems and tax collections, they have resisted the temptation to do what the United Kingdom did with the British loan, squander about half of it for nonessential consumer goods to make the people temporarily more happy and comfortable without getting at the basic problems of restoring and modernizing their productive plant, increasing their man-hour output, reducing their costs. Collectively, the record is not so good. Trade barriers have not been reduced and intra-European trade increased as much as hoped. This will mean trouble in the years ahead unless corrected, because western Europe cannot become self-sustaining without rapid progress in economic unification.

The second criterion was that the program be put under the best administrators America could furnish. Probably coequal in value with our money is the managerial know-how that America has to contribute to these countries. Efficient administration of such a program could not be expected from any of the regular departments. You will remember that was one of our fights. Some wanted to put it all under the State Department, or split it up between several departments. Others of us resisted that because the old-line agencies are not set up to administer this sort of program which must be flexible, temporary, somewhat experimental. They are organized on the seniority basis, where length of service in other types of work is the controlling factor rather than fitness for this particular job. The program had to be put in the hands of the best managers, the best administrators, America has. I want to pay tribute to the President for appointing Paul Hoffman and giving him quite a free hand in choosing the best men he could recruit from our most successful industries. They have gone into these countries under ticklish circumstances and supervised the program with great skill and tact, but with great firmness. First, through the ECA mission in each country they have scrutinized rigorously that nation's imports from the United States and other hard currency countries, insisting that it resist the temptation to use the dollars we were furnishing, to buy luxury goods or semiluxury goods or even goods that would improve their immediate standard of living but were not absolutely necessary. Instead, the dollars must be used to the greatest degree possible for machines and machine tools, for fertilizer and fertilizer plants, for generators and power plants, for railroads and mining equipment, and so forth, that would increase the country's ability to get going and stay going under its own power. Our missions also scrutinized the imports from nondollar areas and tried with the utmost urgency to persuade them to import as much as possible from the areas where their own soft currency was usable.

Again, the ECA missions have examined their exports and urged them to export everything they could conceivably spare from their own economy to the dollar countries to earn every single bit of hard currency possible.

Our people also had to work on the problem of increasing inter- and intra-European trade. If each country should try just to restore itself as a separate economic unit, the program could not succeed, just as most of the States of the United States could not become economically self-sufficient or prosperous apart from the other States. We could exist, but we could not have a high standard of living if each of our 48 States were a separate, independent economic unit, with a separate currency, tariff barriers, and discriminations in favor of some and against others. Mr. Hoffman's men have done their best to get the countries to break down the barriers within Europe and increase trade so that there would be greater total economic activity.

Again, the missions are helping them increase their productive capacity, in many cases, brilliantly. For example, introduction of hybrid corn into Italy produced an increase in production by almost half in 1 year. It is the know-how America is making available to the countries which, as much as anything else, has increased not just their production, but their productivity.

Again, the ECA missions had to review the budgets of these countries, and their fiscal systems; had to help them get more money from their own people, reduce the inflationary pressures, stabilize their currency, and so forth.

I go over these things merely to indicate how complicated and difficult a problem it was and is. There never was anything like it in history. When we look back upon it after 13½ months, it is hardly short of a miracle how much recovery has already taken place, and even more important, how firm a foundation is being established from which a greater and more permanent recovery can take place in the future.

Today the nations of western Europe are about where our Thirteen Colonies were when Ben Franklin told them they simply had to learn to hang together better than they had in the past, or they would hang separately. The choice of the western European countries now is not between getting together or not getting together. They will either move rapidly into some sort of closer economic unification and political federation or they will be taken over one by one and forced into even closer union, under compulsion, as the countries of eastern Europe have been. They will either get together voluntarily and remain free, or they will be gotten together involuntarily and become slaves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. JUDD. Thank you. That is the single biggest problem the ECA has for the coming year, to push ahead with vigor in getting the recipient countries to develop their own resources fully and at the same time increase the economic activity of the whole area so that the whole may become stronger and out of that the individual parts become stronger.

The third condition which we said a year ago must be met to give ERP a 50–50 chance of success, in addition to inducing and assisting them to make, both individually and collectively, a more determined and effective attack on their problems; and setting up an administrative agency, which would be able to handle the program with utmost efficiency and flexibility, was that we in the United States be willing to put in enough to win. I felt then and still feel, that for us to put in even 10 percent less than enough to win might jeopardize the success of the whole plan. In order to provide a cushion which they might need in the case of unforeseen difficulties, such as crop failure, I would rather err on the side of appropriating a little bit more than they expected to get or than we expected them to need, than to err on the side of giving a little less and perhaps cramping it so that they could not work with flexibility and confidence and assurance. I want to congratulate the Appropriations Committee for once more providing funds that ought to be adequate. I think the amount in the bill will be all that they will have to have for the full 15 months. I think they can do the job on that, and I think they ought to do it on that. But I do not want to foreclose the possibility that they might have to have more in a shorter period of time. The compromise which has been worked out provides the needed cushion by allowing TCA to use the amount in one and a half months' less time if that should become necessary. If a doctor has a patient with pneumonia, it is not good sense to say, "Well, I will give you 1,000,000 units of penicillin, but if you are not well then, I will not give you any more."

There is no use in giving any penicillin at all unless he is prepared to give whatever is necessary to produce recovery. I am convinced that if we are prepared to spend more, if needed, it will actually cost us less. If we try to hold it down to less than needed and hamper the program's operation accordingly, it is likely in the long run to cost us more—or else end in failure.

The fourth condition which I felt a year ago, when we adopted this program, it is necessary to fulfill if it is to succeed, is that we regard it not as an end, but as a step in the process of working toward a perfected world organization, preferably by strengthening and improving the structure of the United Nations, so that it can take over this sort of job and protect free peoples from aggression whenever and wherever it develops. We have to do it in this immediate emergency because there is no other country in a position to help other countries resist Soviet pressure. The UN is not yet strong enough. But we cannot carry such a load indefinitely. We do not have the strength nor the resources nor the wisdom. Therefore, we must look upon this program as a temporary stop-gap, a stepping-stone, to that larger goal. We must push ahead vigorously toward a strengthened United Nations which will be able to assume the burden of resisting aggression from whatever source. We need a world organization which, under law and defined limitations, may step in to help nations in emergencies just as this representative Congress helps States in the event of domestic emergencies or communities which meet with some disaster.

A year ago the program was presented in terms of economic assistance. There were some who thought we must consider it in terms of military assistance also. I said here in March of last year:

> Mr. Chairman, no one, I think, can rightly justify this bill on a basis of just humanitarianism or charity. The committee has heard me say on other occasions beginning in early 1947 that such measures as this could be justified in this present world situation and in the present straitened state of America's finances and supplies only if they are essential from the standpoint of the security of the Nation. This is primarily a national defense bill.
> We had hoped it would be an alternative to a military policy. Six months ago it perhaps could have been. But world events and Communist aggression have advanced so rapidly that now it probably is more in support of a military policy than an alternative to one.

That brings me to the North Atlantic Pact. It is a mutual defense program in support of this economic program. It is based on the recognition that the European nations have gone about as far and as fast as they can without greater freedom from fear. As long as they know that the Russian bear can come across their borders at any time, and therefore fear that it may, they are not going to bring their savings and reserves of money or supplies out of hiding; they are not going to bring back the capital they have sent abroad and put it into productive enterprises; they are not going to enlarge their plants, make more jobs, expand their responsibilities. Unless they can see their way ahead 3, 5, even 10 years, with reasonable confidence, naturally they will be very wary and careful and will not utilize fully the resources which are available to them. Yet they must do all these things if Europe is to recover.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentleman. Therefore, something like the Atlantic Pact is necessary to give them a sense of security, a sense of certainty that if the bear should move against them after our own forces have been returned from Europe, they will not be left helpless against its aggression, just as they know now that an attack by the Soviet Union or anybody else on our garrison in Berlin or any of our other forces over there would bring prompt and positive action by the United States. Their only hope of achieving military security, just as their only hope of achieving economic recovery, is by making a most vigorous collective attack upon the problem—with our active support and assistance. The economic and defense programs are both necessary if either is to succeed. Eleven countries in the North Atlantic area have gone into the pact together with the United States. This is fine as far as it goes, but if we were to stop there, the effect might well be to draw a kind of circle around us 12 as having "a common heritage and civilization" and giving other countries the feeling that we regard them as less civilized, or less important and drive the rest of the world away from us while drawing the chosen few closer. We must not by default regarding the United Nations, or undue emphasis on the Atlantic Pact give the impression that we are setting up an exclusive club and that other peoples are not quite worthy to associate with us, so they are to be left on the outside. Who is the eager and powerful leader of those on the outside? The Soviet Union. Unless we move ahead from this limited compact to a larger open-end compact in which all nations which so desire can join in an attempt to get security for all through mutual protection and economic cooperation, those nations that are not included are likely to fall under the control and guidance of the Soviet Union. It is possible that unless things are most skillfully handled we may drive more into Russia's arms than we save from them and thus wind up with less security rather than more. So I feel even more strongly than a year ago that it is necessary to go beyond ERP and the Atlantic Pact if they are to have a 50–50 chance of success. We must exercise strong, positive leadership to the utmost of our ability in an urgent effort to get this whole program expanded to a larger concept of world organization, including the regional organizations, operating under law to maintain peace and prevent aggression.

That brings me to the last criterion that I believe we must meet if we are to succeed in Europe, namely, that Asia too, must be kept free, that is, out of Communist control. We endanger the security and economic recovery of Europe if we do not give more attention and more successful attention than we have given heretofore to events in the Far East and the forces struggling for dominance there. It does not do any good to patch up the hole in the front end of the boat unless we also manage to get plugged the hole in the rear end of the boat. A Communist flood pouring through either will sink us. I must postpone discussion of the vast and even more complicated problem of how to keep China and thereby Asia free until another occasion. We cannot, however, ignore its crucial importance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I want to pay tribute to the Chairman of my committee and to the other committee members. I enjoyed my work on the committee very much, a fact which is attributable in great measure to the people who sat on the committee. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] the chairman, did an excellent job. He handled the hearings with great ability and intelligence, and made certain that every matter of consequence had thorough consideration.

It was a great pleasure to sit with the gentleman from New York, Judge MCGRATH, on the majority side. His long experience on the bench served us well in his patience, his analysis and his wisdom.

I enjoyed very much working with the gentleman on the minority side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH]. It was a real experience to watch them in action, to follow the thoroughness with which they work.

New Members of Congress frequently are subject to feelings of frustration. It takes time to acquire the somewhat hardened fatalistic attitude, which marks the experienced Member, and until one has been through the mill a number of times, he takes keenly what he considers to be a miscarriage of the legislative process.

I must confess to that feeling of frustration now when we are considering the ECA appropriations bill.

For nearly 4 weeks the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee held hearings on the Marshall plan. We studied, examined, and critically scrutinized every aspect of the European recovery program. We realized every expenditure of the Government must be carefully weighed and every nonessential expenditure eliminated.

We considered the effect of price reductions on the program and reduced the estimate by a figure which we believed represented an accurate estimate of the effect of lower prices on the cost of the program during the coming year. We investigated thoroughly ECA's estimates of commodities needed from dollar areas by the participating countries and the thoroughness of the screening methods employed by ECA in arriving at them. On the basis of this comprehensive review of the program, the subcommittee brought in a figure for the fiscal year of 1950 which was lower by $272,700,000 than that authorized by the Bureau of the Budget. We felt that this was the absolute maximum amount by which the appropriation could be reduced without seriously delaying the recovery program and without a costly setback to the recovery which has already been achieved to date.

And yet, in spite of our thorough hearings, in spite of the hours, the days, the weeks we put in, painstakingly listening to the many witnesses who appeared before us, checking the enormous amount of financial data submitted—all this effort is brushed aside in the name of economy. A blanket, across-the-board meat-axe cut of 15 percent is approved. Why appoint a subcommittee? Why hold hearings? Why go to the vast expense of recalling witneses from all parts of the globe, when such arbitrary procedure is to become the action of this Congress? I am fully cognizant of the arguments advanced, that we are in a declining economy and that we must retrench.

I, too, am in favor of the economical operation of our governmental program, but I certainly am not in favor of retrenchment where it may very well do irreparable harm to our domestic economy and jeopardize our position in responsible world leadership.

Last month we heard the Foreign Affairs Committee describe on this floor the significant achievements by ECA in starting western Europe on the road back to economic recovery. Those speeches described the new investments, the building of new plants, the expansion and modernization of old plants, the mechanization of farms, the housing programs and many other projects of economic activity and expansion which have been instituted during the past 12 months under the stimulus of the European recovery program. Perhaps the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee spoke too eloquently or perhaps they overemphasized the first year's achievements and did not sufficiently explain to the House the relationship of the achievements already made to the ultimate objectives of the recovery program. For this cut would do much to gut the program before European recovery is achieved.

The coming year is the most crucial year in the entire effort. We undertook this program originally, not entirely out of altruism, but because we realized that the presence of a healthy economy in Europe was absolutely indispensable to the continuation of a healthy economy in the United States—that if world recession of trade with its resultant political repercussions was to be avoided, the people of the United States must reestablish the basis for a sound, normal trade between Europe and the Western Hemisphere. I submit that this program was not designed primarily for the benefit of the Europeans, but was designed as much to advance the self-interest of the people of the United States. And when we cut into this program so seriously as to threaten its ultimate success, we are tampering with the economic and military security of the people of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that during the past year by virtue of the tremendous assistance rendered by the United States some production levels in western Europe have come up to and even exceeded production levels of 1938. Yet the living standards of the peoples of most of the participating countries still lag far below the prewar living standards. Some of the countries most seriously devastated by the war still find themselves on little more than a subsistence level. In several of the more fortunate parts of Europe which were relatively untouched by the war, the living standards are closer to those of prewar. However, any talk of prewar production levels is entirely misleading. The increased population in Europe during the past 10 years, the devastation wrought in factories and homes and the consequent need of replacements, the widespread obsolescence of plants, tools, equipment and machinery which has accumulated during and since the war, and the loss of important overseas earnings makes necessary that the production levels of Europe must far exceed those of 1938 before it can be accurately said that economic recovery has been achieved.

I had assumed that there would be no need to discuss the merits of the ECA program. I had assumed that this Congress had already approved that program by its passage of the authorization bill. However, this curtailment in the funds is necessary to give realistic implementation to the operation of the program makes me wonder whether we are not in fact reversing that approval.

Our conception of economic recovery must envision a western Europe which is able to stand on its own feet, capable of producing and importing the commodities necessary to maintain itself. It is essential for these countries to be able to import the commodities produced in the United States which they need to maintain their economies and to be able to pay for those imports with dollars which they earn by selling goods and services to the Western Hemisphere. We intend to reestablish in western Europe a normal market for American commodities, a market which but for Marshall plan dollars would be almost entirely extinguished today because of the lack of dollars in Europe and the inability of the ERP countries to earn dollars which they can spend in the United States. Members of this House are receiving letters from constituents asking why they are unable to export to Europe goods which they normally exported before the war. Many of these producers and exporters ask why they cannot receive export subsidies from ECA to enable them to ship their exportable surpluses abroad. The plain fact is that there are not enough dollars available. Only if ECA dollars are efficiently used to promote recovery in Europe as quickly as possible can these normal export markets for United States producers be reestablished.

Early in this session we passed a program to promote reciprocal trade. With whom is it proposed that we shall trade? The products of this country must be paid for in dollars. Our people will not take pounds, or franks, or marks, or lire, or guilders. They want to be paid in dollars and will continue to demand payment in dollars until confidence is restored in the validity of foreign currencies. That is the aim of ECA—to put the European nations in a position so that ultimately they can trade with us—that they can earn enough dollars so that they may buy our products.

Now, what are we doing? Just as we are getting a recovery momentum started, getting new plants and factories under way, getting a flow of new machinery into the pipeline to Europe, rebuilding the confidence of European business men and workers in their economic and political systems so that this great recovery effort could go forward, some economy-minded Members of this body decide to slash this program to the bone. There is a point beyond which this aid is of no use. It is the old story of too little, too late, throwing a 10-foot rope to the man 15 feet offshore. If we do not believe in this program, let us kill it entirely and do it quickly. Let us not strangle it slowly because that is more painful and will be much more expensive to all of us.

A substantial portion of this reduction will come out of the standard of living of the peoples of the participating countries. The peoples of Europe, who are genuinely seeking to build their productive facilities will tighten their belts; they will economize first on consumer items such as cereals, tobacco, fats and oils, and cotton for clothing before they will sacrifice recovery items such as machinery and tools and raw materials. This means that we will be pushing the living standard down after we have worked hard to raise it. This means that we are willing to risk destroying the increase in morale on the part of the people of western Europe which we have been carefully building over the past year.

I often hear the statement that the United States is facing a period of mounting surpluses. Yet we are at one stroke cutting into an appropriation which in the short run would help move American commodities to Europe and in the long run is designed to rebuild our permanent export markets. It seems to me that this is an illogical and unrealistic kind of economy.

About 5 weeks ago we voted almost $16,000,000,000 for a military budget. Where was the economy drive then? And yet, in this program, which to my mind is even more important to our national security, because it builds democracy, which is essential to our position in a friendly world, we retrench.

Let me read you a portion of the speech made by one of our truly great statesmen, Sumner Welles, which he delivered before the Rochester Institute of International Affairs on December 11, 1948:

> The overshadowing issue is whether an American foreign policy, which is formulated primarily from the military and strategic viewpoint, which regards force or the threat of force as its sole effective instruments, which envisages little more than the need to check Russia, can prevail in a contest with a force which is so eminently dynamic as the force of Soviet communism, backed as it is by the manpower and the resources of the vast Russian Empire. We have every reason to fear that even though actual war may be averted, the United States will be engaged in a losing fight, unless American foreign policy becomes the instrument of a democracy which is quite as dynamic as communism, unless that policy offers the peoples of the earth the positive assurance that the United States seeks collective security rather than national aggrandizement.

We have successfully won the peoples of Europe because we have given them the opportunity for security, peace of mind, and hope for the future. We have helped remove the threat of hunger, unemployment, and mass starvation, and in so doing have eliminated the master propaganda weapon. We have so revitalized the will of these peoples to maintain democratc governments that a series of political and diplomatic defeats have been administered to the Russians in the cold war.

A few days ago the Secretary of State left for Paris. When he left, the United States was in the most advantageous political position with Russia that we have been in since the end of the war. That was true then, but I seriously doubt if it is true today. I suspect that our action has done more to embarrass the Secretary of State, to unsettle the minds of our European allies, and to encourage the Russians than any single incident of the past months. A week ago the nations of western Europe felt that their hopes for economic recovery were secure and certain. Today they cannot have that same feeling with any certainty. A week ago they felt their economic and military alliance with the United States was a bulwark upon which their positions in Europe rested. Today they must be seriously shaken.

It seems to me that those who have blindly gone overboard in the name of economy have forgotten that we still have commitments to the people of this Nation and of the world in which we live. While some reappraisal may be necessary with time and change, we cannot renege on our obligation to those who depend upon us.

Economy must be tempered by reality. Of much greater significance than the dollars involved in this bill is principle—the principle that American policy cannot succeed until it convinces the people of the world that America is dependable.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS.].

THE ECA GUARANTY PROVISION

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the committee on the statesmanlike job they have done in reducing the original estimate and the budget estimate to a size that bids fair to fit our budget, and on the amendment, which is apparently agreed to, which provides enough flexibility so that this program can proceed. I hope this second year will show the amazing success that has resulted in the first year under the splendid administration of Paul Hoffman and his associates.

I want to talk about a little item of $150,000,000 which apparently was not considered very much by the Committee on Appropriations and is not being considered very much by ECA. It has to do with the guaranty provision in the ECA law. We provided a guaranty last year but it turned out not to be very useful because it merely provided for converting the principal amount of any investment back into dollars provided the amount is earned or paid in foreign currency. This year in the bill which you passed we broadened that guaranty so that anyone who makes an investment which is approved for guaranty can convert from foreign currencies into dollars not only what he paid in the original investment but any earnings or income produced in the foreign currency. The amount earmarked for guaranties is $150,000,000. It does not amount quite to that because they have already used $4,239,014 from it, but still over $145,000,000 is available as guaranties, particularly for capital equipment.

In the tables furnished in the hearings is an item of $816,500,000 for "Capital equipment," with no further explanation or break-down in the tables that I have been able to find with the assistance of the members of the Committee on Appropriations and their staff; $816,000,000 is a lot of money. That is a lot of capital equipment, but capital equipment is not like wheat or coal or something like that, that when you say it once you have described all of it. There are all kinds of capital equipment involved but not described. I find no reduction made in the estimated prices of all this capital equipment. What I hope to find out is that some of these cuts in appropriations have been made up by using this guaranty which is provided in the basic law. I say this for one, that if along next spring we are told that all of this appropriation has to be spent by May 15, and I find that none of this capital equipment is being furnished through guaranties, then I am going to be most reluctant to appropriate more give-away or grant money, when I find that the payback money, the guaranty money, is not being used.

It is my hope that these appropriations will be tight enough, a close enough fit, that ECA and the people in these countries will seek out this method of obtaining $145,000,000 more of capital equipment from this country.

When the authorization bill came to Congress it provided for $150,000,000 of contract authorizations to go beyond fiscal 1950. We struck that out in our committee but we put into the guaranty language a provision that "includes the furnishing of capital goods items and related services for use in connection with projects approved by the Administrator, pursuant to a contract providing for payment in whole or in part after June 30, 1950. So that the forward contracting authority that ECA asked for is in the law, but it does not require the appropriation of dollars.

If the guaranty is used, and we have to pay because foreign currencies cannot be converted, we get back, instead of merely a veto on counterpart funds that some other country holds, payment in full in the currency of another country. It is my hope that private enterprise in this country, the ECA administration, and these other countries, will use this method of getting $145,000,000 worth of capital equipment over there plowed into the recovery and development of Europe. If they do not, and then come around and say that they need more money next spring, somebody is going to ask them questions, and somebody's face is going to be red. I find nothing in the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations about the guaranty. Of course, it does not require any appropriation, but it is strange to me that the ECA did not call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that here was $145,000,000 available for the purposes of European recovery. I hope the Members of Congress will study this matter because that may be the only way recovery is going to work in the long run. In 1952, when the program of grant money stops, it may be necessary to provide, through guaranties, or loans, some sort of credit facilities so as to bridge the gap while there is still a temporary dollar shortage. In the future, under the President's point 4, we are going to have to provide some method similar to this guaranty so that when we furnish goods abroad but get paid back for those goods. We had better start pioneering this year. I want to see examples of how the ECA guaranty worked, instead of excuses as to why it was not used.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, this bill calls for the expenditure of $5,542,470,000. There are about 30 or 40 Members here on the floor right now considering this very important bill. If you give $1,000,000,000 away it costs every man, woman, and child in America $7. Here you are giving $5,500,000,000 away, which means $38.50 for every man, woman, and child in America. If every Member of Congress went back to his district and told every man, woman, and child he met that their assessment for this relief under ECA this year was going to be $38.50, I wonder, if you tried to take up a collection, and you passed the hat around, how many people in your district do you think would put $38.50 in the hat? You would find that there would be mighty few. But, what is happening? You are the elected representatives. With all the propaganda going around to try to get you to vote to give these billions and billions of dollars away, you say to your taxpayers you have to pay the bill. You are talking about more taxes to run this Government. I tell you right now that I do not want my taxpayers to come down here to me and say, "You Members voted these taxes and you are strapping me to death. I do not want these taxes on everything that I have to buy." Nevertheless, the Members of Congress are voting for these great expenditures, and evidently they want things to be this way. People are hollering for less taxes. Give them less spending if you do not give them less taxes.

Mr. Chairman, what are we doing with this money? Is it being spent wisely, economically, and soundly? I say "No." I am going to show you a few things that are being done under ECA which I think are just downright ridiculous—just downright ridiculous. Let us see here—you are bringing 23 men from Korea, 23 men to travel all over the United States for 9 weeks to tell the people in the cities how much they appreciate what Uncle Sam is doing for them through ECA. That is going to cost you a couple of thousand dollars apiece, or even $3,000 apiece to bring each one of those fellows over here to go around telling Uncle Sam what good people we are. You pay the bill. You are going to spend a hundred thousand dollars to do that. Why do you not get them to write a letter here and tell us that they appreciate the money we are giving them, so that we can put those letters in the newspapers—or bring the letters down here and I will put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That would cost little. That ought to be just as good. But no, you want to tax my people $100,000 to bring that crowd over here and have them have a good time running around telling how Uncle Sam is treating them so nice. You are not only doing that for the people of Korea, but you have a lot of these missions. Let us look at a few of them. You have a group of six Norwegian technicians to visit the United States to study American methods of mining, paper making, and steel making.

That makes nine groups coming here under the Marshall plan to travel all over the United States to learn something about what we are doing. We could teach them by giving them something to work at, by letting them do something to help themselves, by telling them and showing them how we do things. We could assist them in many ways without having to have them come over here at our expense.

You have sent seven missions of union members from the United States to deal with trade-unions in European countries to try to tell them how to run their unions. Good Moses and Aaron! What is the matter with you? Do you not think they know that much?

You have brought over a lot of foundry workers from the United Kingdom under ECA funds to teach them foundry methods. Why not send one teacher and some books over there?

You are sending ECA missions to Belgium and other countries to work out their labor problems.

I do not believe in all that. I think it is money ill spent. You have in here $1,800,000 for the Italian counterpart fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania five additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Italy was one of the countries who started to fight France before we got into the war—our enemies at that time—they went over there and raised Ned, yet now we are going to help the Italians rebuild their villages, their roads, and their aqueducts, and we are spending $21,600,000 in Italy for those purposes. It is nice that you can do it, but gracious goodness, your taxpayers cannot afford it, and you have not given your own people a thought on things they want. Remember, the countries you are helping do not have a total indebtedness of $90,000,000,000, but in America we have a debt of $250,000,000,000. Some day, when our country goes broke and these other countries are around doing business, do you think they are going to do anything to help America? Why, you are called Uncle Shylock over there now. [Applause in the gallery.]

I am glad you girls came. I have got more friends, Mr. Chairman, in the gallery than I have downstairs here, and I have got more friends back home than I have got down here. Lord bless you. I love every one of you. Some of you I try to take out and beat on the golf course. But to get back to the bill, I tell you right here and now that you have got to get serious about this thing of squandering. This just cannot go on. We should realize our domestic situation. When you stop to think of all the money that is being spent for propaganda in the United States to get us to spend money to help somebody else, it just does not make sense; and I say that the Congress of the United States is the easiest bunch of fellows I ever saw roped in in all my life.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. On page 3 there is a provision which states that an amount not to exceed $500,000 shall be available for expenditures of a confidential character other than entertainment, which we ask no accounting for. What is that for?

Mr. RICH. I do not know, and I do not believe there is a Member present who knows what it is for, and yet we are going to include it in this bill.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman realize that there is also an item of $30,000 for entertainment in this bill?

Mr. RICH. $30,000! I am willing to bet that is not the tenth of it.

Mr. GROSS. That is what it states here.

Mr. RICH. I do not mean to say that the gentleman from Iowa does not know what he is talking about, for the gentleman certainly does. He is a good sound legislator.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we get a roll call on this bill and that we will get 220 Members at least to vote against it; then we will send it back to the committee, and we ought to send it back to the Committee on Appropriations. You know that committee is not looking after Uncle Sam, they are not interested in our domestic affairs, the whole committee. I do not like the committee—I like the individuals personally—because they are giving us away, and I do not like the foreign affairs plan or program one bit; it just does not suit me at all.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman think we should spend $30,000 to give away the taxpayers' money, to pour it down assorted drains in foreign countries?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not think so. This makes $92,000,000,000 that the American people have given away. A lot of men come in here and say that we are giving all this away to keep from having another war. You never kept out of war by talking about war all the time. Whenever a man wants to get into a fight he can get into a fight without any trouble. If I wanted to get into a fight I could do so without any trouble at all, and if I saw a man walking down the street with a chip on his shoulder I would probably knock the chip off his shoulder to see what the fellow would do. That's the way you get in trouble. We are spending $15,000,000,000 a year here for defense. We talk about some of these nations of the earth, getting in war, we give Russia $12,500,000,000 in lend-lease; they get all that equipment over there, and what happens to it? We find ourselves having to spend $15,000,000,000 a year to try to keep prepared to combat the $12,000,000,000 that we sent over there. That is serious; that is serious.

My time is about up, but, remember, when it comes to voting, if 219 or 220 Members vote against this bill we will be doing the whole country a great service. Now and future generations

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 minutes.

(Mr. SADOWSKI asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain excerpts and tables.)

THE MARSHALL PLAN, TAXATION, AND WORLD TRADE

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, the issue in the next campaign will be taxation. There is no way to dodge the issue. Our friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, ROBERT RICH, is absolutely right, and those who ignore the warning—and I do not care whether they are Democrats or Republicans—will have a tough time in the next election. You cannot go to the people of the United States with a $45,000,000,000 budget and a $45,000,000,000 tax bill, if you please, when the income of the American taxpayer will be back on the basis only slightly above that of prewar. During the war, when people's pockets were bulging with money made out of war profits and war wages, it was possible to meet this inflated tax bill. Now the simple truth is we just cannot meet it any longer. We must cut the budget at least seven to eight billion dollars. This can be done. It must be done. A 5-percent cut in appropriations right across the board, as has been proposed by some Members of the House and Senate, is a lot of silly nonsense. There are only two places where real cuts can be made, and that is on the appropriations for all foreign-aid programs and on the $16,000,000,000 military authorization.

When I heard that the Appropriations Committee had cut this ECA appropriation by 15 percent, I was considerably pleased. Then this morning I learned that a compromise had been reached whereby this money will be spent in 13½ months instead of 15 months, which action actually nullifies the 15-percent cut and the reported savings that were to be made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have received plenty of warning from the best economists in this Nation, and the Department of Commerce reports and the reports from the Labor Department definitely prove that we must cut our tax bill by $7,000,000,000 because the revenues will not be forthcoming. If you do not meet the issue now, you will have to face up with it in July 1950, next year, just before the elections.

Now, during the war we saddled our people with a lot of extra taxes, special taxes, on rail, bus and air transportation. We also placed taxes against luggage, furs, ladies' handbags, jewelry, cosmetics, and so forth. We promised the business people and the American consumers that these special taxes would be removed as soon as the war was over. This promise should be kept and can be kept. It must be kept because these special taxes against certain commodities and against certain people in business is unfair, discriminatory, and is tending to drive these people into bankruptcy. The consumers are withholding from buying these taxed items because they expect these taxes to be removed. Now, I say we can remove them and still cut the budget by $7,000,000,000 by making substantial cuts in free foreign aid programs and in the authorization for the military. It is imperative that at this time we abandon this policy of being Santa Claus to half the nations of the world and to the few American manipulators and financiers who have pushed this foreign-aid program for their own profits at the expense of the American taxpayers. We must immediately take steps to develop international world trade with all the nations of the world on a strictly business basis. According to all of the reports there is no question about it but that the Marshall-plan countries have had their economies restored to a prewar basis, that is what we were asked to do originally, and that has now been accomplished.

Mr. Chairman, while we have been giving many billions of dollars to aid business in Europe and Asia our own business is going to pot. We are sliding down hill fast. All reports show lower volume, lower profits, lower employment. Consumer spending is shrinking and inventories are piling up. People are afraid of losing their jobs, and employers are worried over sales, costs, inventories, and taxes. Thousands of small manufacturing plants are operating on a curtailed production basis and are begging for orders. The unemployment rolls have been increasing by leaps and bounds. Let me say to my colleagues from the South that the cotton warehouses are bulging with cotton and that the cotton mills are suffering from flooded markets. Under the Marshall plan we have permitted England to become our cotton broker, and those nations not under the Marshall plan have had to pay through the nose to obtain American cotton. In many instances they have paid 30 percent above the normal American market price. These exorbitant prices on American cotton have not accrued to the benefit of the American planter or the American cotton dealer. These profits have gone to England and to a couple of favored nations under the Marshall plan. The result has been that the eastern European countries starved out of the American cotton markets have looked for other sources of supply. They are now getting cotton from Egypt, India, parts of Asia and South America. I am afraid that our cotton markets in half of the world may be lost to us forever as a result of the disastrous policy we have followed.

Now, according to Business Week, the report on cotton shows that last month, April 1949, the American cotton mills used only 579,031 bales. This is the first time since 1940 that American cotton mills requirements fell below 600,000 bales per month. So, we have permitted the world to be divided up into two spheres of trade and commerce. One sphere dominated by Russia, the other dominated by England, and we, the United States, are the scapegoat. We have come out with nothing. Russia has made her bilateral trade agreements with all the countries of Europe and the world, including England. England has made her bilateral agreements with all the countries of Europe and the world, including Russia; but the United States is out in the cold in both of these spheres, and I am afraid that in another year or two we will be walking around with our hat in our hands begging for a little world trade and commerce. I say this because, and you will agree with me if you take the time out to study the situation and look at the reports on Germany and Japan, you will find that their industrial potential has been practically completely restored, and these two countries who were our greatest rivals for world trade before the war are back in the world market, and with much cheaper labor than ours, and with improved production methods adopted from us and installed by the big-hearted Americans, they will give such competition that we will have the time of our lives trying to reenter the world markets. Russia, China, and the countries of eastern Europe will no longer have to look to the United States and beg us for trade.

Now, Mr. Chairman, time is of the essence; I say that because we must expand our foreign trade now. We must do business with all the countries of the world. Only in this way can we stimulate a healthy condition at home and reduce our national debt and the tax burden upon our people. Our national debt is now $252,000,000,000. We owe twice as much as all the Marshall plan countries put together, and the tax burden of the American taxpayer is four times as great as it was before the war; and at this point, let me say that when our tax burden was only one-fourth as great as it is today, that is during the days of the Roosevelt New Deal, we were still able to build roads, viaducts, TVA plants, flood- and drought-control projects, schools, hospitals, develop our forestry. We had money for building airports, slum-clearance projects, and we could assist generously the various States and cities throughout the country and give assistance to building up the wealth and natural resources of our Nation. Today, when the tax burden is four times as great upon the people of our country, we are told we have no money for old-age pensions, aid to education, for a public-health program, the St. Lawrence waterway, the Tennessee-Tombigbee inland waterway, and for the many other needed projects, and now we are telling our States and cities to cope with their own problems because we cannot afford to assist them. Yes, we will have a $45,000,000,000 budget if we carry on with our present policy, a policy which takes $25,000,000,000 out of this budget for foreign aid and military appropriations, and goes to fatten up the munition makers and the international profiteers. Of course, we are told that we will have a $13,000,000,000 export-trade program for this year; but let us take a look at this $13,000,000,000 export-trade program. Where is it going and who is paying for it? This program is based on spending for ECA, Greek-Turkish aid, military lend-lease, the Atlantic Pact, Philippine rehabilitation, and so forth. Figure it out for yourself—eight billion of this thirteen billion will come out of the pockets of the American taxpayers. We will have only about $5,000,000,000 of real trade—trade that is based on a business basis—the other $8,000,000,000 represents a trade that is a drain upon the American taxpayer. It is not trade at all, it is plain thievery.

Mr. Chairman, I say let us get back to business and cut out this international panhandling and military domination over our affairs. President Roosevelt had laid down a postwar program for peace and prosperity. The foundation for this is the United Nations, and two of the cornerstones of this program are the ITO, that is the International Trade Organization, and the World Bank. Roosevelt had told the Congress and the whole world, including Mr. Churchill, right after the second UNRRA appropriation, that there would be no more free dollars available, that the American economy could no longer stand the strain. Mr. Roosevelt had proposed the International Trade Organization and the World Bank as a means of financing world trade for the postwar period. The ITO was to provide multilateral agreements so as to give to all the nations an equal opportunity to trade in all the markets of the world for raw materials, supplies, and machinery. The bank was to finance this world trade. We have 38 percent of the stock in this bank; the bank was to issue bonds paying 2½ percent interest, and the bank was to charge 4½ percent interest for the loans that it made. This was sound business policy. We were assured of the return of our money; yes, not only the return of it, but 2½ percent interest upon the bonds that we bought. Now, would any Member of Congress oppose the purchase of ten or fifteen billion dollars worth of these interest-bearing bonds? I do not think so. Yes, the recovery of the world would have been assured, and there would be no necessity for bilateral trade agreements which are aimed at destroying the trade of the United States of America and putting us out of the world markets. Yes, by doing business through the World Bank we were assured the return of our money or the defaulting nations would lose faith and credit in the whole family of nations. Well, now of course, this program did not suit Mr. Churchill, who was looking for more free handouts for England. This proposal did not suit those Americans who had a billion dollar prewar investment in Germany and were seeking free United States Treasury dollars to triple or quadruple this kitty. Of course, this program did not suit the international cartelists, monopolists, and the big international banking houses, who worked hand in hand with the international cartelists—but then Franklin D. Roosevelt died. So Mr. Churchill came to Fulton, Mo., made his famous speech that left America shaking and quivering with fear. The special Colmer Committee went to Moscow and all over Congress the cry was raised to stop trade with half the nations of the world. The hysteria grew and mounted, and the free American dollars started to roll out again. Mr. Churchill won, England got her money, the German barons and the Japanese Zaibatsu will be handed back their war plants and industries, nicely restored with the latest American equipment and machinery, and the latest American production methods.

Look at the Life magazine of week before last, see the beautiful German Volkswagon automobiles rolling out of this plant that had not produced one automobile under Hitler.

Mr. Chairman, we have been generous to the extreme. Our generosity has been exploited. By striking fear in our hearts and telling us that the doling out of free American dollars was the only way to stop a foreign ideology, we have been duped out of more billions. I want to say here and now that if the people of America are not properly fed, clothed, and housed, that if we neglect our internal economy, that if we neglect our schools and hospitals, that if we neglect the aged, the sick and incapacitated, that if our internal economy becomes weak and bankrupt, then, and only then, will communism or socialism prevail and become superior to the American philosophy of free enterprise. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have been generous with the countries of the world.

At this point I wish to include a table showing the extent of this generosity. These totals, of course, do not include the vast sums supplied by voluntary assistance drives in the United States, such as CARE, Red Cross, International Charities, emergency assistance campaigns for reconstruction and rehabilitation in particular countries, nor does it include the millions of free gift packages that have been sent overseas by our American citizens at their own expense.

The United States News and World Report of May 13, 1949, devotes some space to an examination of the trends of American business. Among other things it says:

Report goods output is back almost to the conversion low point of 1945. Cotton consumption is around the low set in 1947. Wool consumption is off. Output in most industries is either back or seen headed back to levels of 1946 when the boom began. Outlook is for a further dip. Machinery output over-all is at the lowest point since 1946. Machine tool output is down around 50 percent of current capacity.

Confronted with an unbearable tax burden, and with all business reports pointing to a depression—and I don't like to use that term—I believe that it is urgent and pressing that we reexamine our foreign-trade policy, which excludes from our markets two-thirds of the world's trade. We must reexamine our export-import licensing program.

Our policy has gone to such unreasonable extremes that the Post Office Department received an order prohibiting the shipment of more than $5 worth of streptomycin in free gift parcel post packages bound for tuberculosis victims in Allied countries. This was done in spite of the well-known fact that it takes $100 worth of streptomycin to cure or to arrest a case of tuberculosis. This policy has gone to such crazy extremes that it has become inhuman.

China, Asia, and the countries of eastern Europe comprise an enormous market for the manufactured products of our country. Closing our doors on these customers is not only poor business, but contributes to the increased tension between the nations of the world. American industry was told that the Marshall plan would aid in the exporting of their products, but despite the promises of the Marshall planners our exports have been dropping. In 1947, before the Marshall plan, we did $15,000,000,000 worth of export business. In 1948, under the Marshall plan, it dropped to $12,500,000,000.

If we continue under this program there can only be an aggravation in the downturn of business.

The New York Times on March 24, 1949, voiced the opinion of the convention of the Export Managers' Club in New York. It stated that there is a growing awareness by men in the export field that, even with the Marshall plan, by 1952 European "imports from the United States may be cut as much as 40 percent, while competitive and revitalized European production may capture as much as half the United States markets in Latin America."

Then there are those who proclaim that the enormous expenditures for the military will provide the additional employment and take up the slack in our economic system. Well, of course, these billions are only a drain upon the taxpayers, and they do not create any social values, and do not create any capital investments in constructive business that would add to the wealth and progress of our Nation.

I think we are delinquent in our duties if we fail to look upon these developments with anything less than alarm. I believe it was a great mistake that simultaneously with the launching of the Churchillian Marshall Plan, we also introduced discriminatory trade measures against the eastern European nations which refused to participate in it. In effect, our licensing program constitutes a unilateral embargo upon these nations. We are even guilty of violating trade agreements which were signed before licensing was introduced, and which I believe are still binding documents.

I have repeatedly stated my opposition of our approach to the German problem. We have gone at breakneck speed in rebuilding Germany's potential in the world markets. After the First World War it took Germany 12 years to restore her pre-war potential. After the Second World War with the billions of dollars that we have dumped there, together with the billions of dollars of military supplies—yes, whole Army depots, that were left in Germany and no accounting has ever been given to the American taxpayers, Germany was restored in 4 years. Our whole policy affecting Germany is a repetition of the one followed immediately after the First World War. The only difference is that we have done it much faster and more efficiently.

The American taxpayer has spent $41,000,000,000 to defeat Germany. We have spent a total of $200,000,000,000 to win World War II. And now we are putting in billions every year to resurrect the huge industries of Germany and Japan to be our powerful contenders for world trade. By our policy of restricted export licensing we are giving to Germany another chance to dominate Europe economically, and thereby, politically. The same is being done for Japan in Asia. The nations devastated by the Reich are now confronted by that threat again. There is not even any effort being made any longer to conceal the fact that the Potsdam provisions limiting those industries which constitute a threat to peace are being openly ignored All the recent reports on Germany emphasize the fact that the decartelization program has been a farce and that denazification has been but a multiple-syllable word.

Is it not peculiar that the most ardent supporters of the policy of embargoes on trade with eastern European countries, countries by the way that never waged war against our country; yes, those people who insist that such a restrictive trade policy is imperative, are simultaneously the most enthusiastic supporters of rebuilding the might of Germany, twice the enemy of our country? It seems to me that this touching concern for the recovery of an enemy who is responsible for the deaths of a quarter of a million American lives and millions of European, and cost us over $200,000,000,000, does not jibe with the pledges that we made to our allies to rebuild them first.

Yes, we are rebuilding the country that brought our allies to the brink of complete disaster, and all under the specious and false excuse of rebuilding the European economy, and still worse, by our embargo on trade with the eastern European nations we are penalizing them for their sacrifices and rewarding Germany for its crimes.

So today we are pursuing the short-sighted policy of trying to hamper and limit the economic recovery of our eastern European allies, and in so doing we have also hampered the recovery of western Europe at a huge and unnecessary cost to the American taxpayer. It is this artificial division of European economy which for centuries has constituted a whole, that has made it necessary for us to throw in billions of taxpayers' dollars. This is the division that Churchill created. This division has placed Europe on the American dole. There can be no talk about peace and complete world recovery so long as trade barriers exist between our country and eastern Europe, and in turn, between western Europe and the east.

The continuation of such a policy can only mean that the American taxpayer and American industry and American labor is the loser. For instance, what does the embargo on goods to the Soviet Union mean in concrete terms today? The Wall Street Journal of April 15, 1949, points out that the Soviets are shifting their buying to other markets. It writes that the Soviets are getting machines and industrial equipment from the United Kingdom, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, Switzerland, and Norway, while she continues to ship manganese, chrome, and vital strategic materials to the United States, but is forced to use the dollars thus obtained to buy what she needs in other markets. It is needless to call attention to the fact that with the exception of Switzerland, all the nations referred to are participants in the Marshall plan. Now, translated into cold facts, this simply means that our policy adds to paralyzing our industries, and of course also adds to the rise of unemployment in the United States. The same applies to Poland, which has established trade relations with 42 states and because of our restricted trade policies, Poland has extensively increased her volume of purchases from the Scandinavian countries, and this trade is particularly strong in goods like machinery, which industry in our country is suffering a marked downward trend in production.

Yes, while we have clamped down on the export of goods and machinery to Poland, Great Britain has recently entered into a bilateral agreement, a 5-year trade pact, for a billion dollars' worth of trade with Poland. Included in this agreement are such export items as copper, capital equipment, tires, dye stuffs, crude oil, and rubber. I find that the other eastern European countries have all entered into these bilateral agreements and to a lesser or greater degree are arranging for new trade outlets that leaves the United States out in the cold. The greatest danger in our policy of restricted export and import trade, and our licensing program, lies in the fact that when the dependency of these nations on American products has once been eliminated by forcing them to obtain these same products in other markets, we may emerge out of this situation without any customers in eastern Europe, and possibly in China and Asia.

I wish to bring this situation forcibly to the attention of the House. Do you know that so far this year our exports to the Soviet Union and the eastern European countries are running at what will be an annual rate of only $70,000,000? Stop and think what effect this policy will have on our domestic economy. This export trade represents the smallest fractional part of the business that could be obtained if our foreign trade were placed on a sound economic basis. This is a policy of deliberate bankruptcy for our business.

Who is it that has the right to sell out our world trade and commerce to England, Germany, and Japan?

I find that machine tools, precision equipment, trucks, excavators, electrical equipment, locomotives, and oil-drilling equipment still are on the frozen or forbidden list of exports to eastern European countries. These are the materials that eastern Europe needs most. Continuing the American embargo may be a deterrent to more rapid recovery for these countries, but certainly it can be no block to their recovery. They will obtain these materials elsewhere. An examination of the recovery rate of these European countries fails to bear out the hopes of the proponents of this theory. Our policy of embargo and restricted trade toward these countries is forcing them to be independent of us and not to rely on our productive industry, and all this augers ill for our future trade relations unless we revise our policy immediately. Everyone who has visited these eastern European countries is amazed at the rapid recovery and is astounded to learn that they were able to accomplish this by their own hard labor without free Marshall-plan dollars. Now, it should be self-evident that while these countries are expanding economically and at an unprecedented rate there exists in these countries a tremendous potential market for United States products—a market that will pay for our goods on a business basis and not with taxpayers' dollars out of the United States Treasury. Those who are bleeding us with Marshall-plan dollars will say, "Oh, you can't approve of the particular forms of governments that exist at the moment," and, at the same time, these Marshall-plan panhandlers are grabbing the eastern European business for themselves.

I am a member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In our committee we have held extensive hearings bearing on our Nation's trade and commerce. I cannot sit idly by and not utter words of protest against a trade policy that will be disastrous to our Nation for years to come. In my investigation I find that the eastern European countries have embarked on an ambitious program of industrialization. They have launched a program for the expansion of their transportation facilities which were so limited before the war. Our plants could be busy for years producing the equipment that is necessary to meet the demands in the field of transportation alone. So also the program of electrification in these countries creates an insatiable market for our electrical products for many years to come. Their efforts to increase farm needs creates a huge market for farm equipment, and I am sorry to say that it is in these fields specifically that we are recording great drops in production and great increases in unemployment. It should be obvious to all of us that when we slam the door shut upon one section of the world which is such a fertile field for world trade, it can only lead to depression and unemployment at home.

Michael L. Hoffman, who is reporting and covering the meeting of the UN Economic Mission for Europe which is in session in Geneva, Switzerland, on May 11, wrote that even though the eastern European nations have charged that the Marshall plan has usurped many of the prerogatives of the ECE, that despite all this, they are eager to trade with us and western Europe. That these nations desire such trade has been shown repeatedly. Only recently we rebuffed efforts of Czechoslovakia to buy materials we have piled up in surplus.

That these eastern European nations will meet their obligations and that their credit and guaranties are good has been amply demonstrated. As for example, when the World Bank delegation went to Poland to investigate the situation they made an enthusiastic report, calling Poland an excellent risk and recommending the loan.

It is apparent, and there can be no doubt about it, that economically those nations are in a sound position to do business. The barriers placed against them are purely political. I should say they are shrewdly political and slanted in such a way as to deprive us of these markets.

In addition to the World Bank we also have the United States Export-Import Bank, which should be used and exercised to the fullest extent. To promote world peace, mutual understanding and cooperation, and to lessen the tensions that could lead to conflict, and to fulfill our obligations that we undertook when we signed the United Nations Charter, I believe that we should stop our present discriminatory trade policy.

I see no need for the further outpouring of billions of dollars under the Marshall plan and these other foreign-aid panhandling projects. It is time that all of the nations of the world get down to business on a business basis. I shall not vote to bleed the American taxpayer further. I shall vote to repeal all of the special excise taxes that I have hereinbefore mentioned. I shall vote to rebuild our own internal economy and give all possible assistance to our States and cities, to our institutions, and to our citizens. That is what the United States Treasury is for. It is not a grab bag for all of the people of the world, and if there is any doubt in the mind of any Congressman, just go home and ask your people, and I am afraid that there will be much explaining to do when the 1950 tax bill rolls around in the election year.

In conclusion, I believe that our present trade policy in relation to the eastern European nations is not a sound policy—first, it fails to coincide with the best interests of our Nation; secondly, it has not halted the rapid recovery of the states in eastern Europe—and neither are the trade restrictions helping the recovery of western Europe.

The embargo and the restrictions on export licensing clearly do not work. On the contrary, the embargoes have forced the eastern nations to seek other sources for their wants, and I repeat that this policy will hurt our world trade for years to come. The pouring out of billions of American taxpayers' dollars into western Europe and Asia has only had the effect of splitting and hampering world trade and world economy. At a period when our capacity to produce far exceeds our needs, and in a period when our production continues to drop and unemployment is increasing, and when at the same time we have an enormous potential market that is available to us, I feel that we are following a stupid and foolish policy. The nations of eastern Europe have the credit and security. They want trade with us and have made every effort to buy American products. They have established themselves as responsible in their trade relations with the rest of the world. Establishment of world trade relations will immediately rebound to the benefit of American business and American labor. And at the same time it will be the greatest contributing force to the easing of tensions and to the restoration of understanding and peace.

Again I say, it is imperative that the tax burden be reduced by at least seven or eight billion dollars; that these tax reductions can be made on the free foreign-aid programs and the military authorizations.

I am opposed to this Marshall-plan appropriation because I insist that we revert to the program laid down by President Franklin D. Roosevelt for the postwar period, that is, that all of the nations of the world, including the nations of western Europe, do business through the World Bank and the Export-Import Bank, and subscribe to the policy of the International Trade Organization multilateral trade agreements. We cannot afford to dish out any more taxpayers' dollars for nothing, and we must participate in the business of the world on a multilateral basis.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply indebted to the gentleman from New York for this time. I thought I was to be given time on our side, but I told them frankly I was going to oppose the bill.

The title of this bill reads:

> Making appropriations for foreign aid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The thing that occurs to me about the "other purposes" is that it is an appropriation to service the national debts of the European countries. I have gone into that phase of the subject a little and I am surprised to find that very few people in the Congress have gone into the fact that this is a very ingenious, artful scheme to take money from the American taxpayers to finance the servicing charges on the national debts of these foreign countries.

I have checked a little bit into Holland and Belgium as to their national debts. I found that Holland has three classes of bonds. They have bonds payable in dollars, that are sold in America. They have bonds payable in pounds, that are sold in England. I got the list of their indebtedness on the American and British bonds, but was not able to get the amount and the condition of the bonds sold domestically in Holland, which are paid in francs or in guilders.

In this appropriation of $5,500,000,000 we do not donate anything to the people themselves in the Marshall plan countries, we simply donate the money to the governments, and the governments make the people bring in their cash and lay it on the line to get the material from America. If the hungry people of Holland or the hungry people of Belgium want bread, they ask for wheat, and our Government takes our money and goes out and buys the wheat, and keeps the farmers and the wheat growers here happy by buying the wheat and donating it to Holland. Holland requires the people that want the bread to bring in their money and lay it on the line, and it goes into the treasury of their government. Naturally, when the bond interest falls due, and the bonds themselves, these governments take the money they collected from their people and service and pay the principal of the national debt.

Over in the caucus room I asked Mr. Hoffman, the Administrator, this question. I said, "Mr. Hoffman, the chief objective of this ECA is to stabilize the national economy of these so-called Marshall-plan countries." He said, "Certainly." I said, "The most essential thing and the most important thing to do to stabilize the economy of a country is to maintain the integrity of its national credit." He said, "Yes, sir." I said, "Now, I would like to know how much of the taxpayers' money that is disbursed by ECA is going to pay the service charge and the principal of the national debts of these Marshall-plan countries." Just then the gentleman in charge of the meeting jumped up and said, "Time is up. Mr. Hoffman has not time to answer. You can ask him privately but you must not ask him that question publicly."

I wonder how many of the men who represent the western mining States and the mining industry know that in this bill that I hold in my hand that we have under consideration 5 percent of the appropriation is set aside to purchase strategic materials. I wonder how many of the men from the Western States and the other mining States all over the United States know that that 5 percent in this bill will be $150,000,000 that will be set aside not only to purchase lead, zinc, and copper, but to finance mining development in the foreign countries. We cannot spend a cent of this money in Mexico, we cannot spent a cent of this money in Central America or South America or Canada—well, we can spend it in Canada, because that is one of the Marshall-plan countries, as part of the British Empire. But this money is going into these European countries to break down the price of our mineral resources here, the lead, copper, and zinc produced in this country. The price of these commodities is falling every day, and the stocks of our industrial companies are falling every day, and the income taxes that we are receiving from all of these industries are falling. I wonder where we are heading.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before us to provide funds for the continuation of the recovery program in Europe, through the ECA, has my full support. The work already done and the results accomplished have been most gratifying.

The able administration of the ECA program by Paul Hoffman, its Administrator, has been of a character that shows what can be accomplished by utilizing the services of a man trained in business and with ample experience. While at all times he has shown a sympathetic interest in the welfare of European nations he has not permitted mere sentiment to override or set at naught the sound business principles that must be applied if the recovery program is to obtain sound, permanent, and worth-while results. His administration has been commendable and deserves high praise. He is entitled to all the support and encouragement that the Congress can give.

The funds we have already expended in the nations of western Europe have done much to provide stability to the governments receiving such aid, creating confidence in the peoples of those nations that with the help we give they can reestablish their national economy and eventually regain the power to support themselves and improve their standard of living. The accomplishment of these objectives will stem the tide of communism that threatened to engulf them. Already we can see the benefits that have accrued from the wise investment of our funds in their welfare. Past accomplishments give encouragement for future possibilities.

Frequently objection has been made to our contributions for recovery in Europe on the basis that we have worthwhile causes in our own country that call for relief. It is true there are many such causes that are rightfully entitled to relief. However, giving of aid to Europe does not and should not preclude relief to them. Furthermore, we must not overlook the fact that basically we are extending aid to Europe to establish economic conditions that will strengthen and stabilize the democratic governments of western Europe, and thereby prevent the spread of communism and the possibility of a third world war.

We naturally look forward to the day when these nations of Europe will no longer need our aid. The sooner that day arrives the better it will be for them as well as ourselves. We cannot, nor should we be expected to, continue a program of relief indefinitely. The purpose has been to give Europe merely a breathing spell during which it could rehabilitate and strengthen its tottering and unsteady national structures. This is being rapidly accomplished and gives promise of an ultimate and complete recovery. It is time, however, we began to tell the nations now receiving relief from us that ECA is not a permanent institution. They must realize that the time is coming when they must depend less upon us and more upon themselves and the investment of private capital.

My support of this bill is based upon the thought that our future security and the peace of the world is made more certain and sure by strengthening the democratic nations of Europe.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, we are now called on to put another $5,542,000,000 into the European recovery program. We ought to stop and see what we have done or accomplished by the previous billions we sunk in foreign countries. There are some facts that seem unanswerable:

First, we have not settled the Greek revolution, but have merely prolonged it. People fired with the spirit of freedom do not give up easily.

Second, we have by the aid we have given the Dutch, used our power against the Indonesian people struggling for freedom from Dutch economic slavery. We have alined ourselves against the plain people of these islands whose love of liberty is comparable to our own during the days of the American Revolution.

Our aid to China of $2,000,000,000 has had the effect of equipping one of the finest and best-equipped armies in the Far East, for all of our aid has gone directly to the Communists of China. While seeking to stop communism in that country, we have made it a smashing success.

Our aid to England has got nowhere, because that country is still unable to take care of itself. That country has too many ex-kings, kings, princes, and royal nabobs to ever get out of debt and be economically self-sustaining. Without the aid of Churchill in finagling this country into war, England would have been bankrupt and out of business as a nation. I always thought, from reading history, that we won the Revolution against England, but I guess the historians were wrong. England seems to be able yet to direct our affairs.

If Congress understood the fundamentals and actually wanted to stop the spread of communism in Europe, it would be a comparatively easy matter to take such action as will not directly aid in the spread of that "ism." Behind all the unrest in these countries is the determination of the people everywhere to acquire that which will enable them to live—namely, land. As long as the people in any country are hungry for land, and the present governments permit the maintenance of large estates used for pleasure, game preserves, and royal palaces, this unrest will go on. Any form of government which promises them land, no matter how autocratic it may be, will have the support of the common masses of people. You can see that in China at this hour. Bells are ringing, flags waving, as the people formerly under the Chiang government welcome the advancing well-equipped and well-managed army of the Communists. They are hailed as liberators. Liberators from what? Liberators of people from a corrupt government that has at all times ignored the suffering of the people of China.

I said once before on the floor of this House, and now repeat it, that I will vote against any appropriation for any foreign country until we take care of the people who are in distress in this country. We have many thousands of aged people here who are living on assistance that is not only pitiful, but a crime against the traditions of the United States. All officials of the Government want raises in pay. There is a bill now before Congress to increase the salaries of top Government employees from ten to fifteen thousand dollars annually, yet we have done nothing for the aged, the crippled, and the blind. Pensions to soldiers have been denied, but yesterday an attempt was made to boost the pay of retired Army officers, where the lower officers received a token and the top hats were to get it all. It did not work.

To decrease this appropriation for ECA by 15 percent is a gesture in the right direction. I will vote for it and if we amend it and reduce the amount by 15 percent, we will save $832,000,000, or almost twice what it will cost to allow the aged people of the United States double what they are getting now. We should save all of this five billion five hundred and forty-two million, and after the bill is amended to cut it down 15 percent, I will still vote to reject the whole thing. I hope I have made my position clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, namely:

TITLE I

FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

Economic cooperation

For expenses necessary to enable the President to carry out the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended by the act of April 19, 1949 (Public Law 47), for the period commencing April 3, 1949, through June 30, 1949, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the purposes of this appropriation (not to exceed $6,000); hire of passenger motor vehicles; maintenance and operation and hire of aircraft; payment of damage claims pursuant to law (28 U. S. C. 2672); health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); rents in the District of Columbia; transportation of privately owned automobiles; entertainment (not to exceed $6,000); exchange of funds without regard to section 3651 of the Revised Statutes; and loss by exchange: $1,074,000,000, of which not to exceed $125,000 shall be available for expenditures of a confidential character (other than entertainment) under the direction of the Administrator or the Deputy Administrator, who shall make a certificate of the amount of each such expenditure which he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the amount therein specified: Provided, That not to exceed $4,400,000 in the aggregate shall be available from this appropriation and the appropriation under this head in the Foreign Aid Appropriation Act, 1949, for administrative expenses during the period April 3, 1949, through June 30, 1949.

For expenses necessary to enable the President to carry out the provisions of the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended by the act of April 19, 1949 (Public Law 47), for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the purposes of this appropriation (not to exceed $30,000); purchase (not to exceed two) and hire of passenger motor vehicles; maintenance and operation and hire of aircraft; payment of damage claims pursuant to law (28 U. S. C. 2672); health service program as authorized by law (5 U. S. C. 150); rents in the District of Columbia; transportation of privately owned automobiles; entertainment (not to exceed $25,000); exchange of funds without regard to section 3651 of the Revised Statutes; and loss by exchange; $3,568,470,000, of which not to exceed $500,000 shall be available for expenditures of a confidential character (other than entertainment) under the direction of the Administrator or the Deputy Administrator, who shall make a certificate of the amount of each such expenditure which he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the amount therein specified: Provided, That this appropriation shall be consolidated and merged with appropriations under this head for prior periods, and such consolidated appropriation may be used during the fiscal year 1950 within limitations herein specified: Provided further, That not to exceed $16,500,000 for such consolidated appropriation shall be available for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1950.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARY: On page 4, line 7, strike out the period and insert a colon, and the following: ": 'Provided further, That the entire amount may be apportioned for obligation or may be obligated and expended, if the President after recommendation by the Administrator deems such action necessary to carry out the purposes of said act during the period ending May 15, 1950'."

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is the exact language contained in the appropriation bill of last year, with the exception that the date has been changed from April 2, 1949, to May 15, 1950. As I explained in my opening statement, the purpose of this amendment is merely to provide that the expenditure of funds which have been appropriated for a 15-month period may be accelerated and the money spent in 13½ months if the President, after recommendation by the Administrator, deems such action necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

It is not our purpose to ask for any increase in the funds of ECA and if the funds last for 15 months, I am certain that the Administrator will be delighted to stretch them out. The purpose of the amendment is merely to see that the Administration and this Government is not embarrassed by an absolute lack of funds at the end of the term. In this connection I read a letter which was written by the President of the United States to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 26, 1949.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: You are, of course, aware of my deep interest in the success of the work of the Economic Cooperation Administration and the success of our program for government and relief in occupied areas. I am firmly convinced that the maintenance of these operations on an adequate basis is not only necessary for the fulfillment of our international obligations and the success of our foreign policy, but also that the operation of this program on an adequate basis at this time will, in the long run, prove to be the most economical course for the United States.

The importance of the Economic Cooperation Administration is so well understood that I am confident that we can expect the Congress to continue to provide adequate funds for its work. I would like to stress the importance of providing equally adequate funds for government and relief in occupied areas.

The funds which would be provided for this purpose in the appropriation bill reported by the committee would be adequate to continue the maintenance of the minimum ration per individual but, for all practical purposes, would not permit the continuance of the program for economic rehabilitation in Japan and in the Ryukyus. The reduced funds would also seriously affect the program for economic rehabilitation in Germany which is carried on in conjunction with the work of the Economic Cooperation Administration. Only by continuance of this program could we expect the people in those areas eventually to become self-supporting. I feel that provision of an amount adequate to carry on the program of Government aid and relief in occupied areas at the level requested will, in the long run, reduce the over-all cost of accomplishing our occupation responsibilities.

I earnestly hope, therefore, that this amount will be made available.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this legislation on final passage, but I will not support any amendments which seek, directly or indirectly, to restore any part of the approximately $800,000,000 which my amendment in the full Appropriations Committee, cut from the budget estimates. I think European recovery money and effort are necessary, but not in the full amounts presented by the budget.

If I may, I should like, briefly, to summarize part of what has been done. The other part I am not advised on. I refer to an agreement that was made late yesterday afternoon by the leaders on both sides of the aisle. Why the agreement was made, or what brought it about, I am not advised.

By way of summary, let me state that the full Committee on Appropriations reduced the budget estimates for ECA for fiscal 1950, which were roughly $4,200,000,000, by 15 percent. The budget estimate carried $1,074,000,000 to be used the last 3 months of fiscal 1949. My amendment in the full committee did not reduce that item. In other words, the 15-percent cut did not apply to it.

The item for military government and relief in occupied countries for the fiscal year 1950 carried a budget estimate for $1,000,000,000. The full committee reduced that item by 15 percent also.

The original subcommittee bill carried a limitation of about 5 percent on the use of the $1,000,000,000 funds for government and relief in the occupied countries, for the purpose of administration. By amendment, the full committee reduced the 5-percent limitation to 3½ percent. I understand according to the terms of the agreement heretofore referred to, that the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] will offer an amendment to restore the full 5 percent.

The amendment that the gentleman from Virginia has already offered, does not seek to restore the 15-percent cut for ECA funds, but gives to the Administrator the right to spend all the funds, not in 15 months, but 13½ months. I also understand that the Administrator agrees to try to make the $5,000,000,000 last through the entire period of 15 months. If the funds do not last the entire 15 months, he has a right to come back to Congress and seek to recover the 15 percent that the full committee has cut from his funds. I am afraid that the Administrator will be back on time, looking for the 15-percent cut. However, I hope he does not. And I believe that by the use of good business judgment, of which he has an abundance, and by the practice of a little economy that is so badly needed in our fiscal affairs now, he will be able to save the American taxpayers the $700,000,000 that was cut from this item.

I understand that another amendment will be offered dealing with the military government item on page 4 of the bill that will seek to restore $75,000,000 of the $150,000,000 that the full committee cut. And, in addition to that, will seek to restore the full 5-percent limitation placed upon the administrative use of these funds.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment, I know of no greater waste in our entire Government than in the administration of our military government in occupied countries. True, this type of government is about to be shifted to a civilian government, but the same employees in the occupied countries will do the administering. They draw good salaries. On top of the good pay, they get the foreign-service pay, which is 20 percent extra, and other perquisites.

We have a precedent to go by in the matter of administering foreign rehabilitation and relief in the way of limitation of administrative funds, and that is in the Philippine Islands. There we are spending $400,000,000 for this type of work. The Appropriations Committee has put a limitation of slightly less than 3 percent for administrative purposes, and the Philippine Commission is doing a good job. Surely 5 percent is too great a sum of money, particularly in view of the fact that hundreds of military people will be used in the administration of these funds, whose pay will not be deducted from these funds, but from the military appropriations.

So, Mr. Chairman, under the amendments that the subcommittee will offer, and which the House will pass—for I understand that the way has been well paved in the form of an agreement on both sides of the aisle—you will have a savings that you can put your fingers on of only $80,000,000, as a result of the 15 percent cut. Instead, it should have been approximately $800,000,000. But we are given the fond hope that an additional $700,000,000 will be saved. Let us hope that the $700,000,000 can be saved, because the taxpayers need a little help. I am sure that this cut will not affect the soundness and the efficiency of the entire ECA program. Bear in mind, please, that we will be called upon in 1951 and 1952 to make similar large appropriations for the same purpose.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. GARY to prevent the proposed disastrous cut in ECA funds.

In offering this amendment the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY] will undo some of the damage done to this great program. However, no one can deny that we narrowly averted a great tragedy to this useful program, that has done so much to help protect the vital sectors of Europe against the threat of Communist domination.

The deep cut in the funds would have impaired the hand of the State Department in the present Foreign Ministers Conference, and worse than that, would have shaken the faith of all those Europeans who have begun to see daylight in recovery as free men under the Marshall plan.

We are faced with a peculiar psychology in this debate on the bill. Many of those who claimed that the program last year was destined to fail, now oppose it on the basis that it has succeeded so well that adequate funds are no longer needed.

While it is true that under the able management of Mr. Paul Hoffman, the director, and his staff, that remarkable progress has been made—while it is true that the program is ahead of schedule and showing remarkable results—any cut now in the funds required would be fatal to the program.

The time to make it succeed is in this second year—the crucial year for Europe and its recovery. Europe now has hope and confidence in itself and in its ability to recover.

They have entered the program and cooperated wholeheartedly to make it work and now see results. To pull the rug out from under the program now by drastic cuts, would lose the valuable momentum that has been achieved. It would turn the program from a recovery program back into a relief program—and stretch out by several years the length of time required to achieve the goal of recovery.

Thus, it could prove false economy in the extreme. By trying to save three hundred or four hundred millions now might cost us billions or more later on as the program failed to meet its goal within the 4-year period.

From the end of the war until now, the United States has made available to western Europe more than $11,900,000,000. Most of that, before the ECA was relief, a continuing grant without hope of the recipients becoming self-sustaining. At long last we are on the track toward recovery of Europe—and not just relief. But to make any such slash in funds as was proposed by the full committee would certainly insure that recovery would be long delayed and our ultimate expense greatly increased.

This entire program, I feel, must be measured against the cost of the war which exceeded some $350,000,000,000. Likewise it must be measured against the continuing cost of our military appropriations which exceeds sixteen billions each year. If this plan succeeds, there is strong hope that we may get out from under this terrific armament cost at an earlier time, for it is strictly a movement in the direction of world peace and world recovery.

No one who has studied the hearings can doubt the great care, the careful screening, that goes into all ECA allocations. The objections in debate raised against the ECA missions is entirely unfounded. For it is the complete understanding of each country's economy, their import and export positions, their standard of living and other vital detail, that makes it possible to render the proper amount of recovery aid without the dangers of waste or extravagance.

This action also has a most beneficial effect on the recipient countries themselves, in showing them in clear and concise fashion their economic problems and what they can do to increase their production, to decrease their dollar demands, and to increase their exports to other countries.

Most Americans overlook the tremendous results that this vital aid brings. The aid is about 3 percent of their production, yet without this 3 percent, much of their own 97 percent of the production would be lost. It is our raw materials that makes possible the production that brings recovery. Thus, for a 3-cent investment, we greatly magnify it to make possible them producing 97 cents for themselves. Measure the effect of drastic cuts upon the program and see how much of this ratio of 33 to 1 you will cut out of their chance for recovery.

Contrary to charges raised here in the debate that Europe uses this aid to raise their living standards, figures show that most of the gains in production are plowed back into productive resources. About thirty billions this year went into new capital formation—for the tools to secure greater and better production later on.

The program will taper off to end at the expiration of 4 years. This year there will be a decline of 17 percent. Next year further decreases can be safely made under the program. But it must be an orderly decrease and not one which will wreck the good already achieved. To wreck it now with meat-ax methods without regard to the carefully screened needs would be to destroy the phenomenal success that has already been achieved.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

TOO MUCH IS ENOUGH

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, Victor Reuther, brother of Walter P. Reuther, president of United Auto Workers, CIO, was shot Tuesday night, May 24, through a window of his home under almost similar circumstances as the attack made upon his brother some time ago.

Victor Reuther in life is associated with the educational department of the United Auto Workers. This attempt upon the lives of these brothers, devoted to the great labor cause of the country, is so un-American and so repulsive to our ideals and customs that it cries strongly for vengeance.

My purpose in coming into the well of the House is to bring forcibly to the attention of the Congress the necessity for the use of the facilities of the FBI in this case; that no stone may be unturned in the discovery of those who lend themselves to the perpetration of these dastardly acts so repulsive to the American way of life. The whole country sympathizes with the Reuther family, and let us hope that the great right arm of Uncle Sam, the FBI, will uncover and expose the culprits as an example that such deeds shall not go unpunished. Too much is enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TACKETT: On page 3, line 16, after the first semicolon, strike out the words "entertainment (not to exceed $25,000)."

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Chairman, no doubt it has been necessary, for our own protection, to assist in the rebuilding of war-torn foreign friendly democracies. While we have carried the burden of financing the last two World Wars and while many of our boys lost their lives in these great conflicts, it was upon the soils of these foreign countries that the battles were fought and where the women, children and aged were slaughtered—friendly democracies paying the necessary penalties to keep the actual conflict confined to those areas and save much suffering from our families.

No doubt most of us realize that during World War II while this country was participating on the side of Russia that we could be in no better position than perhaps on the side of the lesser of two evils, because all of us well knew that both Germany and Russia were seeking the same goal. Russia has since behaved as per our suspicions. Now, with Russia emerging from World War II the strongest government in Europe, with a continued desire to impose her despicable communism upon all the world, leaves us in a position whereby we must prepare her neighboring democracies with power to forestall destruction and thereby preclude conflict upon our own soil. I could stand for myself to be denied the necessities of life, but I am quite sure that I would commit wrongs to prevent my wife and children from being without the necessities. These weak foreign democracies want to remain a free people, but when their wives and children are starving, would join communism or any other type of ism in the hope of finding food and clothing.

For these reasons, and these alone, I can concur in the principles of the Marshall plan only to an amount of assistance absolutely necessary to bring about the desired results. I sanction the policies of the European recovery program only to that extent necessary for our own protection, taking foreign-trade possibilities into consideration.

As you well know, I was not a Member of Congress when the European spending program was launched and cannot be held responsible for such action; however, I do in no wise criticize the policies, but contend that the entire program can stand scrutiny, closer supervision, and narrowed coverage to insure the maximum benefit to those entitled, and preclude same from reaching unfriendly powers. I am at a loss to know why we should in such a flagrant manner send funds to Italy and other such subversive nations where we could, by the exercise of ordinary precaution, anticipate the Communists and those unfriendly to our form of government are waiting at the depot to receive our assistance with which to further their cause. We should not spend 1 penny in the European recovery program that has a chance of drifting into the hands of our enemy.

Regardless of the importance of the European recovery program, or any other such assistance to foreign people, we should first take care of our own people even should we not have left 1 penny for worthy foreign aid. No person in the United States should be denied the comforts of every necessity whether disabled physically, mentally, or by age.

During my campaign when several of my opponents were shouting criticism of the entire European recovery program, in every one of my more than 200 speeches I uttered in substance the very statements I am making today on the floor of this House.

You may be assured that it has never been my intention to come here and give the funds of our taxpayers to socialiste England. Individual initiative, free enterprise, and open competition have been destroyed in England to the extent that were it not for the United States of America, the great spending program being conducted in that country would end and a lot of the people would face starvation. I cannot believe that we are to deny assistance to our own needy people in favor of helping a socialistic state advocating the very principles of communism.

If you gentlemen will go out into some of the rural communities within this country, you will find plenty of people on this American soil who do not have necessary food, clothing, and shelter; yet, the majority of this House is freely spending billions of dollars in the socialistic country of England and at the same time pulling every known political maneuver to deny worthy assistance to the underprivileged, crippled, and aged in our midst.
